The Sovkino (Soviet Kino), the united distributing trust of the seven producing companies now making pictures, news, educational, spectacular and dramatic, is worth watching.

Great Interest in Movies.

The interest in kino in Russia today—like all the Russian interests—is very great. Nobody is content to take a quiet, dilletante interests. The Russian studios are full of workers, who talk dreams of expansion and production that make Hollywood seem unambitious.

"Well, for one thing," said a reporter on one of the many Russian kino magazines, "tho we may not be able to sell our Russian-made pictures for a while, certainly we are the coming market for pictures. Before the revolution we had only five or six hundred cinema theaters in all Russia. Now we are the nation with the audience. Millions of eyes! Since the revolution we have built upwards of 1,000 small cinemas in the workmen's and peasants' clubs, in army headquarters, and in schools. We will continue the practice that was part of our propaganda in the early days of the revolution, of having motion pictures in barracks that educate the peasants in the most remote railway points about the new way of life."

Russia's Natural Advantages.

When asked if Russia had any natural advantages for picture making that would offset the lack of capital, he replied: "Certainly, for our theater has the most magnificent tradition in the world of repertory and character acting. We are not bound to the American wheel, the pretty girl. We have the material for vast spectacles. Our producing companies are not overburdened with the crushed interests of star salaries. The play and the whole company can be the thing."

The only Russian films so far shown in the United States are Pollikoff's portions of reels made of Lenin's funeral and of Third International congresses sold to American news reels, and a few badly made propaganda reels sold to labor organizations. Pictures of the Moscow-Tokio flight are shortly to be released by Pathe. Mr. Leon Zamkavoy, who has been in New York for some time with the Amkino corporation, making a report on American films for Russian purchase, has returned to Moscow. He will be one of the chief participants in the deception which the Russian cinema industry plans to extend Douglas Fairbank and Mary Pickford, who are being shown in the biggest motion photo-drome on the Tverskaia in "The Thief of Bagdad."

Charlie Chaplin, who was adored as a friend of the Soviets during the early days of the revolution, has died down, and is not much in demand. His newer films have not been shown. The Chaplin interests demanded too large a price and the loving spirit of "Charlie of the masses" has given way to an impression that the hero of other days is a merchant no more generous than the rest of the outside world.

Work on Many Films.

The Soviet producing companies are working on many films, dramatic and scenic. Two companies are in the far north taking pictures of life along the White Sea, with tundra, reindeer, boatlanders, etc., and one is in Siberia with a polar exploration expedition.

Of the many films made in celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the 1905 revolution there are several showing the historical events which took place in St. Petersburg, Moscow and other centers. It is shown to the music of new compositions, "The Red Engine Driver," "The Siren of Revolution," "The Last Miracle" the Russian version of "The Miracle."

In Yalta one company from the Ukrain are also working is making a film "The War of Giants." Tolstoi's play "The Plot of an Empress," which has had a sort of Alice's Irish Rose success all over the Soviet Union, is still running and is being handed over to the cinema for filming. It deals with Rasputin and the last czarina. Other titles are "The Bubbling East," "The Land of Blue Foxes," "The Struggle for the North," "Marek Zauer," "The Ice Buttress," "The Vagabond Sportsman," "The Wind," "The Black Heart," "The Day of Death." Scenarios have been made and are in process of production from the works of Gogol, Tolstoi, Pushkin and the Georgian novelists of the nineteenth century and from Russian history.

Cinemas and Children.

The various cinema journals constantly present articles on the subject of cinema stories for children, and one Moscow producing company has already begun a series of old Russian folk stories for the kino, with "The Tale of the Ice King," which has been exported to England with some success, because of the beautiful photography and the simple and romantic story.

What Makes a Girl Beautiful?

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—(FP)—Natalia Sarache, Russian movie actress who has been employed by the Soviet film concerns, said upon her arrival on New York on her way to picture making for American producers in Hollywood: "I believe that the Russian girls are the most beautiful in the world. It is a revolution and not a beauty shop which makes for real beauty and gives character to a girl's face."

U. S. Gobs Scab on Chinese

SHANGHAI (FP)—The depths to which the imperialists stoop to strangle the rising labor movement of China is illustrated by the confession of the editor of The Orient, that at his suggestion during the general strike last year, navy printers from the Huron, Black Hawk and Canopus (American warships in Asiatic waters) were brought to Shanghai. "Thru the efforts of this loyal band of foreigners the daily papers were published on schedule time," he concludes.

The Chinese printers had gone out in sympathy with the general strike proclaimed as a protest against the massacre of students on May 30, 1925. American sailors did the dirty work of breaking the printers' strike, not only on the local papers in which American capital was interested, but on those published by their British competitors as well.

Use your brains and your pen to aid the workers in the class struggle.

STRIKE STRATEGY

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

ARTICLE XIX

PARTIAL SETTLEMENTS

An important question in connection with strike settlements is whether or not partial settlements shall be made; that is, whether it is a good policy in strikes to make settlements with those employers who are willing to "sign up." For many years the left wing gave a categorical "no" answer to this question. It advocated the policy that all employers must settle at once or none can be signed up. It declared that partial settlements are organized scabbery.

In arriving at these conclusions the left wing was moved principally by (1) the disastrous effects of the policy of craft treachery of the reactionary labor leaders, (2) the fact that the left wing based its policies chiefly on the big trustified industries where partial settlements are manifestly impossible.

But the general conclusion that there shall be no partial settlements under any circumstances is wrong. It is ultra-leftist. In certain situations the workers find it advantageous to make such partial settlements. The problem is to find out when and under what circumstances they may.

JUDGING PARTIAL SETTLEMENTS

When partial settlements serve the general strategical aim of splitting the ranks of the employers and enable the workers to play off one section of them against the others they are tactically advisable. Then it is a case of making one group of capitalists scab on the rest. But when such settlements weaken or divide the workers' ranks, or compromise the political purposes of a great strike they must be rigidly avoided.

Industries still in a highly competitive state, such as clothing, building, printing, etc., are the ones in which the method of the partial settlement is applicable. Often in such industries, by signing up individual employers, independent associations, or split-offs from the main employers' organization, the balance are so fearful of losing their present trade and permanent markets that they abandon their resistance.

Partial settlements at critical moments in competitive industries also sometimes stampede the main bodies of employers and break their associations. And by the same token, often the workers involved, seeing the employers' ranks thus crumbling and receiving financial aid from the workers who have settled, are encouraged to fight the harder.

But even in the competitive industries, because of the dangers which must be carefully guarded against. There are dangers of scab work being done in the settled shops in spite of all precautions; of lockouts of settled shops when the main association remains undefeated; of so suppressure is taken off the employers generally; of weakening the picket committees by making it difficult to tell which are really settled employers and which not; of robbing the strike of its mass character and thus its throbbing solidarity spirit; of creating an antagonism of interest between those workers who have gone back to work and those who remain on strike.

But even in the competitive industries, because of the generally growing strength of the employers, the value of the partial settlement is a diminishing quantity. More and more it is becoming necessary to defeat the employers en bloc, and to do this must ever be the left wing's chief aim.

IN TRUSTIFIED INDUSTRIES

In industries which are thoroly trustified or in which a few large combinations of capital dominate, such as steel, packing, rubber, textile, automobile, etc., the value of the partial settlement has vanished. It is virtually out of the question to play off one set of employers against the others. They are too firmly united together, financially and industrially, for this. The workers must win against them as a whole, either upon a local or national scale, mostly the latter.

An impermissible form of partial settlement is that often practiced in the coal industry, where the reactionaries sign up some of the mines of certain companies and let the rest remain nonunion. This puts a premium upon nonunionism and gives the employers in question a terrible weapon to use against the organization. All they have to do in the slack seasons or other periods of active offensive transfer production from their union to nonunion plants. This they have done many times.

A CONFESSION OF WEAKNESS

Likewise, in great strikes of workers in basic and key industries, such as the railroads, coal mining, etc., partial settlements are usually unwise and often disastrous. They destroy the political effect of such strikes. They are a confession of weakness, of failure to achieve the original aim of the strike, which was to defeat the government, or, of the whole body of employers.

Had Farrington succeeded in his previously mentioned plan of signing up a state agreement for Illinois in the midst of the 1922 strike it would have ruined that great struggle, not merely because of the flood of Illinois coal thrown on the market, but especially because the settlement would have signalized the failure of the union to get control of the whole central competitive district. The employers very much favored Farrington's treacherous manoeuver. As a rule, in strikes of a broad and marked political character partial settlements are only justifiable in case of bad defeats, when it is a case of merely trying to save the pieces.

A form of partial settlement that the employers often favor is that along craft lines. Such settlements enable them to pit the skilled workers against each other and against the unskilled. Right wing leaders habitually make partial settlements of this character. The left wing must resolutely oppose them. They are fatal to the growth and progress of the labor movement.

Workers (Communist) Party

Our New Business Manager Takes Charge of The DAILY WORKER

COMRADE BERT MILLER, recently district organizer of the Workers (Communist) Party in the Boston district, has been appointed business manager of the Daily Workar Publishing Co., to succeed Comrade Moritz J. Loeb, who resigned, by the Central Committee of the party.

Comrade Miller, in addition to his experience as district organizer, was trade union organizer in the New York district and the New York secretary of the Labor Defense Council. His experience has been in the work of organizing campaigns and building up organization support, which will now be put into the work of strengthening The DAILY WORKER.

All the units of the party and supporters of The DAILY WORKER are requested to give Comrade Miller their earnest support in building up the organization of The DAILY WORKER so that the daily organ of the party will be placed in an impregnable position and thus the financial difficulties against which The DAILY WORKER has had to struggle will be overcome.

Resolution on Anti-Imperialist Work

Adopted at the Plenum of the Central Executive Committee Held November 10-12 Incl.

THE tasks of our party at the present time, as set forth in the resolution of the political committee, are those presented by the conditions of imperialism. American imperialism is able to win over large sections of the American workers by sharing with them a small part of super-profits and continues to extend its hegemony in foreign fields. However, the steady expansion of American capitalism upon an imperialist basis is accompanied by the enormous extension of the vulnerable surface which it presents to attack. Recent months have furnished striking evidence of the widespread movement for Latin-American unity against Wall Street. We cite particularly the present attitude of the Calles government in Mexico its general Latin-Americanism, its policy in Central America, its tendency toward cooperation with the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, and the decision of President Calles to send a personal representative to the Brussels world conference against imperialism.

Significant also are the developments of the Chinese national revolutionary movement, with its undoubted revolutionizing influence upon the Philippine independence movement, and the growth of the tendency towards an inter-capitalist front, with signs of a European dictator bloc coming into being against the United States.

The comintern has repeatedly indicated that a basic task of any party situated in an imperialist country is to stimulate and give aid to the national and national revolutionary movements in the colonial and semi-colonial countries under the heel of imperialism. This, together with the work among the American masses, forms the basis of our party work. While our party has made considerable progress in anti-imperialist work, it is still far from a proper realization of the importance of this work. A far greater proportion of the party's resources must be utilized in anti-imperialist activities. District executive committees must have standing sub-committees on anti-imperialist activity, and these must be directed by capable comrades. The party machinery on a district as well as a national scale must be drawn into this work.

THE anti-imperialist work has been greatly hampered by lack of sufficient comrades. The party must take measures to create and train a corps of comrades organized directly in anti-imperialist work.

In spite of many handicaps, we have done much to build the All-American Anti-Imperialist League into an organization engaged in actual struggle against imperialism. We have carried on systematic work inside of the Pan-American Federation of Labor and have achieved some valuable results there. We have participated in work against United States imperialism in a number of Latin-American countries, notably Mexico, Porto Rico, Cuba, Panama and Peru. We have also established some contact with the Philippine independence movement, although we have yet to establish our own nucleus there.

The main task for the period immediately ahead is the building of a strong section of the AAAAIL in the United States itself. This will be accomplished thru the affiliation of groups organized around specific issues, such as hands-off-Mexico committees, etc. The Workers (Communist) Party must remain the central factor in the United States section of the AAAIL, grouping around itself as many as possible other working-class organizations.

NO effort must be spared to make successful the conference for Filipino independence which is to meet at Washington, D. C., in accordance with the call sent out by the AAAIL in collaboration with other groups. With the cause of Filipino independence face to face with a serious crisis, and the Communists appearing for the first time as the leaders of the whole movement in the United States for unqualified independence of the Philippines, the conference presents a valuable opportunity which, if followed up, will lead to direct results for us in the Philippine Islands.

The importance for our party of contact with the world-wide movement against imperialism cannot be overestimated. Our party must make every effort to insure the sending of an appreciable delegation from the United States to the World Congress Against Imperialism which is to meet in Brussels in January of 1927.

RESOLUTION ON THE RUSSIAN COMMUNIST PARTY

THE full meeting of the central committee of the Workers (Communist) Party notes with great satisfaction the organizational liquidation of the opposition in the C. P. S. U. by the last full meeting in the central committee and central control committee and by the 15th conference of that party.

The central committee of the Workers (Communist) Party endorses the resolutions of its political committee passed unanimously by that committee in July and again in October.

WITH the political committee, the central committee is of the opinion that on account of the deviations of Comrade Zinoviev from the path of Leninism, with his acceptance of Trotskyism and his misuse of his official position as president of the E. C. C. I. for factional purposes, his further leadership of the E. C. C. I. had become impossible.

It also holds that our party can and must help in the liquidation of the anti-Leninist theories of the opposition which exist not only in the C. P. S. U. but in the whole international and therefore endorses the steps decided upon by the Political Committee for the ideological mobilization of our party for the Leninist line of the Comintern and the C. P. S. U.

TELL SAD LOT OF NON-UNION HOSE WORKERS IN PA.

Ten-Hour Day and Low Wages

By ALFRED HOFFMAN,
Federated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18.—(FP)—Ten hours and 10½ a day with day and night work, wages ranging from $25 to $50 lower than in union mills, the knitters employed at the Dexdale Hosiery Co. in Lansdale, Pa., have the ideal non-union conditions existant in the fashioned hosiery industry. The knitters, most of them from the farms, are not properly trained and show their lack of training in the damage done to the delicate and complicated machines.

Pay For Needles.

The firm follows out a policy of giving individual piece rates. In interviewing 20 men, each was found to have a different rate on the same style of work. The workers are also required to pay for the upkeep of machines, in other words for the needles used in the machines. This practice can be compared to a truck driver paying for tires on the truck he drives for someone else.

Double machines are operated by the men, turning out work that should pay them about 150% more than they are receiving. The average wages in the mill for doing twice the work per man done in union mills, vary from $10 to $40 lower than union wages on single jobs. On some styles the difference is even greater.

Low Wages.

This condition doesn't mean that the firm gets all the advantage, for it is evident that the material wasted and depreciation of machinery offsets low wages. Good workers leave the firm because of the low pay, despite the attempt of the company to give a higher wage guarantee to the better men.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

WAR MONGERS AND PEACE MAKERS HOLD CONFABS IN PITTSBURGH

By GEORGE PAPCUN.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The industrial conference of the Pittsburgh ordnance district was held at the Garve building, 302 Pann avenue, of representative of 90 industries located in the Pittsburgh district. The main theme of the discussion was how to change from peace-time to war-time status and turn to the manufacture of war materials within the shortest period of time. Also how new and better ways of making ammunition and other war materials can be developed.

The main speaker was Brig. Gen C. L. H. Ruggles of Washington, assistant chief of the United States ordnance department, who pointed out the government's objective in the industrial preparedness movement, and he paid particular attention to what would be expected from the Pittsburgh district industries in the event of a declaration of war. The discussion was participated in by some of the most vicious open shoppers and flunkers of organized labor in Pennsylvania, such as Homer Williams, president of the Union Steel Company; Taylor Allderdice, vice-president of the National Tube Company; Lieut. Col. G. T. McNiff, of the National Tube Co.; Major H. Kildin Knable, of the Carnegie Steel Co.

The conference was in charge of Ralph M. Drayo, chief of the Pittsburgh procurement district, who is in charge of the Pittsburgh district, which is one of the 14 permanent divisions mapped out by the government in its program of industrial preparedness, which the capitalist government would want us to think is a prepared-ness for a peace, when, in fact, it is a mobilization of industry for the slaughter of the youth.

At the same time we have the International Goodwill Congress under the direction of the World Alliance for International Friendship meeting in Pittsburgh, and speeches are being made galore on how we can prevent war by these wonderful "saviors" and representatives of god. At the same time that they have preachers and rabbis speaking and declaring against war and deploring the war, we find that the conference meeting in the Drayo is organizing and discussing new ways of making war. The speeches are lengthy, with all kinds of excuses, such as racial, nationality, etc., given why war is carried on. The only way to which they expect to abolish war is thru forgetting that 1,926 years have passed, and that, especially in the last few years, which are supposed to be the peak of christianity, we have had the worse slaughters that the human race ever saw.

What must happen if the dream of the priests, rabbis and preachers would come true. That is what is not likely to happen—that everybody should become a christian. Then we would expect the complete wiping out of the human race by the wars which would take place.

The working class is still being filled with the dope of the capitalists who are ready for war, and also by the parishes. But the youth must remember that in the last war each and every one of the priests, preachers and rabbis lined up on the side of the capitalists and was helping the capitalists in fooling the youth to go to slaughter under the pretense of democracy and freedom.

The working class must see that it will throw off this poison which is spread by the priests, preachers and rabbis and the rest of the capitalist mongers, and that if we must have a war it must be a war against the capitalist class.

COMMUNIST VOTES IN HIGH SCHOOL MOCK ELECTION CAUSE UPROAR

WHEN nearly 50 students, most of whom are Finnish, at the Waukegan County High School wrote in the name of the Workers (Communist) Party candidate for U. S. senator, J. Louis Engdahl, in the mock election which was held by the students on November 2, it so roused the wrath of the teachers, and particularly the principal, that a violent campaign of violent abuse was started against those students while many of them were forced to stand in front of their classmates and recant their pledge of allegiance to the American flag.

Mr. John W. Thalman, principal of the high school, is well known in local circles for his reactionary views. He is a hide-bound catholic, who carries with him not only the distorted concepts of that organization into the school, but who likewise has learned how to apply methods of terrorism to the students and teachers who try to think for themselves.

Thanks to the subtle brain of this tool of reaction, the regular sample ballots (which contained the names of the Communist candidates) were used, altho this is what is usually done. Instead, there had been prepared special mimeographed ballots which contained only the lists of the republican, democratic, and independent parties.

This ruse failed completely. Many of the students come from parents who have long records of active service in the revolutionary movement. In addition to this, the Young Workers' League has been carrying on active work for a long time and has won a number of new supporters. All of these young students wrote in the names of the Communist candidates. When the results became known the principal, in a rabid speech made to the assembly of students, declared, among other things, that "dirty suckers can go back to Russia, where they came from." His vile and abusive language certainly did not help to impress the students with the constitutional demagogy which they are otherwise taught about in their classrooms. The teachers were also instructed to begin an intensive campaign of "Americanization" among their pupils to counteract the pernicious ideas of Communism. Several students were forced to salute the flag and repeat their oath of allegiance to it. This action has not helped to turn the students away from their ideas, but seems to have made them more determined than ever before to support and fight for them.

By K. A. Wittfogel

A study of the world-famous satirist that goes right to the heart. Kletzky does not suggest that the college student of today is ready to march on the Chicago stockyards with fountain pens clattering in the van and inkpots prepared to smear the landscape. It does not fit the same kind of the vacuum that the liberal business man. It does not want to. It appeals to the brain. Facts and conclusions are given. Also enough reasoning to make the whole thing palatable without going in the direction of making confusion worse confounded.

DESCRIBES FORD SPEED-UP PLAN AS IT OPERATES

Work Faster and Get Less Pay

By a Worker Correspondent.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 18.—Henry Ford, in an interview, considers five days a week as a cold business proposition. Studied in cold cash, it works out splendidly for frugal Henry.

In the final assembly of the Kearney plant, where a moving conveyor whips the men into increasing action, efficient production was made this week in three days and seven and one-half hours' work. They were sent home Friday at 4 o'clock, which explains the missing half hour. At the present scale of wages, which includes the much-advertised raises of 2½ to 5 cents an hour, the men will draw from $25 to $27 pay. Before going home Friday, Nov. 12, they were told not to report for work until the following Tuesday morning.

Speeded Up.

Recently Superintendent Gartha went around the plant looking for more action. As he passed thru the final assembly he demanded that the men working alongside the line should work directly on the moving conveyor, thereby adding to operations already loaded to capacity, in this way men are constantly tested by having their operations added to or doubled.

Statistics and records are also brought into play, the operations, number of men employed and costs being matched with other plants.

Worker's Weeded Out.

A definite weeding-out process is under way. One man, John Merris, was removed by the superintendent to the salvage department after 10 years of faithful service as a small boss. He had under his control the wiring of all outgoing cars, but was unfortunate to get beyond the years favored by Ford's speed and efficiency and was replaced by a younger men of 25.

John Morris is now working in the open Kearney meadows with about 40 other men. There is no shelter while salvaging old wood from rain or snow and they are open to stiff breezes from the Passaic River. In this way old employes are eliminated thru additional pressure and disagreeable jobs.

ORGANIZATION IS NEED AMONG EXPLOITED DRUG APPRENTICES

By WILLIAM ALBERTSON
(Worker Correspondent)

PITTSBURG, Nov. 18. — Prehably the most exploited young worker in Pittsburgh is the "soda-jerker" or pharmacist's apprentice. Before obtaining the job, the worker must first get an apprentice's license from the state which entitles him to work in the drug store, and which costs him two dollars. We must even pay for allowing ourselves to be exploited.

Does Everything.

He is then given the work of shining the fountain, sweeping and mopping the store, washing the windows, etc. When this work is finished, he makes the syrups; and, if the store happens to sell sandwiches, he makes them also. If the store does not have a fricidaire fountain, the ice naturally makes a very wet floor which is a great aid to colds and rheumetism. If he has any time left over—the boss usually sees that he has—he must work in the stock room which means lifting heavy loads and marking prices. While he is performing all this work, he is naturally expected to wait on trade.

According to the bosses, all this work will eventually make a full fledged pharmacist of the apprentice

Long Heure.

The average working day is from eight o'clock in the morning until twelve at night. This day is divided into three shifts: from 8 to 12, 12 to 6, and 6 to 12. The worker is supposed to work two shifts per day. One day he works from eight to six, the next day, from 12 to 12. One Sunday he works from 8 to 12; the following Sunday, from 12 to 12. This averages seventy-four heurs per week! And what do you think the wages are—from $15 to $25 per week! In the chain stores like Mays and McCullocks, the wages are about 25 per cent better, but the work and discipline is about 25 per cent worse.

Student Compete.

During the summer months, the regular workers are sometimes dropped in favor of the students who are having no school, and who will work for less money. During the school term, some students work after school from six to ten almost every night. Their wages average about $1.35 an evening.

A remedy is needed for this pitiful condition. There are hundreds of such "soda-jerkers" in Pittsburgh, but the spirit of organization, which is the only remedy, is lacking.

BE AT CLASS IN WORKERS' JOURNALISM TONIGHT AT 6:30 P. M., DAILY OFFICE

The Chicago class in worker correspondence meets tonight at 6:30 o'clock in the editorial offices of The DAILY WORKER, 1113 West Washington Blvd. The class hour has been changed to 6:30 from 8 o'clock to accommodate workers who have other meetings on the same night.

Once more all workers in Chicago who went to receive training in worker journalism to aneble them to prepare articles for the press are urged to attend the class tonight. Every worker who wants to learn to write, or whose position in an organization demands that he write stories and news articles should become a member of the class at once.

The class is held every Friday night. Members are urged to be on time tonight in order that no time will be lost because of the new class hour. Sample stories should be brought to the class as a basis of criticism.

Paper Box Strikers Set Up Restaurant

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—At a mass meeting of the Paper Box Makers' Union held Nov. 9 Brother Markovitch pointed out the tricks which the bosses are using to break the strike.

After this a fellow striker, Deuch spoke. He said in spite of the fact that the bosses are using the police and every possible method to break the strike and the union, "we are going to stick together, and even tho my wife and children haven't enough to eat I am going to fight and stick to the end."

Comrade Powers spoke next, and said that he had heard that the bosses were asking for an injunction against picketing. He pointed out that this was a healthy sign and means that our picketing is really hurting.

Caiola, manager of the union, said that the workers were starving while they were working, that families of five were living in $11 rooms, and that the bosses were living on Riverside Drive. He asked the workers if they were ready to fight.

The workers rose and answered that they would fight till the end, and they all left the hall and went to the

MEXICANS IN U. S. ARE NOW AWAKE TO ORGANIZATION

Union Already Formed In San Diego

By a Worker Correspondent.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Nov. 18.—The organization of the Mexican worker has been thought impossible by many organizers, for two reasons. First, because of the race prejudice that barred the Mexican from the A. F. of L. unions, and, second, that the majority of the Mexican workers were ignorant of the fact that they are being organized for their own good and against their enemies.

New Awakening.

Now that the workers in Mexico are being organized, they are awakening to the fact in the United States that they need organization.

The Confederacion Regional Obrera Mexicana (CROM) is already taking steps in combination with the American Federation of Labor toward the organization of the vast masses of unorganized Mexican workers.

But the workers want mass organization, instead of being hog-tied into trade unions. They want their own organization. They already have their own organization here, La Union de Trabajadores Mexicanos (Mexican Workers' Union), but it is only a local of the Hod Carriers' and Laborers' Union. Therefore, they can only bring in laborers while there are Mexicans in every kind of work here. And that is the reason they want an organization where they can take in any Mexican worker, regardless of class of craft.

Help Passaic.

To prove their willingness and their spirit of solidarity, we have only to take into account what they are doing.

A motion was passed at the last meeting of this union to send $5 to the Passaic strikers' relief fund. They are just starting to organize now and hope to have a good organization soon.

THIRD PRIZE WINNER.

COMPANY TRIES TO DENY WORKER COMPENSATION

Testifies Falsely Before Commission

By JOE PLOTKIN.
(Worker Correspondent)

HAMMOND, Ind., Nov. 18.—Seven months ago W. C. Crawford while working as a pipefitter helper, was injured in an accident. Because of a weak cable, a crane pulley block weighing over 300 pounds fell on the man's shoulder and injured him permanently.

The case was tried before the industriel board of Heimmond.

Couldn't Work.

Crawford said he is 45 years of age and is a car builder. At the time of the accident he was hit by the pulley block on the left shoulder and on the right foot. He lost much sleep because of pain. Altho he still suffered, he went back to work, but had to quit in a few days because he could not stand the pain. Crawford went to work many times after that. He had many different kinds of work. But he always had to quit after a few days because of the pain in the shoulder. Crawford received only $200 since the accident. He has a wife and four children to support.

Dr. Heck showed the commission that Crawford could not move the arm effectively. Crawford closed with pain during the demonstration.

Company Doctor Lies.

The company doctor as a witness was like a man lost at sea. At first he said that in order for Crawford to get his arm in good shape he should go back to work. After some hot questioning by Mr Dorsey, Crawford's attorney, the doctor admitted that the arm was in a very bad condition and disabled and should be treated by a doctor. The company doctor tried to keep himself in the good graces of his bosses which payed him by testifying that Crawford is able to work.

The decision on the case will be rendered at the next meeting of the industriel commission of Indiana.

Form Shoe Workers' Co-operative to Aid Industry in Russia

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18. A shoe workers' co-operative to manufacture ladies' and men's welt shoes in Soviet Russia on the American system has been organized here under the supervision of the Technical Aid to the Soviet Union. A group of members of the co-operative met on Nov. 6, and decided to organize a group of 75 shoe workers.

All shoe workers who are interested should apply to the secretary of the Technical Aid, 799 Broadway, Room 402, New York City, or to the secretary of the co-operative, Harry Capell, 236 McDougal street, Brooklyn.

The next meeting of the co-operative will be held on Saturday, Nov. 20, at 2 o'clock at the offices of the Technical Aid.

WORKER DIES BECAUSE N. Y. CENTRAL FAILS TO PROVIDE ILLUMINATION

By FREDDA GARDNER,
(Worker Correspondent)

EAST SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 18.—Inadequate light of the New York Central OeWitt yards caused the death of another humprider, Roy A. Brownell, 22, of East Syracuse, was fatelly injured Friday Comstock when on the night shift last saw Brownell swinging on the rear end of the boxcar which he was to ascend before applying brakes as the car reached the proper place in the yards.

When the lad failed to return his fellow-workers started a search down the slope.

Near the bottom of the incline they found Brownell lying unconscious, a leg and arm badly severed.

Altho the brakeman's unconscious state made it impossible to learn full details of the accident, fellow-workers ascribe the cause directly to lack of sufficient illumination.

Over one of the largest railroads yards in the country, nine miles long and fully a half mile wide, practically all of the lighting apparatus consists of two flood lights.

A short time ago the demand of the brotherhood for increased illumination resulted in inspection by safety men.

Meanwhile the greed of the N. Y. C. R. R. and the lack of direct action by the brotherhood will make possible a continued toll of the lives of

4 MINERS LOSE LIVES IN SCAB MINE EXPLOSION

W. Va. Disaster Was Avoidable, Charge

By ROMA.
(Worker Correspondent)

MOUNDSVILLE, W. Va., Nov. 18.—Once again labor has paid a toll of death to the grim monster of capitalism, when four miners were killed and two injured; and another one killed or seriously injured in a non-union mine in this city.

Early on the morning November 15 an explosion occurred at the First Street mine, owned by the Ohendale Gas Coal Company. Twenty miners were in the mine at the moment of the blast, working night shift. Thirteen of these, working in a locality a short distance from the place where the blast occurred were led to safety by the night foreman, while seven were in the midst of the explosion.

Rescue workers recovered six of the miners, three dead, two seriously injured, and one in a serious condition, who died shortly after he was rushed to the hospital. One of the miners cannot be located.

Those dead are:

Welter Fagle, 19, single, motorman

Reuben Kirkhert, 23, single, brakeman.

Mike Kavesack, 44, married, loader

Joseph E. Stifel, 50, married, loader.

Disaster Avoidable.

This disaster was eveidable, as any miner will state. All the mines in this section are non-union, with all the hazards of non-existing conditions. Each mine is full of gas ready to blow up at the least ignition. Miners complain that the air circulation in the mines is bad, the pumps are poor, and the air is not circulated even thruout the mine to prevent dangerous pockets of gas from forming or accumulating.

Supposedly safety lamps were installed on the pay of the miners. The coal barons, however, have not followed their part of the bargain.

In all probability, and as all miners firmly believe, this explosion was caused by the sparks of the motor coming in contact with a dangerous body of gas. Many of the miners stated that the motors are unsafe, and that the sparks issuing forth are exceedingly large and sure to cause an explosion if there is gas.

These mines are not examined as rigidly as they should be. The mine inspector, when inspecting, goes only thru the main part of the mine, but does not go to the side-to-the-way places where miners toil, and which are dangerous gas traps. The mine is then pronounced safe, when, as a fact, it is not in local places.

CONVICT THREE WORKERS IN N. J. FRAME-UP CASE

Court Upholds Scab's Testimony

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 18.—Harry Fox, Mickey Teloman and Antonio Pientari, former employes of the Raritan Copper Works, Perth Amboy, N. J., have been convicted on an assault and battery charge here. The three men were accused by Frank Lovel, a worker at the copper works, of assaulting him with a six-foot iron pipe the night of August 15. A strike was conducted by the International Union Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, of which the three defendants were members, against the Raritan Copper Workers, at the time the assault took place. Lovel was a scab working at the copper works.

The case was manifestly a frame-up engineered by the company to get rid of these three militant workers. Each of the accused proved by several witnesses that they were miles away when the scab was beaten up. No one saw the attack take place. Lovel testified that he was alone when assaulted, that three men approached him from behind; that he was on an unlighted street. He also admitted that he previously knew only one of the men. Despite this, he swore that he was positively sure that these three men beat him up.

The defense brought out the fact that the complaint on which the warrant was issued had been made by an official of the company and that Lovel was brought to the jail after the men were arrested by a company official and asked to identify them. Of course he promptly said these were the men.

New Brunswick is a notorious open-shop town and the prosecutor played cleverly on the manifest prejudice of the jury against labor. In his summing up he was forced to admit that Fox in all probability was not at the scene of assault, but he asked for his conviction on the ground that Fox was an official of the Perth Amboy local of the union, and was the brains behind the other two innocent workers.

The International Labor Defense, which conducted the defense, immediately announced that the case will be carried to the higher courts.

A NEW NOVEL
by Upton Sinclair

Copyright, 1926, by Upton Sinclair.

IV

Sitting on the beach, half dug into the sand, and staring out over the blue water, Vee told him something about her life. "I'm no spring chicken, Bunny, don't imagine it. When I came into this game, I had my own way to make, and I paid the price, like every other girl. You'll hear them lie about it, but don't be fooled; there are no women producers, and no saints among the men."

Bunny thought it over. "Can't they be satisfied with finding a good actress?"

"She can be a good actress in the daytime, and a good mistress at night; the man can have both, and he takes them."

"It sounds rather ghastly," said the other.

"I'll tell you how it is, there's such fierce competition in this game, if you're going to get ahead, nothing else matters, nothing else is real. I know it was that way with me; I hung round the doors of the studios—I was only fifteen—and I starved and yearned, till I'd have slept with the devil to get inside."

"There's this to remember too," she added; "a girl meets a man that has a wad of money, and can take her out in a big car, buy her a good meal, and a lot of pretty clothes, and get her up on a bungalow, and he's a mighty big man to her. It's easy to think he's something wonderful. It's all right for moralists to sniff, that don't know anything about it; but the plain truth is, the men that came with the cash and offered me a start in a picture—he was just about the same as a god to me, and it was only decent to give him what he wanted. I had to live with him a few months, before I knew he was a fat-headed fool."

There was a silence. "I suppose," said Vee, "you're wondering why I tell you this. I'm safe now, I've got some money in the bank, and I might set up for a lady—put on a swank and forget the ugly past. If I'd told you I was an innocent virgin, how would you have known? But I said to myself, 'By God, if having money means anything to me, it means I don't have to lie any more.'"

Said Bunny: "I know a man that says that. It made a great impression on me. I'd never known anybody like it before."

"Well, it makes you into a kind of savage. I've got an awful reputation in the picture world—has anybody told you?"

"Not very much," he answered.

She looked at him sharply. "What have they told you? All about Robbie Warden, I suppose?"

"Hardly all," he smiled. "I heard you'd been in love with him, and that you'd sort of been in mourning ever since."

"I made a fool of myself twice over a man; Robbie was the last time, and believe me, it's going to stay the last, its put-up job. The money for the best picture I ever made, and he was handsome as a god, and he begged me to marry him, and I really meant to do it; but all the time he was fooling with two or three other women, and one of them shot him, so that was the end of my young dream. No, I'm not in mourning, I'm in rejoicing because I missed a lot of trouble. But if I'm a bit cynical about love, and a bit unrefined in my language, you can figure it out."

And Vee shook the mountain of sand off her bare legs and stood up. "Here's how I keep off the fact," she said, and put her hands down on the sand where it was wet and firm, and stood the rest of herself upon them, her slender white limbs going straight up, and her face, upside down, laughing at Bunny; in that position she walked by slow handsteps down to the water, and then threw herself over in the other half of a handspring, and lighted on her feet and dashed into the breakers. "Come on in! The water's fine!"

Bunny thought over this conversation, and learned from it his usual lesson of humility. Vee had had to fight for her success; whereas he had never had to fight for anything. If he wanted a moving picture career Dad would arrange it for him, the studio doors would fly open! And the same thing applied to any sort of career he could think of. How could he afford to pass judgment on anybody?

Also, while he listened to Vee Tracy, he had the memory of Eunice Hoyt to keep him humble. No, people didn't know what was right about sex; or at any rate, if they did, they didn't make it clear. It was disagreeable to have to think about so many other men; but then, too, it helped to clear the atmosphere. She wouldn't expect to marry him right off; there were marriages among the screen people, but apparently not until they had made sure they were happy. Also, it enabled Bunny to be certain that Vee would not be shocked by the knowledge that she was hauling his dreams.

"Dollar Diplomacy" in Nicaragua

Dollar diplomacy at Washington feels very much outraged because of what it terms "bolshevistic activities" south of the Rio Grande stretching all the way to the Panama Canal.

It professes especially to stand aghast at every show of sympathy displayed by the Mexican government for its sister republics in Central America, including Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Panama.

It is charged that Mexico is interfering in the internal affairs of Nicaragua. That privilege dollar diplomacy reserves for itself. Adolfo Diaz has been hurriedly recognized by Washington and warships with the inevitable marines, the vanguard of American imperialism, are on the job to suppress all opposition. Washington establishes its "protectorate" over Nicaragua, seeking to make it another colony of American finance.

The Washington correspondent of the Associated Press, in referring to alleged activities of Mexico in Nicaragua, says that, "Presumably, the chief purpose of this interference is the fostering of radical propaganda and Bolshevist philosophy." This is the usual charge of "Nervous Nellie" Kellogg, secretary of state, who always has half an eye on Moscow. Now Kellogg has greater need to be nervous. His department sees the long pending oil and land law issues and claim controversies, with the religious question thrown in for good measure in Mexico, overshadowed by the mutual relations developing between Mexico and Central America.

It is inevitable that Mexico, oppressed by American imperialism should seek its affiliations among others similarly oppressed. Such affiliations will be found not only as far as the Panama Canal, but even to the southernmost tip of South America as far as the Straits of Magellan.

Only yesterday Senator Borah warned the imperialists against armed intervention in China. But today Washington is sending marines to shoot down the Diaz opposition in Nicaragua. It is boldly claimed that if any Mexican or other outside influence is discovered during this process of terrorization and subjugation, then those countries involved, will suffer the wrath of the American government. Washington wishes to isolate the problem in Nicaragua from the other problems involved in dealing with the Central and South American republics. Instead Washington will find these countries making common cause against its imperialist aggressions.

Most workers in the United States look upon "Nicaragua" as only an inconsequential spot on the sketchy map of Central America. It doesn't mean much to them. The result is that they concern themselves very little with the grievances of this republic so far away.

But Nicaragua or Guatemala, or some other Central American republic, may be the tinder box that will set aflame the nations now subject to American profit rule. The ensuing war would be fought by American workers conscripted for the purposes of murder. The best time for labor to prepare against an American "Morocco" is now. The interests of the workers in this country are identical with the interests of all oppressed thruout both the Americas.

U. S. Plans to Take Nicaragua

Kellogg's Trick.

Kellogg bases his grant of recognition of the reactionary Diaz on the pretense that the Nicaraguan congress, which "elected" Diaz was the one in office when Chamorro drove out the elected government of Salorzano a year ago. The fact that the liberals who controlled that congress are now in open revolt, and hence would not dare come within the Chamorrist military zone to vote in the congress, makes no impression on Kellogg when he is anxious to prevent the Nicaraguan liberals from getting back what they won in the last election.

Rich Stakes.

The stakes of this bold game are possession of the Nicaraguan bank, the national railway, and rich concessions. The liberals had repurchased from the Wall Street bankers their national bank and railroad, and were refusing to give away the national wealth in concessions. The bankers backed Chamorro. When he seized the government he began offering these properties for sale in New York. Kellogg was unwilling at first to permit the sale of stolen national property. President Green of the Pan-American Federation of Labor protested against this proposed sale of loot. Now, the formal recognition, Kellogg gives his approval for the disposal of the Nicaraguan nation's railroad and bank.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—A formal accusation against the Mexican government of having aided Nicaraguan revolutionists, and an equally formal request for American intervention to make Mexico stop such activities, was filed with the state department today by President Diaz of Nicaragua, puppet of United States interests.

MEMBERS OF FLAT JANITORS' UNION HELD AT INQUEST

Face Trial in Shooting of Edward Dunn

Michael Sexton, organizer and business agent of the Chicago Flat Janitors' Union; Albert Crean, also a business agent, and Thomas H. Conner, a picket, of the same organization, were yesterday bound over to the grand jury at an inquest held at the morgue, charged with the murder of Edward Dunn, vice-president and organizer of the Afro-American Janitors' Union, who was shot and killed at the corner of Fillmore and Francisco Aves., last Tuesday.

The accused men were represented at the inquest by Attorney William Scott Stewart, who defended William D. Shepherd on trial for the murder of his foster son, "Billie" McClintock. On the advice of their counsel, all three of the accused refused to testify at the inquest.

Stewart's line of questioning of the witnesses, who were chiefly police officers and members of the detective bureau, indicated the line of defense being that, after the accused had called Dunn over to their parked car, to talk with him, two other Negroes appeared at the entrance to the alley, and at the same time, they saw Dunn reach toward his pocket, whereupon Sexton drew his gun and fired.

Find No Revolver.

In his examination of Capt. William Kennedy, of the 17th precinct, Attorney Stewart brought out the fact that cartridges had been found in the pocket of the deceased. Thereupon, the clothing was put in evidence and a search of the pockets revealed a pocket knife with a three-inch blade, six loaded cartridges, but no revolver.

Neither Dunn's wife nor any member of the family appeared at the inquest, altho officers were sent out to find and bring in Mrs. Dunn if possible. Identification of the body was made thru the testimony of friends

Karl Marx on Fordism

Ford's 5-Day Week Is a Capitalist Fraud That Karl Marx Exposed Before Henry Was Born—Some Lessons in Marxism with Relation to the Ford Method of Slave Driving.

By THURBER LEWIS

ARTICLE I

Karl Marx

FROM the manner in which the particular star flashed across the sky and then died suddenly out, it would appear that Henry Ford's famous five-day week did not exactly have the enduring qualities of a planet. We refer to the sensational manner in which the announcement of this great boon, like a meteor, was catapulted across the innumerable front pages that constitute the firmament of American publicity only to die in the whining and whirring of the machinery in Highland Park and Fordson.

But there is a reason why the vaunted five-day week was but a flash in the pan. There is a reason why it was startling for only the moment, its novelty has been eaten up in the realization by the workers themselves that it is just another capitalist fraud. It is a capitalist fraud that Karl Marx exposed in print before 1867.

Ford, and when we say Ford we mean, not the man, but the Ford administrative machine, has learned in the process of an advanced type of capitalist production what Karl Marx analyzed on the basis of his study of the capitalist system about the time that Henry was being born.

Ford on "Labor Cost."

READ the books that have been written for Henry by men who know how to write and who have translated the Ford experience in production to the printed page. Upon what is laid the chief stress? What is the determining factor in the Ford system? The central feature of Ford's industrial program is what he calls labor cost. The phenomenal profits made in the Ford industries have been created on the basis of "labor saving" machinery. The entire Ford system works toward the one end: devising means to cut down on the labor used in production and intensifying that labor to a maximum. No one disputes this least of all Ford.

What does Karl Marx, the greatest of all economists, the economist of the workers, have to say about it? What Ford technicians call labor, Marx calls labor power. Why? He calls it labor power because he wants to make clear the socialaspect of it and also to separate LABOR POWER, as such, from the laborer who gives it because LABOR POWER is what the worker sells to the capitalist. As soon as a Ford worker enters the Highland Park plant he is parted from something that has been brought from him. Ford has leased his brain, his muscle and his energy for eight hours, in a word, Ford has bought his labor power. "As soon as his labor really begins," says Marx, "it no longer belongs to him."

Ford's Eight Hours.

THE worker sleeves away for eight hours and Ford's specialists are busy devising means to make him produce as much in eight hours as possible. Why? Because the biggest profits are derived when, by employing less labor, more products are created.

But Ford pays his men $6.00 a day. He only works them eight hours. Other capitalists pay less money and work their men more hours. At the same time Ford's profits are bigger, as a rule, than theirs. How come?

Ford's economists would analyze it in the following way. Very simple. The labor cost is the big cost. The payroll at Highland Park is the biggest daily item of expense. Compared to this the cost of the raw materials is small. We can sell Ford cars at a low price and thus swell our sales on the market only if we can manage to cut down the biggest cost of production, that is, the labor cost. So the conveyor system came into use. So the division of labor was worked out in detail. So constantly improved machinery requiring the application of less and less labor was installed. And so more cars were produced with less expenditure of labor to produce them and profits were consequently greater.

All of this is quite true. But it is only half the story. As is usually the case with capitalist experts they leave the social implications of their calculations entirely out of account. They see only the matters directly pertaining to their particular business.

Marx Goes Deeper.

BUT Marx saw much more deeply. He was not not satisfied with a simple accounting such as that. He not only wanted to know HOW these things could be done, but, more important to the exploited worker, WHY they were done and what conditions made it possible.

In this case, for example, Marx was more interested in determining the process of making bigger profits by working four men eight hours a day and paying them six dollars for it, than in the fact that big profits resulted—the chief interest for Henry.

Well, let us begin. When the Ford worker lets Henry use his labor, or as we prefer to call it, labor power, he gets six dollars in return for eight hours work. It is as plain as the nose on your face that Henry has purchased something when he spends six dollars. And it is as equally plain that the worker has sold something.

What Are Commodities?

THINGS that satisfy a human demand or a want and are bought and sold are called commodities. Well, that makes the labor power that the worker sold to Ford a commodity, doesn't it? Henry Ford and William Green would be the last persons to agree with this opinion. It is a very vulgar way of expressing it. But is so obvious that the vulgarity has to be excused. Labor power is a commodity as surely as tin lizzies.

Why Six a Day?

NOW, why is it that Ford pays SIX DOLLARS for the use of it? Why doesn't he pay two dollars or fifty? There must be some basis upon which this is calculated. What could be more logical than to assume that the basis for such a calculation would be how much the worker needs to live on and to keep his family going? Let us assume that the minimum upon which a person can get along according to the standard of living in the United States is four dollars. The facts are that Judge Gary pays his men in the steel plants as low as three dollars, other employers pay four and Ford pays six. From this it is very easy to see that the daily wage is fixed upon the basis of what the worker requires to get along on from day to day and keep on working.

We saw that labor power was plainly a commodity. It satisfies a demand and is exchanged on the market. Now, what is common to all commodities? Upon what basis are they exchanged? Well, all commodities are useful. That is common to them all. But are they exchanged on that basis? Let us say Ford decided to exchange ten Ford automobiles for a ton point of radium to be used in his hospital. Wouldn't it require a round table of philosophers to decide upon the relative usefulness of the two? There must be something else common to commodities that determine the basis upon which they are exchanged. It is plain. They have all been made by labor. Upon all things that are bought and sold labor power is expended. So that labor power is the thing common to all commodities.

Big Business Revolts in Massachusetts

By BERT MILLER.

DAVID I. WALSH elected by 40,000 votes!

So runs the news in tal Coolidge's home state. Walsh has decisively defeated Butler in Massachusetts, which only two years ago rolled up a majority for Coolidge of 432,645. The Bay State has produced Butler in spite of the fact that the republicans harped upon the plea thruout the campaign that a vote for Butler is a vote for Coolidge, in spite of the fact that the usually Silent Cal came out on the shell to send a moving personal appeal for the support of his right-hand man, and in spite of the fact that our parsimonious president and his wife even went so far as to make the trip all the way from Washington to Massachusetts to vote for his favorite Coolidge was repudiated! How come?

Victory Looked Sure.

WHEN the campaign opened it looked like a Butler runaway. The early operations of his well-oiled machine gave promise of an easy victory. Huge clam bakes and outings were arranged during the late summer, at which as many as 10,000 of the faithful gathered to hear the republican spellbinders. In a "Pollyannic" biography of Butler in the Boston Herald he was painted as the epitome of all virtues. The Boston labor fakers turned the Labor Day parade into a republican rally after they had successfully knifed the movement for a labor ticket.

The textile mills picked up slightly. "Coolidge, the tariff, and prosperity" became the stirring slogan which was to carry the mill-owner candidate to victory.

Walsh Silent.

DURING this Uma Walsh was strangely silent. Altho a movement for Walsh had been started among the former LaFollette group as early as the spring, the democrats tried to create the impression that Walsh was reluctant to accept the nomination. This is a time-worn trick of capitalist politicians. But apparently the bashful swain was persuaded. Walsh submitted to the over whelming pressure of the masses(?) He accepted the nomination.

In the course of a few weeks the entire picture changed. With a few decisive strokes the accepted flutter victory was turned into an ignominious defeat.

"Labor" Supports Walsh.

IT was not until the democratic state convention that the democrats broke their silence, and then they proclaimed as their major plank—prohibition. The campaign drew into its last two weeks the democrats brought up their heavy guns. Disregarding the fact that Walsh was the running mate of William A. Gaston, banker and traction attorney; that he had not come out squarely for a single labor issue; that he refused to raise a finger in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti; that by his statements and his record he was clearly shown to be the smooth-tongued spokesman of big business and the enemy of labor, the official machine of the A. F. of L. endorsed Walsh. The state was literally plastered with letters and handbills and posters to show labor's esteem for Walsh. One poster in particular was most powerful, especially in the mill towns. It was entitled, "Butler's Prosperity," and portrayed a mill town with factories closed, unemployed workers walking about, and the legend "Vota for David I. Walsh."

Effect of Bankers.

ABOUT a week before election day the international bankers, headed by J. P. Morgan, issued their notorious manifesto demanding the abolition of tariff walls in the interests of their investments abroad. This was a direct challenge to the republican party and to Coolidge. Coolidge accepted the challenge and denounced the proposal, adhering firmly to the principles of the high protective tariff. By that act he sealed his doom, and the Massachusetts election was decided. The prohibition plank furnished an easy bridge for the Lodge faction of the republican party to cross over to the Walsh camp. This group, headed by Mrs. Lodge, Jr., and representing the banking interests, opposed to the manufacturing group (Butler et al.) came out openly for the wet plank and for Walsh. Neither the frantic appeals from the white house, nor the attempted terrorization of mill workers could counteract the disastrous division in the republican party. His business—the international bankers—has revolted from Butler and Coolidge, to Walsh and

Will it be Al Smith?

FOR the workers of Massachusetts the election marks a turning point from the recent period of unemployment, wage cuts and speed-up to a period of more intense and militant attack upon the workers. Walsh and the democrats, in whom many workers have blindly placed their trust will be the willing tools of the bankers' interests to lower the present tariff walls, and to seek to reduce the standards of the workers of Massachusetts to the starvation level of Germany. Better experience will teach them the lesson which the campaign has failed to do—organize a strong trade union movement—International trade union unity against the international [illegible] of the bankers—a labor party of the workers against the parties of capitalism.

Use your brains and your pen to aid the workers in the class struggle.

"REVELRY", NEW BOOK EXPOSING "OHIO GANG", STARTLES CAPITAL

By LAURENCE TODD,
Federated Press.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Washington is seething with discussion—chiefly cynical in tone—of the scandals that attended the Harding regime and the period when Calvin Coolidge was trying to stave off the investigation of the graft and corruption which marked the return of the republican party to power in the capital. For "Revelry," a sordid historical novel of that time, has appeared. Samuel Hopkins Adams has thrown into a book a hodgepodge of veiled reference to all the chief characters in the amazing drama of the Ohio gang and Teapot Dome and the department of justice. The effect is as nauseating as the most disillusioned citizen could expect. The white house is shivering in disgust.

Harding Period Story.

Willis Markham is the handsome, easy-going, stand-by-my-friends politician whom a crooked bourgeoisie has shoved into the presidency by the United States. He plays poker, drinks hard, finds congenial company among criminal characters who love him as a friend and make use of him as a tool with which to rob the government and the public. Their private morals are on a par with their gutter vocabulary, and in the mysterious little house on Blue street they gamble and quarrel and fight. There is the "soubrette," the oil stock deal, the cabinet member who last year was unable to pay his taxes, but who suddenly is able to buy a great ranch. There is the senator who is on their political relanslaes in his pursuit of fame, on which to prosecute them for robbing the government. There is the little government stenographer who has incriminating documents which the gang must buy. And there is the cabinet officer whose manner is that of private monopoly of the goodness in the world. He is secretary of state. Finally there comes the collapse of the house of cards. Willis Markham is not the first victim of the tragedy that was implied in the reckless arrogance of the gang. But when he dies of poison taken by mistake, but which he deliberately refuses to have counteracted, his friends conspire to hush the fact that he was poisoned. He becomes a martyr, and because he is so represented to the country the trail of the grafters who were his pals is covered.

Not a Novel.

"Revelry" is not a novel in the literary sense, nor is it historical in the sense of truth of events. But it is a performance which turns up to the reminiscent novelists of the American people all of the rotting relics of the Harding-Coolidge term. Whether it is published in order to annoy the white house and its satellites or to stimulate further research into the doings in the Little Green House on K street and in the McLean house on H street, as described before senate committees two years ago, the author does not explain.

"There came, too," he says in the death-bed scene, "the vice-president so soon to be president, who looked inscrutably at the dying man out of his fishy eyes and assured him that the Markham policies would be faithfully adhered to. Vice-President Elliot did not knew what the Markham policies were. Nor did Markham. Nor anyone else. But it made a lift when sent out over the news association wires."

Coincides with Trial.

On the day when a hundred press correspondents were hastily scanning their advance copies of "Revelry," Albert W. Fall came back to Washington to be arraigned in the federal district court on charges of conspiracy in the Teapot Dome frauds. His trial is soon to begin, but he has lost none of the assurance which was his when he helped to dominate Warren Harding. He announced that he was confident he would be acquitted.

Letters From Our Readers

Honor in Boston.

Dear Comrades: There is an irony about the late election in the state of Massachusetts that deserves the attention of your cartoonist.

The Coolidge slogan, "I need thee, Butler," was broadcasted, and it even entered the religious services of the churches at the Back Bay.

Just let your imagination take it up and behold a very large congregation of some 5,000 people standing and joining in the song of six verses:

"I need thee every hour, every hour I need thee.
Stand thou near by.
Temptations lose their power when thou art nigh.
I need thee, O I need thee, how much, how much I need thee."

Chorus, ad. libitum.

In a big, big church with spires and domes and steeples and towers. Make it fanny, for it was rich in humor to the party who has a bit of humor about them. The congregation poured here are all of the faithful. Fraternally yours,

A Comrade,
Boston.

Spirit in Florida.

Dear Editor: I was in a very good, and also uplifting, conversation with one of the I. W. W. brothers concerning the uplift of the laboring class. I am a member of the carpenters' local union. I am a colored man and stand for right and honesty. My determination is to help build and educate my race as much as I possibly can, so I am asking you to please send me about 500 copies of your paper that I can distribute among my people. And very soon we will establish a firm foundation. My aim is to distribute the paper, and after I can show them the necessity for you to help us organize as a body of workers.

My motto is: Together we stand; divided we fall. I will close, with devoted aims. I beg to be your friend, also brother.

Fraternally yours,

ONE of the funniest bits of news that happened this week was the action of the Cuban government in sending his papers to the Uruguayan minister after an incident very likely in a cafe when the Uruguayan said to the Cuban that Cuba was not a self-governing country but "merely a dependency of the United States." Small men in brass as well as playing-cards usually more conceited than those of heavier proportions, and the same applies to countries, particularly of their independence is in such a deplorable position as Cuba's is.

AFTER the Cuban used all his diplomacy to seduce the Uruguayan into impaling himself on his (the Cuban) sword he disappointedly resorted to some civilized methods of warfare. It refused the Cuban government to break off relations with Uruguay. But as soon as Washington ordered away the Kellogg threw a fit and Cuba resumed diplomatic relations. Uncle Sam is not going to have the cat-and-dog puppies disturb the secrets of the imperialist kennel.

OBREGON HITS NEW U. S. WAR MOVE

We Must Raise $3,000 by Tuesday to Keep Our Daily

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, General Secretary Workers (Communist) Party.

THE DAILY WORKER must raise $3,000 by Tuesday, November 23, thru contribution to the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund.

In order to meet notes falling due, which were given in payment for supplies, payrolls of our printing plant and paper bills, which involve the life of our paper, $3,000 must be secured in addition to the regular income of The DAILY WORKER.

These obligations cannot be postponed. We must pay them not later than Tuesday in order to Keep The DAILY WORKER.

The only way the money can be raised is thru the party members and sympathizers intensifying their work for The DAILY WORKER and raising and sending in the contributions to The DAILY WORKER by Tuesday of at least $3,000.

Every resource of the party and party members must be drawn upon to raise this $3,000. Every party unit which has money in its treasury must send the funds to The DAILY WORKER, whether these funds are contributions to the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund or not, and then raise the money to replace it thru the sale of the Keep The DAILY WORKER certificates.

There are resources far in excess of the $3,000 required to carry The DAILY WORKER thru the crisis in the party. They must be drawn upon in full in order to pull The DAILY WORKER out of its present dangerous situation.

We emphasize the seriousness of the situation and the need of prompt action. The Keep The DAILY WORKER campaign has been dragging too much, the total reached being still below the $20,000 mark in place of the campaign nearing its close with completion of the $50,000 fund. The consequence is that unless we can put new spirit in the campaign, immediately raising the $3,000 to meet the crisis Tuesday and then go forward with the campaign with greater interest, that we are in danger of not winning the struggle for The DAILY WORKER.

We must have Quick Action TO KEEP THE DAILY WORKER.

EVERY MEMBER OF THE PARTY AND THE SUPPORTERS OF THE DAILY WORKER SHOULD IMMEDIATELY RUSH IN ALL THE FUNDS THEY CAN RAISE.

EVERY UNIT OF THE PARTY SHOULD SEND ALL THE MONEY THEY HAVE ON HAND.

EVERY PARTY MEMBER SHOULD BE MOBILIZED TO COLLECT ALL THE MONEY POSSIBLE OVER SUNDAY AND RUSH IT TO THE DAILY WORKER.

THIS IS AN EMERGENCY CALL FOR ACTION WHICH WILL TEST THE SUPPORT THE PARTY CAN GIVE TO THE DAILY WORKER.

THE RESPONSE IN THE FORM OF RAISING THE $3,000 NEEDED BY TUESDAY WILL TELL WHETHER WE ARE ABLE TO KEEP THE DAILY WORKER.

Released After 16 Years in Jail, She Is Thrown Back Again

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LIMA, Mo., Nov. 19. — After a sixteen-year absence spent behind prison bars, Mrs. Hettie Daugherty returned to her home town here today, and within an hour was thrown in jail again.

Ostensibly, Mrs. Daugherty, now 41 years old, is held for trial on a burglary charge kept in file during her absence. Many believe, however, she is in jail because she defied a warning never to return here and because it is feared she came back for vengeance on those who caused her to be sentenced to the Missouri penitentiary.

We will send sample copies of The DAILY WORKER to your friends—send us name and address.

Powdered Coal May Be Used Instead of Gas for Autos, Says Trent

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 19. — Automobiles in the future may use pulverized coal instead of gasoline, Walter E. Trent, New York consulting engineer, told the International Conference on Bituminous Coal, in session here today.

CANTONESE ARMIES MOVE IN FULL FORCE ON MILITARIST STRONGHOLD

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 19.—A large body of Cantonese troops, under General Chiang Kai Shek, equipped with artillery and aeroplanes, is reported to be moving against Nanking in full force. Nanking is a base for the combined allied militarist forces under Wu Pei-fu.

WOOD'S ACTION IS ATTEMPT TO ROB FILIPINOS

U. S. Capitalists Will Get Huge Holdings

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 19.—"Governor General Wood's action in abolishing the board of control of corporations owned by the Philippine government constitutes one of the most regrettable chapters in the history of the American occupation of the Philippines," V. G. Bunuan, director of the Washington office of the Philippine Commission of Independence, declared in a statement issued here today.

"Wood's action is part of a plot to sell large corporations, belonging to the Philippine people, to American capitalists, Bunuan pointed out, declaring that the Filipine members of the board have successfully blocked this attempt and for that reason the board was abolished.

The Philippine government has invested $28,000,000 in enterprises. These enterprises were controlled by the board of control, consisting of the governor general, representing the United States, and the speaker of the house and president of the senate, representing the people.

Is New Dictator.

"By abolishing the board Wood now becomes dictator over these corporations and may do with them now as he pleases," said Bunuan.

"His action is unwarranted by law and constitutes usurpation of the legislative and judicial functions. Statutes creating the board have been in force and acted upon by government executives for more than ten years, the last five during the administration of Governor Wood. These statutes have neither been repealed by the legislature, declared void by the courts nor annulled by congress, notwithstanding such reports have been made.

Violates Constitution Principles.

"The governor general, with one stroke of the pen, thru a mere executive order, has set aside a law, disregarding the well-established principles of constitutional government, which the United States itself is trying to impress in the Philippines.

"But the most unfortunate phase of Governor Wood's conduct in this matter is his transmitting to the legislature the opinions of the acting attorney general of the United States and judge advocate general, upon which he based his action, immediately after, and not before, the closing session of the legislature, which, according to the farmers' ruling, may create another board thru which the Filipine people could, as heretofore, be represented.

EDGERTON, ARCH-ENEMY OF LABOR, LAUNCHES AN ATTACK ON FORD'S PLAN

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 19. — John G. Edgerton, president of the National Association of Manufacturers and arch-enemy of organized labor, played the role of "Judge" here in a speech before the chamber of commerce, attacking Henry Ford, another enemy of organized labor.

Edgerton "exposed" Ford's five-day week plan. He said that "Ford shows the five-day week plan as a cute method of advertising when he found he had to cut down production."

"Ultimately the Ford workers won't make as much money as they have been making," said Edgerton.

Then, after attacking Ford's plan, pretending to do so on behalf of the workers, Edgerton relapsed into his usual stats, and attacked the workers. "Workers who do six days in five, cheat their employers when they work six days and are paid for six," he said.

BRITISH MINERS VOTE TO FIGHT TO THE FINISH

147,000 Majority for Standing Pat

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The British miners have rejected the government's proposals for ending the coal strike which has been in effect since May 1. Official announcement was made today that the miners voted 460,806 to 313,200 against acceptance of the government's proposals, despite the fact that their delegate conference had recommended the acceptance of the government's plan.

The delegate conference of the miners' federation which met here today decided to adjourn to permit the executive to formulate new recommendations for peace.

The announcement of the miners' rejection came as a considerable shock to government circles, where it had been confidently expected that the proposals would be accepted.

The government proposals created a national tribunal to adjust differences, but it provided for decreases in wages and longer working hours and was generally characterized by the miners as an "abject surrender," which they refused to accept.

The rejection of the proposals may now stiffen the policy of the executive of the miners' federation and induce them to hold out for terms which they would not have dared to ask for heretofore.

Three Hurt in Wreck.

BLUFFTON, Ind., Nov. 19.—Three men were dangerously injured here today when two interurban Indiana union traction freight trains collided head-on seven miles south of here, and burst into flames.

William Robbins, Bluffton; Ernest Griffin, and John Hutchinson, of Muncie, the injured, were dragged to safety just before the blaze started.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 19.—An atmosphere of mystery as to the exact reasons for Queen Marie's abandonment of her American tour was created this afternoon when the following telegram was received here from the foreign ministry of the Roumanian government:

"His majesty's state of health is satisfactory. New York reports false."

BERLIN, Nov. 19.— The condition of King Ferdinand of Roumania, is improved, according to reports received from Bucherest today. The king's illness which has been previously diagnosed as intestinal infection has been diagnosed as tumor of the intestines by Dr. Baudot, a French specialist who has been summoned to Bucharest, according to reports here. King Ferdinand has been able to participate in official functions.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 19.— Queen Marie left here on her special train Thursday midnight for the east. The party will arrive in Jersey City at 9 a. m. Saturday and will motor to the home of Charles E. Mitchell, New York banker, where Queen Marie will stay in seclusion until the departure of the Berengaria on Wednesday.

Mayor Relieved.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 19—Mayor Marshall of Cleveland has given a sigh of relief. The announcement that Queen Marie will not visit the Ohio city, whose workers' organizations were preparing to greet her with a demonstration of protest is taken here as an indication that the queen feared the consequences of what would certainly have been an inglorious entry in the city.

The resolution of the Hungarian societies that caused a storm in the city council when a member attempted to read it has found its protest echoed by enthusiastic preparations, led by International Labor Defense, to give Queen Marie the "welcome" of her trip.

If reports that Prince Nicholas will act as the queen's proxy in visiting Detroit and Cleveland are true, arrangements will be altered to greet him as the representative of Roumanian suppression and absolutism instead of his mother.

DIAZ WOULD GIVE U. S. BANKERS CONTROL OF NICARAGUAN FINANCES

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Nov. 19.—As if he is anxious to demonstrate his servility to American capitalists as soon as possible after they engineered his election as president, President Diaz has offered to sell to the Guaranty Trust company of New York controlling interest on the Nicaraguan National bank.

The bank is owned by the Nicaraguan government.

Diaz, it is announced, has made a definite offer to the New York capitalists to sell them 51 per cent of the bank's stock. The bank has paid 16 2-3 per cent dividends on the stock.

Diaz excuse for the sale is that it will "prevent revolutions," and increase the bank's capital.

The terms are not announced.

18,000 WORKERS JAM GARDEN FOR SACCO PROTEST

Foster, Panken, Flynn Speak

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 19.—Eighteen thousand workers assembled at Madison Square Gardan at the call of the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee, passed unanimously resolutions demanding a congressional investigation of the case and authorized the committee to arrange within a month a mass delegation of trade unionists to wait upon Gov. Fuller of Massachusetts, to demand a new trial. Also a plan for a national congress in New York City within two months to continue the demand for a new trial.

Many trade unions attended the meeting in a body bringing their own banners with them. It was a real united front demonstration, official representatives of both the Workers (Communist) Party and the Socialist Party speaking from the same platform. William Z. Foster represented the Communists and Judge Jacob Panken the socialist party.

U. S. VIOLATES SOVEREIGNTY OF LATIN COUNTRY

Land Marines for War in Republic

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 19.—Declaring that the United States has no more right to intervene in Nicaragua than any other country, General Obregon, perhaps the most powerful political figure in Mexico said: "The conflict there is domestic. Any intervention is in violation of Nicaragua's sovereignty."

This was Obregon's answer to charges made by the State Department of the U. S. that Mexico was "interfering" in Nicaraguan affairs. At the same time that reports from that country said U. S. marines were being landed in force, the morning Excelsior carried Washington advices saying that the State Department resented Mexican influence in Nicaragua.

BLUEFIELDS, Nicaragua, Nov. 19. —Rear Admiral Julian Latimer, aboard the flagship on harbor here, has delivered an ultimatum on behalf of the United States department of state to the rebel leader Moncada in which he delivered an open threat of military action in behalf of the Diaz government unless the rebels laid down their arms.

United States marines have occupied Bluefields and are equipped to war. It is not yet known what stand the rebels will take in the face of the military intervention of the United States backed by the presence of a fleet in Nicaragua waters and a strong force of marines.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 19.—Using the "red menace of Mexico" as its excuse and the Diaz hand-made government of Nicaragua as its tool, the state department, with the able assistance of the department of war is making full preparations for the occupation of Nicaragua by United States troops and the subjection of the Central American republic to unbridled rule.

The role of U. S. diplomacy in fostering enmity for former President Chamorro, while at the same time it was in league with him for the setting up of the Diaz government that has become a mere branch of the state department, is feeling its way in Central America. The rebels under Moncada who took up the interference of the United States and declare that the hand-picked Diaz government has no right to office have the unquestioned sympathy not only of the population of Nicaragua but of the bulk of Latin-America familiar for many years with American and British intrigue, a broken sample of which is to be seen in the recent Nicaraguan events.

Smoke Screen.

The charge that the Calles government has given arms and ammunition to the Nicaraguan rebels is plainly a smoke screen raised by state department propaganda to cover fire for the invasion of Nicaragua and, second,

Call for the Fourth National Conference of the Needle Trades Section of the Trade Union Educational League

TO BE HELD IN NEW YORK CITY SATURDAY AND SUNDAY, JANUARY 1 AND 2, 1927.

IN the last two years the left wing in the needle trades industry has become a power to be reckoned with, not only by the bureaucracy, but by the entire employing class of our industry. We have seen, year by year, the bureaucracy of the needle trades unions, once considered amongst the most progressive in the labor movement, degenerate into aides and labor specialists of the employers, as exemplified by Hillmanism in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, by Schachtman's role in the recent furriers' strike, and by the understanded fight against and sabotage of the cloakmakers' strike by the right wing officialdom.

But, while in the rest of the American labor movement the decadence caused by the corrupt class-collaborationist bureaucracy is still dominant, causing the loss of nearly two million members in the ranks of organized labor, among the garment workers strong sections under the leadership of the left wing are once more emerging in fighting array to give battle to the employers in order to regain control over labor conditions in the industry and to secure improvements.

THUS, fighting unionism once more makes its appearance in the needle industry. The struggle in the last summer in the I. L. G. W. U., headed by Locals 2, 9 and 22, combined in the joint action committee, shows that the left wing has learned to fight the reactionary bureaucracy successfully. The splendid struggle of the furriers proves that the left wing has learned a great deal as to how not only to fight, but to win against both the employers and the bureaucracy combined.

However, our experiences in these big struggles in the fur and cloak industries have also demonstrated that the employers have grown far too strong for the unions to gain real improvements for the workers when each trade fights separately. It should be clear to everyone that if the unions want to make the necessary progress in improving the conditions of the workers and re-establishing their control, they must amalgamate into one industrial union with separate departments for the various trades. Only with such additional strength can they meet the strong position of the employers.

IT has also become clear in these struggles that the right wing, in one form or another, acts as the ally and adviser of the bosses in the course of the struggle. And, added to the difficulties that the militant union faces during a strike under conditions above referred to, all the more dangerous are the traitors within the union's ranks, who, by giving the employers exact information and by playing into their hands, are capable of taking advantage of the weak points of the workers for the benefit of our enemies.

It must be emphasized, therefore, that the struggle against the right wing must continue even sharper than ever. Amalgamation of the needle trades unions into one industrial union and complete elimination of right wing policies and right wing control must be the watchword of the left wing in the present struggle to strengthen the unions and improve conditions for the workers in our industry.

THE strongest point of the right wing in the needle trades is to be found in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. There the bureaucracy has made a united front with the employers against the left wing and used methods unheard of in our struggle in the rest of the industry. Complete surrender to the employer, disregard for the workers' demands and needs, and dictatorship against the membership—expulsions, graft, corruption—hold sway in that organization. Amalgamation and militant struggle for better conditions will be seriously handicapped as long as the corrupt fascist bureaucracy remains in control of the Amalgamated. The entire strength of the left wing therefore, must be concentrated to fight this bureaucracy and to fight them on a national scale.

Considerable support of the Amalgamated bureaucracy and also the packing of conventions in the other trades is realized thru control of locals outside of the big cities and the left wing must learn how to use its strength in the big centers for the purpose of assisting in organizing our movement nationally thruout the needle industry. In all the years of reactionary control of our unions the workers have been demoralised, the unions have been put asleep with the policy of class-collaboration to such an extent that they are not only neglecting to organize the growing number of new workers in the industry, but are even losing heavily in membership.

The coming struggle in the dress industry, with the large number of big unorganized markets outside of New York, will be the first one that will bring the problem of organizing the unorganized, big organization drives, the country-wide methods to the fore. The conference will have to serve as a rallying point in order to make this big struggle, in an industry that is so largely unorganized, a success.

THE complicated problems of our industry that could not be solved as a result of the recent struggles in our industry, such as the jobber-contractor problem, the ever-increasing drift of production outside of the big unionised centers, the drive on the part of the employers for increased production, the role of the right wing as seen in the new light of our experiences in the recent strikes—all these are matters of such vital concern to the needle trades workers that our national conference must find the proper definition for all of them, if militant unionism as embodied by the left wing is to continue to make progress.

The role of the capitalist government, local, state and national, as demonstrated particularly in the cloakmakers' strike in the forced arbitration proposals of the governor of the state of New York, combined with the support of these proposals by the right wing machine, and the wholesale injunctions issued subsequently as a result of the refusal of the union to accept this arbitration, the interference with picketing, the use of the so-called industrial squads (gangsters) by the city government against strikers—the whole line of collaboration of the bureaucracy with the capitalist parties to defeat the left wing in internal union and economic struggles, raises before us not only the question of tactics and methods to minimise these dangers but the political problem of developing working-class solidarity on the political field and its organised expression into a labor party, instead of the unions remaining a kite to the capitalist political machines.

THE needle trades section of the Trade Union Educational League, which has acquired tremendous moral influence among the needle trades workers, has to set its house in order also internally. We have not yet by far succeeded in organizing all our adherents, particularly in the centers outside of New York City. Among many of the workers the impression has been spread by the right wing that the league is only for Workers' Party members. We must make clear that the Trade Union Educational League is an organization based upon an elementary progressive trade union program and that all workers who agree with this simple program are welcome in the ranks of the league.

ON the basis of the foregoing, the following agenda, subject to amendments by the conference is submitted for consideration and adoption by all groups: (1) The cloakmakers' settlement, (2) the furriers' settlements; (3) the coming dressmakers' strike; (4) amalgamation as an immediate task; (5) to struggle against the A. C. W. bureaucracy, our struggle against the right wing, (6) political action against gangsterism, industrial squads, injunctions, police etc. (7) Jobber-contractor problem, (8) 40 hour week; (10) strike strategy and settlement policy in present period, (11) shop delegate system, (12) labor banking and insurance, (13) broadening the T. U. E. L., (14) means to finance left wing activities, (15) the "Needle Worker."

Obregon Defends Latin America

contemplated moves against Mexico itself. The oil and land law legislation that the Calles government maintains to enforce despite great pressure from the United States, constitutes a problem for the state department that it seems to be prepared to meet with drastic measures.

Raw Piece of Work.

The last occupation of Nicaragua has had its prelude in many previous landings of U. S. troops and the perennial presence of U. S. ships of war in Central American waters. The election fraud and terrorism by which the Diaz government was set up and then made to "appeal" to Washington for "assistance" in suppressing rebellion," is the rawest piece of diplomatic adventure the state department has embarked on in some years.

There are a number of reasons for the anxiety of the United States to acquire control of Nicaragua, Mexico, Ore. is the necessity for protecting the huge amount of invested Wall Street money in Nicaragua and to complete the financial strangling of the national bank and railways of Nicaragua. A previous liberal administration had acquired for the government the railway line connecting Managua, Atlantic Coast port, now office in 1925 with the help of United States money and guns, he is an "exiling" both the railway and the bank to American capitalists.

A very important reason for the desire of the United States for a "pacific ocean" canal in Nicaragua, is the plan that has been fermenting for many years for the building of a new Isthmian canal across that country.

The Panama Canal is no longer adequate to handle the huge amount of tonnage passing from Atlantic to Pacific. The U. S. Panama Canal commission at its meeting of the century ago attended Nicaragua as against Panama for the building of the canal. While the United States has a treaty with Nicaragua guaranteeing U. S. control of the canal route, a definite U. S. "protectorate" over the country would be a further guarantee.

Nicaragua has several advantages in this respect. In the center of the country is the huge Lake Nicaragua connected with the Atlantic by a waterway and with the Pacific by a partial water route to Salinas Bay. While the distance is greater than in Panama, these advantages of inland water are to be favored. Furthermore, the distances from San Francisco to eastern ports thru the more northerly Nicaragua project would be less by several hundred miles than the Panama route.

The advantages of the Nicaragua interoceanic canal from both a naval and commercial point of view have been in the eyes of the United States diplomatic force for many years and undoubtedly one of the chief considerations in the present offensive for control of that country.

Obregon Defends Nicaragua.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 19. — While the Calles government is fully aware of the fact it is being made a dupe of U. S. imperialism in the undisguised occupation of Nicaragua, neither the president nor the foreign Minister Saenz has issued a statement regarding the charges that Mexico has supplied arms to the Nicaraguan rebels.

But former President Obregon, who will doubtless also be the next president of Mexico, was outspoken in his defense of Mexico and evinced a decided sympathy with the Nicaraguan nationalists who are fighting against Wall Street control.

Answering the accusation that Mexico is "interfering," Obregon said that Mexico had the same right to interfere as the United States.

"It was shameless on the part of anyone to ask for American intervention," he said.

Concerning the U. S. state department's contention that Mexico is spreading radical doctrines thruout Latin-America, the general said, "It would give me great satisfaction if the ideas propagated by Mexico for the benefit of millions of human beings would spread thruout these countries, even tho the directors of Wall Street would have a few sleepless nights."

He denied that the Nicaraguan revolutionists were receiving aid from the Mexican government tho he admitted that individual Mexicans in sympathy with their brothers to the south might have given some help.

This Union Appreciates Power of Daily Worker

The following letter has been received by The DAILY WORKER from the Window Cleaners' Protective Union, Local No. 3, New York City, expressing the union's appreciation for the aid given it toward winning their recent struggle:

New York, November 11, 1926.

The Daily Worker,
1113 W. Washington Blvd.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Comrades:—Permit us with deep workers' sincerity to express our gratitude and appreciation for all the publicity that you have given us in The DAILY WORKER during our struggle with the bosses.

We are proud to state that with your extended help we have successful in organizing and solidifying our ranks and finally have won our battle with the bosses, notwithstanding, that our bosses have used all the available corrupt means against us: police brutality, gangsters, industrial spuads and finally "the injunctions."

The injunctions against our union did not help the bosses break our ranks. The bosses, therefore, had to give up and submit to our demands.

At present we continue to clean windows under better union conditions.

In presenting to you a check for the sum of $25.00 we feel that we are merely discharging our obligations in helping "The Daily" continue pursuing its course of organizing the working class and helping them by publicity during the struggle.

Fraternally yours,
WINDOW CLEANERS' PROTECTIVE UNION, LOCAL 3.

CARPET WORKERS STRIKE AGAINST BIG WAGE SLASH

Bosses in Attempt to Wreck Union

By J. O. BENTALL.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 19.—Two hundred workers in the John Bay's Sons carpet factory walked out on strike this morning when they received the notice of a 15 per cent cut in wages, tying up the shop completely.

Not a scab was available, so the company closed its doors and declared that it was not able to replace the strikers with scabs, as all the scabs that will condescend to take the jobs of strikers are now spoiling goods in the Philadelphia Carpet Company mill that has been on strike for over six weeks.

Boss Blames Market.

The John Gay's Sons declare that there has been an auction in New York where old carpets sold for less than usual and therefore they make the claim that the workers should be willing to take a cut. The company then asserts that Axminster carpets have gone up in price, but that this does not help this particular concern.

Workers Picket.

The workers, who are 100 per cent organized, recognized that the argument put forth for the cut, namely the rummy sale in New York, cannot fool them. So they are prepared to stay out and also to keep the scabs if any should turn up, from bungling up the job in the mill. Hence they have prepared for a mass picket line which will carry on till the strike is won.

It may be that the next rummy sale of carpets in New York will be more lucrative and thus ruin the argument of the Gay guys. But no matter what may be the turn of the rummy sales in New York and London and Hoboken, the strikers feel that they cannot take this uncalled-for cut.

Would Destroy Unions.

Under this superficial argument put forth by the Gays for the cut is the concerted action of the carpet manufacturers to destroy the Tapestry Carpet Union. The trick was expected to be done by the Philadelphia Carpet Company when it came with its 15 per cent cut over six weeks ago. But instead of accepting the cut, the workers went on strike and are out to the last man, woman, girl and boy, picketing faithfully and making every one of the straggling scabs feel like a boil on Job's neck.

The two struck shops are close together, so the picket lines now frantize and show bigger than ever. This is affecting the Philadelphia shop in a marked way. This morning several of the old scabs turned away when they saw the reinforcements, spitting at the telephone poles and swearing, "What the hell is the use?"

By noon the Gays had already made overtures expressing a willingness to recognize the union if the workers would go back. There is only one hitch—the workers refuse to recognize the 15 per cent cut.

Secret Orders Sent to English Fascists by Mussolini, Report

LONDON, Nov. 19. — Secret orders have been sent to fascisti and fascisti sympathisers here, who have formed a "volintaar" organization for the support of fascism, it is learned, to hold themselves in readiness for duty in behalf of Mussolini. They may be required to come to Italy on a moment's notice, it is reported, to do Mussolini's bidding.

AIR IS NO LONGER FREE IN ILLINOIS, TRIBUNE IS GIVEN ETHER OWNERSHIP

The declaration "as free as the air" doesn't apply anymore in the state of Illinois as the result of a decision given by Judge Frances S. Wilson of the state circuit court in the radio case brought by the Chicago Tribune company.

Judge Wilson ruled that property rights can be established in the air in the same manner they are established on the land.

The Chicago Tribune asked for a writ of injunction against the Oak Leaves broadcasting station to restrain it from using a broadcasting wave length near those used by the Tribune. The writ was granted. The Oak Leaves station asked for a temporary writ to restrain the application of the injunction until the case could be tried in a superior court. Judge Wilson denied their plea for restraining the injunction.

The court held that the Tribune possessed property rights in the air as the result of its priority in using a particular wave length, and because it had built property on the basis of having this right and advertised it to the public, it had a superior claim to the use of the air.

HOLD MEETING IN N. Y. TO PROTECT ANTI-FASCISTS

Evidence of Violence in U. S. to Be Given

NEW YORK, Nov. 19. — A conference of various labor organizations is to be held here Sunday in order to devise ways and means of defending the thousands of Italian political exiles who are in this country in an effort to escape from the monstrous regime of Mussolini and his fascist brigands.

The conference is scheduled to be held at 2 p. m. at the Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East 4th St.

Already trade unions, cooperative societies, workers' political parties, mutual aid societies and labor institutions representing many thousands of citizens of the United States have responded to the invitation and will send delegates to the conference for Italian political exiles.

Opponents in Danger.

These exiles number not only those who escaped the wrath of the tyrannical government of Italy since the beginning of the fascist regime, but many who were here long before the rise to power of the murderer, Mussolini, and who have been outlawed in their own country because they dared in this country to voice sentiments in favor of democratic institutions as opposed to the monstrous dictatorship of the black-shirted minority of Italy that rode to power over the bleeding and broken bodies of the very flower of Italy's population.

Evidence is at hand and will be presented at the conference to prove that agents of Mussolini, plentifully supplied with money, are constantly instigating and perpetrating most frightful acts of violence against political exiles in this country.

Kidnap Anti-Fascists.

The deadly claws of Mussolini extend even to America. The opponents of the monster are not safe in their places of labor, they are not even safe in their homes.

Men have been kidnapped in broad daylight on the streets of New York and Brooklyn, taken prisoners on board flying the Italian flag, unmercifully tortured and occasionally murdered. The malignant character of the agents of Mussolini was exposed a few weeks ago when a bomb these creatures were ready to throw at a mass meeting on the streets of New York, exploded in their car before it could be used for its murderous purpose.

The object of the conference is to perfect plans that will enable the labor movement to defend the Italian political exiles and at the same time scourge from this country the depraved black-shirt cowards, criminals that swarm the Italian sections of our cities doing the murderous bidding of Mussolini.

WILKES-BARRE COPS BREAK UP WORKERS' MEET

Fascisti and Reactionaries Join Police

By a Worker Correspondent.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Nov. 19.—A battery of police, about 15 in number, in league with the fascisti and Ukrainian reactionaries, succeeded in dispersing a peaceful meeting of over 600 Ukrainian workers which was being held in the Sterling Theater in North Wilkes-Barre.

Running true to form, the Wilkes-Barre police, whose boast is "no god damn radical meetings will ever be held in Wilkes-Barre," succeeded in keeping their record straight.

Police Issue "Permit."

The meeting was being held under the auspices of nine Ukrainian social, political and fraternal organizations and was to be addressed by Andrew Paschuk, Communist deputy in the Polish department. Altho a "permit" was issued by the police department, permits always being required before any kind of a meeting will be allowed, the mob of police was conveniently near when their allies, the hoodlumers and reactionaries, invaded the meeting and started a fight, heckled and caused general disorder.

Preserve Law and Order.

At this point the police gallantly arrived to "preserve law'n order" by asking no questions, demanding no explanations or information as to who was creating the disturbance, but summarily ejecting every person from the theater.

Leader is Bootlegger.

The ring leader of the disrupters was later arrested by the police for selling booze and keeping a disorderly house. It was this chap who announced that "his reverence," the local Ukrainian priest, was against the holding of the meeting, and to all intents and purposes represented "his eminance."

Another meeting will be held next Sunday, to be addressed by the same speaker, and the committee this time announces a "committee for the preservation of order," in other words, a bouncing committee will be ready to handle excited people.

Wall Street Is Trying to Hold Nicaragua As Its Private Property

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE American bully is on the job in Nicaragua. Naked, brute force, utilising the fist of the United States navy, energetically builds its tyranny over the natives.

The Chicago Tribune declares editorially regarding Nicaragua that, "the method of armed intervention is not one we can afford to condone." But that applies to other countries, not to American armed interference.

This is proved in the news columns, that contain this very interesting dispatch (Chicago Tribune Press Service, Nov. 18) from Bluefields, Nicaragua:

"Rear Admiral Julian Latimer called the rebel leader Gen. Moncada aboard the U. S. S. Rochester this afternoon and read to him the dispatch from Washington requesting the rebel leader to lay down his arms and enter into an agreement with the new Nicaraguan government, headed by Adolph Diaz.

"Otherwise, the United States will be obliged to take action not to permit fighting. General Moncada is consulting with former vice president Sacasa, the rebel's choice for president, and his supporters."

Thus Washington announces its intention to hold a beyonet support for its Diaz government in Nicaragua, demanding that all opposition, even tho it speaks in the name of the Nicaraguan people, must meekly and humbly submit. That is merely another one of the hypocrisies of dollar diplomacy. It must be combatted by the American working class.

If the United States has the right to intervene in Nicaragua, then every other country, whether it be Mexico, the Union of Soviet Republics, or some nation of South America has that same right. The only difference would be that any of these interventions would be on behalf of the Nicaraguan people and not in support of their oppressors, the type of intervention that originates in Washington. Obregon, former president of Mexico, declares truly that Mexico has the same right to interfere as the United States.

Washington fears the United States of Central America. While building a powerful centralized government for itself, Wall Street rails at its every possible effort to maintain the divisions between the Latin-American peoples.

It is not the ambition of Mexico to annex the Central American republics, including Guatamala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Panama, as the Washington statesmen would have the world believe. It is to the interests of these republics, however, to unite and protect their own interests against the foreign aggressor. These people have one language and culture, they are racially very much alike, and have many interests in common.

Washington would have a very difficult time to show that there is less reason for the Latin-American peoples to unite, consolidating their interests under a common government, than it was for the original 13 American colonies to get together, not only to fight the British king but also to create a consolidated nation.

This issue helped provoke the American Civil War, and in spite of the fact that the advocates of states' rights have been loud in their arguments, every development has been against them. The recent decision of the United States supreme court giving new powers to the White House and of the government was another step in the direction. Every precedent that is needed for the creation of the United States of Central America, including Mexico, is to be found in the growth of the United States north of the Rio Grande since its revolutionary war of 1776, the sesqui-centennial of which it celebrates this year.

The whole attitude of the United States toward Nicaragua shows that, in spite of the use of cleverly concocted phrases, Washington looks upon the Central American republic as the private property of Wall Street imperialism.

The Mexican masses will be quick to discern the meaning of this imperialist aggression and join in even more stubborn resistance to the oil, land and rubber interests seeking to more firmly establish themselves in Mexico.

Washington's policy clearly shows that it doesn't feel itself safe in Central America as long as Mexico is not completely subdued and enslaved.

It is, therefore, to be expected that the full wrath of American imperialism, in this crisis, will be turned against Mexico. Already the war propagandists are busy with their beastly concocted fictions about "upstart" against the present Mexican government, paralleling the propaganda so long directed against the Soviet Union.

The Chicago Daily News displays a first page cartoon showing a bullfighter, with the inevitable whiskers, labelled "Bolshevism," waving a red cloth.—"Mexico Red Outbreak"—before a burly bull supposed to represent "World Patience."

It is clear that definite attempts are being made to stir up the war hysteria that is necessary to support the march of Wall Street's armies against foreign peoples. It is more necessary now that ever for American labor to declare against all attacks on Mexico, Nicaragua, or any other Central or South American countries.

Refuse to Bear Burden of Imperialism

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The imperial conference of prime ministers from all of the British dominions struck a snag when the ministers flatly refused to "chip in" to defray expenses of Great Britain's imperialistic navy.

Something like an "acute controversy" has occurred over the matter. It is reliably reported. Premier Baldwin insists that the dominions must pay part of the expenses of the navy but all of the prime ministers refuse.

Singapore is Crux.

The crux of the controversy centers around the British base at Singapore, which is important to Great Britain's holdings in the Pacific. Baldwin declares that Australia, because it is most interested, should pay for expenses of maintaining the naval station there. Prime Minister Bruce is adamant.

Britain also felt that Canada would chip in for Singapore for protection on its Pacific coast, but Prime Minister King coolly informed Baldwin that it didn't need the protection, as it received enough from the United States. The situation is now in a deadlock.

It is possible that at the last moment some dominions may vote a small contribution, just as a "gesture to preserve peace," but the outlook for John Bull to shift any of the burden of imperialism on to the dominions is dark.

Want Own Say.

Another point of controversy came up which indicates to some that Great Britain's hold on her dominions is weakening. The ministers are opposed to Great Britain signing treaties and conducting other relations with foreign powers as representing the dominions. They want to have to do their own treaty making, and insist that envoys from Great Britain must represent only that government.

That the control of Egypt is absolutely necessary to the protection of the empire was shown to the ministers at secret meeting that was attended by Lord Lloyd, high commissioner to Egypt. Egypt is necessary for the protection of the Suez canal and trade and strategic routes between the home country and dominions, it was pointed out.

IS MACHINE DISTRICT 5 TRIES TRICKERY

iners Spoil Rule of Officials

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa., Nov. 19. A mass meeting was arranged by the "Brophy for President Committee" of Sub-District 7, District 5, United Mine Workers of, America, for last Sunday, Nov. 14., at 2 p. m. The Imperial Theater of this city was rented and a deposit given. The Burgess promised a representative of the arrangements committee not to interfere with the meeting, adding that no written permit is needed for a Sunday meeting, but that his promise is sufficient. Brother Frank Keeney, former president of District 17, U. M. W. of A., was advertised to speak on the coming elections in the miners' union. Keeney is supporting the Save-the-Union ticket headed by John Brophy.

Officials Capture Hall.

Much to the surprise of the arrangements committee, they found the hall occupied by district officers headed by Pat Fagan when they arrived to open the hall. Asking what they meant, they were told that officials rented the hall and paid for it. They also claim that they secured a written permit from the Burgess to hold a meeting. The committee took the matter up with the manager of the Imperial Theater, who promised that the hall would be vacated by the district officials at 2 p. m. This, however, was not done

He again promised to have the hall vacated at 20 minutes to 3 sharp. At this time the question was raised that a meeting cannot be held by the progressives because they failed to produce a written permit. Two representatives of the "Brophy for President Committee," together with Jack Nasseo, one of the district officers, and two policemen, proceeded to the Burgess in regards to a permit. The Burgess, as expected, could not be located.

Powers Happed Gets Floor.

Meanwhile large numbers of miners began pouring into the hall, coming from all parts of the Allegheny Valley. Keeney was unable to be there, and Powers Hapgood came to take his place. The miners began to demand of the district officials that Powers Hapgood be given the floor. The officials were finally compelled to give in to this demand and Powers Hapgood was given the floor. He spoke for about one hour and a half.

Officers Indulged in Personal Attacks.

Powers Hapgood, in a brilliant speech, pointed out how the strikes of 1919-1922 were betrayed by the present leadership of the U. M. W. of A. and gave a detailed explanation of the advantages of the Brophy program to Save the Union. He was greeted with

An extraordinarily timely discussion of the tendencies in Russia's internal and international policy as affecting its economic development. Trotsky, in his well-known brilliant and incisive style, analyzes a question that has been the outstanding problem before the Soviet government.

PRIZES FOR NEXT WEEK.

Three attractive prizes for worker correspondence stories next week will be given to those who send in the best stories. Send in that story you have been thinking about now, workers! You can have one of these books in your worker library:

1ST PRIZE—"Romance of New Russia," by Magdeleine Marx, a splendid account of the new Russia, in a cloth-bound edition.

EVERY WORKER SHOULD SEND IN A STORY THIS WEEK! REMEMBER: WRITE AS YOU FIGHT!

continuous applause. The district officials failed to reply to the points mentioned by Hapgood, but, instead, indulged in a bitter attack against individual candidates and supporters of the John Brophy ticket. The applause received by Powers Hapgood showed that at least 95 per cent of the meeting was in favor of the Save the Union program and candidates.

Try to Start Fist Fight.

At one point, when David Fowler of Scranton indulged in personal attacks against the progressives, one of the miners asked why he didn't speak about the policies of John L. Lewis, instead of attacking certain individuals. This was too much for this official and he jumped down half the steps, threatening to beat up the man who dared to ask him such a question. He changed his mind, however, and returned to his original place to continue his speech.

The rank and file compelled him to sit down and the meeting was adjourned amid a stormy uproar against the district hireaucracy.

Old Forge Miners Greet Alex Howat with Enthusiasm

By a Worker Correspondent.

OLD FORGE, Pa., Nov. 19. — Alex Howat spoke to a large miners' mass meeting here Sunday in behalf of Brophy campaign. Other speakers were Brennan, Argoti in Italian, Yourish in Polish and Toohey.

The crowd of 400 miners waited two hours overtime for Howat and the party to arrive from the Scranton meeting but not a single man broke ranks.

As Howat stepped from the auto in front of Columbia Hall the hundreds of miners gathered outside cheered again and again. The miners of this town remembered Alex when he was here three or four years ago. Brennan closely analysed and interpreted the anthracite contract and conclusively proved to the satisfaction of all present the treachery of Lewis and refreshing with arbitration of the worst kind. He called for support of Brophy and Stephenson and to fight for the "Save the Union" program.

Expose Rum Graft in Cleveland Higherups

By a Worker Correspondent.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 19. — After a long period of graft in enforcing the dry law, an exposure is promised. Justices of the peace here hevn getting so much for each case, which has been one of their main sources of income, especially when it was not possible to arrest a man for any other offense.

Without warrant, homes have been invaded, cases have been fixed, accusers, crooks and vicious characters have been employed as dry agents, exorbitant and unreasonable fines have been fixed by justices and mayors and various other methods are being searched to the officialdom.

An investigation is being made by the federal government, and it is expected that the smell will reach to heaven.

DAILY WORKER ONLY RELIABLE PAPER, HE FINDS

Urges Exploited Workers to Realize It

By JOHN L. SNYDER.
(Worker Correspondent)

FORDSON, Mich., Nov. 19.—At one time I was a subscriber to the Weekly People, organ of the now dead socialist labor party. My last donation to the support of that organization was about two years ago—flowers for its grave. It was dead to me then, and more so now, so far as the class struggle and the revolutionary labor movement is concerned.

I started to read The DAILY WORKER, as I was always interested in the labor movement thruout the world, and I found it to be the only reliable paper for the exploited workers and farmers in the United States.

Bought it at Stands.

But all this time I had to depend on getting it from the newsstand, as I was unable to be a regular subscriber for the economic reason most of us are up against in searching for steady work. With me, as with most of us rebels, it was the old saying that if I didn't like it here, I could quit and go somewhere else.

"Good" Job.

I am a baker by trade, and people must eat, so I was not long out of a job, if have a good job now, it pays $60 for a week of nine days. But again here is the joker—I only work four days a week, so I don't make that $40, so you can see what I mean by a good job.

I work for the Schaeffer Box Lunch Co., as second baker. We put up lunchas for the slaves in the Ford River Rouge plant in Fordson. There are about four bakers in this place, two bakers, two cooks, a few wagon boys, and about fifteen girls who wrap lunches. The girls or women (most of them are kids) are getting $15 a week for a ten-hour day. Of course they, too, are working only four days a week.

A Boss' Trick.

A few weeks ago the company cut out giving the pies in with the lunches, thus saving themselves about $300 a week. And that enabled them to sell about $300 worth of extra pies each week. We thought it would be a good time to ask the boss for a raise, so I got busy and had the bunch all worked up for a raise in wages. But they are pinch, and winter is coming on. They kept quiet, so I told them I was going to ask the boss myself.

The boss, Mr. John Schaeffar, is one of those political bosses in Fordson, known to be a good fellow—to his class. Most of his sobs hold public office.

Hard Luck Tale.

When I asked him for the raise he told me a sad story. Since they stopped putting the pies in the lunches, they were selling fewer lunches to the tune of about $100 a week. He was losing money and couldn't see how he could give us more money now, but he would see that we got a raise after Christmas—if things picked up.

I would probably have cried over his plight, if I had not known something about economics. We are not organized yet and I am the only comrade in the shop at this writing. Christmas is only a short time away, and then we will get a bonus or a raise, maybe!

This is the situation in my place, with lots of hard work ahead of me to get slaves into a movement that will bring them out of their slumbers.

I hope that you will publish this in the worker correspondence column, so that I can show them that The DAILY WORKER is their paper.

IF YOU COME TO BUY, O. K.; IF YOU ARE NOT TONGUE-TIED, KEEP OUT

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19. — How well an applicant for admission to the United States is tongue-tied to the present criterion in the rulings of the state department. If a Communist comes to trade or to study, he apparently gets in, for, according to Charles Recht, counsel for the Soviet government, there are already 1,000 non-quota Russians in this land of the free. But Madam Kollantai, the Russian minister to Mexico, cannot even cross the country on her way from Europe to her mission. She might say something en route.

On the one hand is Senator Borah, threatening to bring before the foreign relations committee of the senate the question of defining the authority of the secretary of state in such cases. Then there is Mary G. Hilworth (an apt name for a silencer), president of the Woman Patriot Publishing Co., shouting that under acts of congress, which she cites by dates, the secretary has no discretion at all—is must exclude anything that looks at all like a Communist. "The President himself," she argues, "has no legal power or right to suspend or nullify the mandatory provisions of the alien exclusion act."

Meanwhile, Doctor Kellogg asks the applicant for admission to stick out his tongue. If it is red, it is a sign of intellectual bad health and a malnutrition of capitalistic psychology—and the door slams.

CLEVELAND 'DADS' REFUSE TO HEAR REPORT ON MARIE

Protest Meeting Held on Action

By a Worker Correspondent

CLEVELAND, Nov. 19. — The city council went into an uproar, when Councilman Peter Witt, independent, tried to read a memorandum prepared by a committee of Hungarians of this city, protesting against the subservience of American citizens to the Roumanian queen. The Hungarian committee had tried to get the clerk of the chamber to accept the memorandum, but he refused.

As it seemed impossible to get the memorandum before the council in a regular manner, the committee called upon one of the independents, and what the latter was refused the right to read the document Witt read it, and the fight began.

The city mayor and city manager together with the clerk decided that there were things in the document that would offend the ears, references to the heating of stripped women, etc. Hence they decided that the document should not be read. Despite the protests of Witt, and his repeated efforts to get the document before the body in order to determine whether it was acceptable or not, he was stopped and threatened with violence by the sergeant-at-arms.

Hold Protest Meeting.

As a result of this little bit of Roumanian method in the city council, a protest meeting was held tonight, at which several liberals and i. Amter, district secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, spoke. After a report of the fracas was made, the independent councilman made "an election" speech, in which he declared he would not make a speech and succeeded in doing it.

Expose Movie.

Amter exposed the whole situation in Roumania, the losses during the war, the present condition of the workers and peasants, the persecution of the national minorities, the desire of Bessarabia to be attached to the Soviet Union. At the mention of the name "Ostrofanesti," the audience went into an uproar of applause. Amter showed what the loan of $100,000,000 would be used for—for war and repressive purposes.

"If war comes, the United States will be responsible, for had the American government not guaranteed the loan Roumania would be in no position to arm. Back of it all is oil. The United States needs oil, the Standard Oil Co. has procured what it wants and the $100,000,000 has been advanced."

Among the other speakers were: Comrades E. Kovacs and J. E. Takacs.

Alex Howat to Hold Forth in District 2

PORTAGE, Pa., Nov. 19. — Alex Howat, former president of District 14, United Mine Workers of America, who broke the infamous Kansas industrial court, will speak on the coming elections in the miners' union in Portage, Pa., at the Miners' Hall Sunday, November 21, 2:30 p. m. The meeting is arranged by Local Union 570.

He is also expected to address a meeting in Barnesboro, Pa., while visiting this district. Howat is well known in this district and large crowds are expected to attend the meeting.

HOW U. S. YOUTH IS TARGET FOR 100% BUNCOMBE

"Education Week" Is Sign for Unloading

By L. P. RINDAL.
(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 19.—November 11 was Armistice Day. Last week was Education Week, which was, as well as the week of the ninth anniversary of the Russian revolution.

Armistice Day is the most glorious day of days for Wall Street, international bankers, ammunition makers, poison-gas artists, army and navy officers, "greenish" labor "leaders," militaristic teachers, the "Brisbunk"-lied reactionary press, bible-pounders, K. K. K., and other patriotic profits.

The creation of a war spirit—from a capitalistic point of view—in the untrained minds of school children and youth in general is the principal object of the militarists in this "peaceful" land of the free.

When this is done the youngsters are fit to become cannon fodder, strikebreakers, murderous gun-runners during labor conflicts, war profiteers, one-dollar-a-year grafters, policemen and stoolpigeons.

Anti-Laber Poison.

The November issue of The Young Comrade explained the real meaning of American Education Week. Some of its slogans are: "Liberty is not the right of one, but of all;" "make democracy the same for the world," "equal opportunity for all," etc. The sum of all this is that because the teachers collect all their forces and start a campaign to dope the children with anti-labor poison so as to make them good slaves of the bosses. Of course they do this all year round, but during American Education Week they have a special drive or campaign for doping the workers' children."

Dictation In Saviatland.

The same article also pointed out the significance of the Russian revolution. It said, in effect, that in America the fat of the land goes to the parasites—only the crumbs, if any, reach the workers. Only in Soviet land, with workers' rule and where the master class bosses have been voted out, is there liberty, democracy, opportunity and justice for the workers.

Sky-Pilots Went Bible in Schools.

A proposition, the blue in public schools, carried in Los Angeles county, was voted down, however, as a state law. So the Almeettes, "Fighting Bobs," popery, fellows, yellow-pine knights, mission stiffs and other hallelujah screamers, did not succeed this time—to Bryanize Russkiteed California into an anti-Darwin-monkey-evolution Tennessee.

But the danger of next time is still with us, the danger of hyperitical godliness, sheoplish ignorance and slavish submissiveness in the ranks of the so-called workers' children. Holy rollers, hallelujah actresses and silver tongued fundamentalists in the form of Florida real estate sharks are welcome to their feasts in gilded castles, if any, in the skies. But disbelievers shall inhabit the earth and—some day—inherit all its fullness. They are pulling one-sixth part of this globe now—Sovietland.

Almee Rides for Fall.

Even the evangelist herself may have an accident some of these days. Mules may be demoractic, but rather than bend their knees before celebrities they kick. The writer is not perticularly interested in fundamentalists, broken necks, but why don't the workers throw their masters off their bended backs and the bible-pounders out of public schools? They ought to have as much sense as a mule, anyway.

'Indiscretion' Caused School Board to Stop Promotion of Teacher

NEW YORK, Nov. 19. — "Indiscretion is the ne ins of language" was given as the reason for the refusal of the New York board of superintendents to promote Dr. Abraham Lefkowitz by Dr. William O'Shea, member of the board. O'Shea said that he voted to promote Lefkowitz, but believed the other members also had a right to vote against promotion because they thought he was a radical.

The "indiscretion" charge against the teacher were that in referring to the republican party and democratic party he used the terms 'Gyp, the blood' and 'Tony, the-man-who-killed-Josephes,' and in speaking of the United States as 'the so-called greatest republic in the world,' said O'Shea. Theas were "committed" five years ago.

Danish Ship on Rocks.

SANTANDER, Spain, Nov. 19.—The Danish sailing vessel Viking, which was making a trip around the world, went on the rocks near San Pedro de[l] Mar. Henniel Vestegot, owner of the vessel, was saved but his companion Ean Hansen was drowned.

Oil A NEW NOVEL

They were at the Monastery, and had been dancing, and went out upon one of the loggias, or platforms, or terraces, or whatever you call the outside of a cathedral. There was a moon shining down—the same that had shone on Bunny and Eunice, and on Bunny and Ethel Goodrich. There was organ music inside, and the scent of flowers outside, and Bunny was thinking to himself, "What am I going to do about this?" It couldn't go on, that was certain; he had got so that he was trembling all over. And yet, somehow, he seemed to be tongue-tied. So far, all the girls had had to propose to him, and it was quite absurd. What the dickens was the matter with him?

In a faltering voice he suggested, "Let's dance." Vee stood up, and he stood up; they had danced out onto this loggia, or terrace or platform, and now they would dance back, and he would be, literally, just where he had been before. No, that wouldn't do! He had a sudden fit of desperation; and instead of the particular kind of embrace which has to do with dancing, he put his arms about her in a way that made it impossible for her to dance. This was a crude procedure, no credit to a junior classman and leader of fashion in a high-toned university. Bunny knew it, and was in a panic. She would not understand—she would be angry, and send him away!

But no, she was not angry; and somehow, she was able to understand. There is an old saying, that fingers were made before forks, and in the same way it is true that embraces were made a long time before words. Bunny became aware that his clasp was being returned—and by a pair of capable arms, that were able to hold a girl upside down in the air and carry her down a beach! It was all right! "Oh, Vee! he whispered. "Then you do care for me!" Her lips met his, and they stood there in the moonlight, locked together, while the organ music rose to a shout.

"Vee, I was so scared!" And she laughed. "You silly boy!" But suddenly she drew back her head.

"Bunny, I want to talk to you. There's something I must say. Let me go, and sit down, please—no, in that chair over there! I want us to talk quietly."

There was fear in her voice, and he did what she asked. "What is it, Vee?"

"I want us to be sensible, and know what we're doing. It seems to me hardly anybody I know can be happy in love, and I I'm saying. I want us to decide in cold blood."

"You'll have to get a new God!" Bunny had managed to recover the use of his tongue.

"I want us to promise to be happy. Any time we can't be happy, let's quit, and not have any fuss! Let's be sensible, and not go crazy with jealousy, and torment each other."

"You'll be a plenty for me," declared Bunny. "I surely won't make you jealous!"

"You don't know what you'll do! Nobody ever knows! It's the devil's own business—oh, you've no idea what I've seen, Bunny! You're nothing but a babe in arms."

"You'll be good to me, Vee, and raise me up?"

"How do you know what I'll do? How do you know anything about me? You want me, without really knowing what I am or what I'll do! I could have told you a million lies, and how would you have known? The next woman that comes along will tell you a million and one, and how will you know about her?"

"That's too easy, Vee—you'll tell me!"

He sank down on his knees before her, and took one of her hands, intending to comfort her; but she pushed it away. "No, I don't want you to do that. I want you to think about what I'm saying. I want us to decide in cold blood."

"Bunny, a man and a woman ought to tell each other the truth—all the time. They ought to trust each other that much no matter how much it hurts. Isn't that so?"

"You bet it's so."

"If that means they give each other up, all right—but they have no business holding each other by lies. Will you make that bargain, Bunny?"

"I will."

"And I want you to know, I don't want any of your money."

"I haven't got any money, Vee—it's all Dad's. That is the first painful truth."

"Well, I don't want it. I've got my own, and I'll take care of myself. I've got a job, and you'll have yours, and we'll let each other alone, and meet when it makes both of us happy."

"That's too easy for a man, Vee!"

"It'll be a game, and those are the rules and if we keep the rules, it's cheating."

Bunny could assure her that he had never cheated at game, and would not cheat in this one. So he overcame her fo and she was in his arms again, and they were exchanging the ravishing kisses, of which for a time it seems impossible ever have enough. Presently she whispered, "Someone will come ob here, Bunny. Let me go in, and I'll dance a bit, and then make my excuses and get away, and you come up to my room."

Crawling Before the Queen

Organized labor, as represented by its officialdom, has steered fairly clear of the skirts of Queen Marie, of Roumania, during her visit in this country.

The exception, however, is to be found in J. W. Hayes, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union, with headquarters at Indianapolis, Ind.

Hayes was not only anxious to befoul the union headquarters, called Typographical Terrace, by inviting the presence of the symbol of labor murder in Roumania, but in order to gain royal favor attacks the labor movement in other sections of the country.

In news dispatches from Indianapolis, Hayes is reported as denouncing the Chicago Federation of Labor for referring to the queen as "Bloody Marie," saying that the members of organized labor in Chicago were "credulous" and intimating that they had taken orders from "the propaganda bureau of the Third International."

President John Fitzpatrick, Secretary Edward N. Nockels, and especially Vice President Oscar F. Nelson will be stunned to learn that they are "radicals." Have they not viciously fought radicalism everywhere that it appeared, and many places that it didn't? They must all confess that they get orders from old party politicians and from the labor reaction higher up than themselves, but never from "the Third International," which Hayes understands to mean everything that exists over the one-sixth of the world's land surface now under the red flag of the Union of Soviet Republics. But Hayes was evidently willing to say anything if only permitted to kiss Marie's boots during her stay in the Indiana "open shop" metropolis.

It is to the credit of great sections of the American working class that it spontaneously resented the presence in this country of the spokesman of the Roumanian tyranny. Resolutions were not only adopted by the Chicago Federation of Labor, but by other labor organizations, including the Detroit Federation of Labor, headed by Frank X. Martel, host to the recent annual convention of the American Federation of Labor in that city.

The Illinois Miner, official organ of what is left of the Farrington regime in the Illinois Mine Workers' Union, gives space to the item spreading Hayes' attack. This gives rise to the question whether John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, might not have collaborated with Hayes in his redbaiting. The international headquarters of the U. M. W. A. is also located in Indianapolis. Lewis would certainly be jealous of Hayes if he knew that the latter had belly-crawled before the queen without being able to join him.

Worker Loses Thumb, Can't Work, Gets Small Compensation

For the loss the company gave him only $200, altho Carrol has not been able to work for weeks. The case was brought up before the Indiana industrial commission. Mr. Perkins ruled that that is all Carrol can receive according to law. Carrol said: "If the industrial board says that I can only get $200 I guess I have to take it, because that's the law. But I sure would like to see those fellows that made that rotten law in jail."

The Value of All Commodities, Including Ford Cars, Is Determined by the Labor Power the Workers Put Into Them —Ford Makes a Profit by Giving His Workers the FULL VALUE of Their Labor Power.

By THURBER LEWIS

ARTICLE II

ASIDE from their mere use values, commodities have another value. They have the value that they take on when it comes to the point where they are exchanged for some other commodity. If they are not exchanged and made especially for that purpose, they are not commodities. They are mere use values. It is necessary to know how this exchange value is determined.

The best way to begin to do this is to think about what is common to them. We saw that labor power is common to all commodities. We begin to suspect, therefore, that labor power has something to do with determining the value of these commodities when they go on the market for exchange.

How Marx Put It.

LET us state the case as Marx stated it. The value of a commodity is determined by the socially necessary labor power required to reproduce it. That sounds very involved. Why must Marx talk about "socially necessary" and reproduction. Ford's experts don't figure that way, and they make profits. The reason for this is that Marx was satisfied only by going to the root of the question. Ford is interested only in profits.

When Marx speaks of "socially necessary," he means, simply, the AVERAGE labor power be-stowed on commodities IN GENERAL. He wasn't interested in tin lizzies or pig iron. He was interested in ALL commodities. He was after a common denominator so that he could analyze his subject in its largest, its SOCIAL aspect.

If another plant made Ford cars by hand, without the use of machinery the way they are made in Highland Park, Ford cars would not sell for more because in one plant it took more labor to make them. No. The price of Ford cars would be determined by the cheapest method of production, the one most prevalent, the SOCIALLY NECESSARY amount of labor. So, with anything that is made for sale, it is clear that the value of it is set not on the basis of the most out of date and inadequate ways of making it—but on the most efficient and cheapest means of producing it.

The Value of Labor Power.

BUT we said that LABOR POWER was also a commodity. Every bit as much as Ford cars. This has value too. How can the value of labor power be determined? By exactly the same rule. The value of labor power is determined by the socially necessary amount of labor power required to reproduce IT.

How does this work out in fact? Take a Ford worker. He has labor power that he sells to Ford for eight hours a day. What is the socially necessary labor power required to reproduce this.

Every commodity, as we say, has labor power, concealed or hidden in it. The bread and meat the Ford worker eats, represents certain amounts of labor power. The clothes he wears represent more labor power. The education he might have had. The things required to care for his wife and raise his children (labor power) in the mass dollars representing in money the social VALUE ting)—in a word, the necessaries of life that he consumes are commodities that represent, also-

HENRY FORD.

There are hundreds of thousands of workers directly or indirectly a part of the Ford industrial machine. Over this great social institution one man has undisputed direction solely because he invokes the right of OWNERSHIP. Why should one man be a few men control the destinies of millions of workers? Why haven't they something to say? Karl Marx answers these questions. The accompanying article explains briefly the mechanics of capitalist exploitation according to Marx with particular reference to the Ford industries.

gether socially necessary labor power, that is labor power necessary to produce the needed things of life not only for the particular Ford worker, but for all Ford workers and all workers in the country.

Ford Pays Full VALUE.

FORD pays, like all employers, what are called wages. The average wage happens to be six dollars a day. We will explain later why Ford pays six dollars while all it may require the worker to actually reproduce his labor power is four dollars. For the moment we are interested in but the one fact, that the value of the labor power of the Ford worker is determined by the socially necessary labor power required to make it possible for him to continue to work in the way we have explained.

Let us continue to assume that four dollars represents the necessary amount of subsistence required by the worker, Ford pays all his workers at least four dollars, that we know. Socially speaking then we come to this: that four dollars represents in money the social VALUE of the labor power given by the worker. Ford, in paying his workers more than four dollars, pays them at least the VALUE of their labor power. And yet the makes a profit, and a big one at that. How does this happen?

Labor Power Has a Special Quality.

LET us compare labor power, as a commodity, with all other commodities. What is there about it that is different? A pound of sugar, for example is a commodity. But, until it is bought and eaten, it continues to be a mere pound of sugar. After it is eaten, it ceases, of course, to be a commodity.

But what about labor power? Labor power is good only when it is at work. When it works, or applies that power in turning a screw, IT CREATES SOMETHING. When a Ford worker on a motor as it comes along on a conveyor, he has changed something, he has contributed his share towards the CREATION of a complete motor. The motor, complete and assembled, has more value, is worth more on the market, than it was when it was mere pig iron or a bunch of parts. It is obvious then that labor power, as a commodity, has something that other commodities lack. It has the power to create additional value.

NOW, armed with this wonder working commodity, the Ford worker enters the factory under contract to the management. What does this contract say? It says that the worker will devote eight hours of his time applying his labor power in the production of Ford cars, adding, as we have seen, new value to the particular part of the machine that comes to his hand. With every operation he makes the part that comes along to him on the conveyor more valuable than it was before it got to him.

And for these hours of VALUE CREATING work, Ford pays him at least four dollars which we decided was the amount he required to exist on, or the VALUE of the labor power he sold to Ford. The worker has no kick coming. He is getting full value for his work. But how does Ford make his profit if he pays the worker the VALUE of his labor power?

Four Hours For Me—4 Hours for Henry.

WELL, it so happens that the worker, going into the Ford plant with all the efficiency devices with which he has to work can, in eight hours' work, produce much more than the mere four dollars that he requires to live on. He can produce much more than the six dollars that Ford actually pays him. Let us assume that in four hours of work, the labor power of the worker adds to the Ford car in process of production, six dollars. That is the value of the labor power that Henry bought from him. But when his four hours work is over, he doesn't wash up and go home. Oh No! Henry has hired him for eight and eight he works. It stands to reason that in the eight hours' work he would produce twelve dollars in value, that the value of the labor power he gives to the commodity, Ford automobile, is represented by twelve dollars. That's where the profit comes in. That's why Henry can have a bank balance of tens of millions of dollars. That's why Henry can build new plants

Illness an Excuse.

The above dispatches rather bear out The DAILY WORKER'S statement of yesterday that the queen cancelled her trip because of her fear of further manifestations against her, using King Ferdinand's illness as an excuse. The Berlin message, corroborated by reports from Bucharest direct, indicates that Ferdinand's illness is simply a continuation of an ailment that was with him long before the queen departed for America.

The fact that the queen aided in the raising of huge loans by reason of the widespread favorable publicity she received and by building up a personal following among the wealthy banking and industrial families, is an added reason for cancelling the trip at a time when her popularity is distinctly on the wane and she is headed for nonentity instead of popularity.

Why Cancellation?

It is of some significance also that while she still has four or five days to stay in the country the queen chooses seclusion instead of keeping her social obligations. Present plans call for Prince Nicholas to make these cancelled engagements instead, taking the boat with the queen when it sails on Wednesday. Her majesty is not unwell and the condition of her husband does not exactly call for complete retirement.

Her seeking refuge at the home of one of the bankers who no doubt is participating in the big loan is not without its implications.

Would Show Pictures of Hall-Mills Murder Scene at Court Trial

COURTHOUSE SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 19.—Alexander Simpson, the spectacular prosecutor in the Hall-Mills murder trial, today went into court that he be allowed to project on a screen pictures of Detective Lane so that the jurors could obtain not an erratic idea of the scene where the Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Mills were shot to death on the night of Sept. 14, 1922.

This unprecedented proposal from the prosecutor provoked a vigorous objection from the defense.

"We must not allow their case to become another Mooney and Billings. They want no communism of any sence. They want liberty or death."

Giovannitti Speaks.

Arturo Giovannitti one of the victims of the famous Lawrence frame-up, which also took place in the state of Massachusetts, said that even if Sacco and Vanzetti were released from jail now they would be only half-way out of the clutches of justice. That the capitalist system of society must be held responsible for that state of affairs. Also that "stupid, brutal section of society, which we call democracy."

Judge Jacob Panken pointed out that the district attorney was bent on getting conviction so he could display another scalp on his girdle.

"I want to split my voice," continued Panken "with the decent people of this country to take off this spot on the American people."

Foster Greeted with Cheers.

The next speaker was William Z. Foster, who was greeted with prolonged cheers. He said in part as follows: "Sacco and Vanzetti have become the symbol for a simple murder case? It is because Sacco and Vanzetti have become the symbol of a class struggle in the case of working class vs. capitalism, that they are trying to make an example of them.

"What was their crime? They are fighting a blow to that which is the source of the bosses their profits. They are fighting the workers into struggle unitedly.

The other speakers were Richard Brazier of the I. W. W. Molinaya Dilana editor of the Hammer, Arthur Garfield Hays of the American Civil Liberties Union, Ella Seiger, editor of Il Lavoratore, Angelo D. # STRIKE STRATEGY

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

ARTICLE XX

Trade Union Agreements

Strike strategy under present conditions in the United States must include definite policies regarding the making of trade union agreements. For many years the ultra-leftists, best typified by the I. W. W., have emphatically opposed in principle the signing of any trade union agreements whatsoever. They maintain that such documents constitute agreements of the workers to abandon the class struggle for the terms they are in force. They advocate merely oral agreements.

This incorrect attitude, which is one of the many forms of the ultra-leftism which has prevented the I. W. W. from expanding, is a reaction against the wrong policies of the right wing trade union leaders in making trade union agreements. The latter, with their class collaboration conceptions, believe that such agreements actually end the struggle for their terms. They hold agreements to be sacredly inviolable. By signing up their various craft contracts to expire at different dates they use them as a justification for one union to scab upon another.

Written Agreements Necessary

But the strike strategy must not be determined by such flimsy arguments as those of the I. W. W. Trade union agreements do not and cannot put an end to the class struggle, not even temporarily. The struggle between workers and employers goes on under such agreements, although it takes different forms than strikes. We must realize this fact and learn to fight effectively under these agreements. Under present conditions trade union agreements are technically necessary to the maintenance of organized relations with the employers.

It is idle to speak of mere oral agreements in connection with such vast and complicated industries as railroads, coal mines, and many others. What the left wing must learn is how to prevent the many evils often connected with trade union agreements and how to fight the employers successfully even while in contractural relations with them.

The A. F. of L. upper bureaucrats make a fetish of the sacredness of trade union agreements. They never cease harping upon the solemn obligations of the workers to live up to their contracts scrupulously. Nor do they stop at open strikebreaking where the workers goaded by the employers, strike before the official expiration of their agreements. Some of the worst betrayals in American labor history have taken place this way. Recent cases in point were Berry's furnishing men to take the place of the striking New York union pressmen, and Lewis' treachery in driving the Nova Scotia coal miners back to work to scab on the striking steel workers of the British Empire Steel Corporation.

The Employers' Realistic View

The contract policy of the reactionary trade union leaders plays directly into the hands of the employers. It keeps the workers bound hand and foot by the union agreements, while the employers violate them whenever the opportunity presents itself. The employers consider trade union agreements cold-bloodedly from the sole standpoint of expediency. They are not swayed by the sentimental rubbish about the sacredness of contracts, which our conservative leaders eternally make so much of.

When the employers find it profitable to fulfill the terms of such agreements they do so. If not, they break them and the union too, if they can. Their present widespread violation of the so-called Jacksonville agreement in the bituminous regions is typical. In the deepening coal crisis of the past couple of years the operators have seen an opportunity to get rid of both the Jacksonville agreement and the miners' union, and they are doing so brazenly and unashamed. They are entirely unmoved by Lewis' intermittable and impotent pleas that they live up to their promises solemnly made to the union.

The workers must become equally "practical" in their attitude towards trade union agreements, and realize that such agreements are not worth more than the paper they are written on unless the workers have powerful organizations to enforce their fulfillment. As for the "sacredness" of these documents, the workers, taking a leaf out of the book of the employers, should never let them stand in the way of the advancement of their own interests. Agreements must never be allowed to keep workers on their jobs to scab upon strikers; they must never be used to drive strikers back to work.

Providing Elbow Room

The left wing must always fight for elbow room in trade union agreements by insisting upon "no scab" clauses of various kinds. Wherever several unions are involved, we must demand joint agreements or, at the least, the expiration of all agreements at the same time. The experience in the British general strike, when vast groups of workers struck in spite of their agreements, proves that a militant working class will never allow such faint treaties with the enemy stand in the way of fighting this enemy effectively when the opportune time arrives.

In the question of whether there should be long or short term agreements the workers and employers have different interests. Ordinarily employers propose long term agreements three to five years or more when they are dealing with strong unions, except when there is a near prospect of a rapid fall in wages because of industrial depression.

Long Term Agreements

Such long term agreements favor the employers in several ways. They make for "peace" in the industry, and the checking of the workers developing offensive and growing class consciousness, which are vital considerations. Moreover, they enable the employers to figure further ahead about their costs, and give them an opportunity to make better preparations to defeat their workers in the next wage movement. For the workers short term agreements (one of two years in length) are the best. They make for struggle, for the development of the workers' consciousness, the strengthening of their unions. They also result in winning more concessions from the employers.

Reactionary labor leaders, who always want to avoid the struggle, support the employers in demanding long term agreements. The abandonment by the United Mine Workers of its old time militant policy of yearly agreements and the acceptance of long term agreements in both the anthracite and bituminous fields was a surrender to the operators. It was a menacing symptom of the deep crisis in which the U. M. W. of A. now finds itself.

The left wing must always fight for the best terms possible in its agreement with employers but it must never rely upon these pieces of paper. It must ever and always place its reliance in powerful trade unions, clear seeing and militantly led. These are the workers' only guarantee for the fulfillment of the employers' contracts.

SPORTS

LAST week we offered to sacrifice ourselves to go to Columbus to witness the Ohio-Michigan game (in disguise if anyone thought the presence of the state penitentiary there made it necessary). And what a game it turned out to be! When two teams get together on whom all the resources of modern education have been squandered to produce football wisdom—they play a worthy game. Ohio and Michigan were so evenly matched the close score of 17-14 could not have been otherwise.

But no one volunteered railroad fare and as a result one Bug we know was missing from the game and only some few odd ninety thousand attended. The gate receipts will help you understand why our centers of culture pay fancy prices for professors of football and call a professor of anything else a Bolshevik if he asks for a dollar-a-week raise. Red Grange must still get a laugh when they call college football "an amateur sport."

Carl Rubin of Boston is a different kind of a Bug. He spied the Sports column and writes: "I wish to congratulate the Bug. I am one myself. Swimming is my hobby, and tho I am interested in other sports I think swimming is the greatest of them all. (Aha—a water Bug!) I note you fail to mention it when referring to the sports of 'New Russia.' Certainly a country cannot be even 'half awake' as to physical culture if they forget their swimming."

But they don't, Brother Bug! We said nothing about it simply because we knew nothing about it. But they swim, all right! Just how much of it as a competitive sport we are going to find out for you.

We do know that every place there is water in Russia (and there's lots of it!) you will find many Russian swimming Bugs of both sexes. Russian sports magazines carry a good deal on swimming and the next copy that comes along you will get, Friend Bug.

But Carl asks: "Do any of the Workers' Sports Clubs here in this country take swimming as a competitive sport? If so, please name them." We know of Workers' Sports Clubs with gym classes, basketball, football and other sports, but those with swimming teams. If there is a Workers' Sports Club that has them, speak right up!

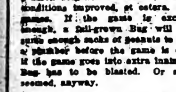
We revere off peanuts at ball games a couple of years ago. Baseball Bugs, as you may know (especially this one) feed on the lowly peanut during ball games. The vendors (forced threaten to form a union with advanced scale, working conditions improved, et cetera. The games. If the game is exciting enough, a ball-crazed Bug will consume enough sacks of peanuts to need a plumber before the game is over. If the game goes into extra innings a Bug has to be blasted. Or so it seemed, anyway.

But next season we're going to reconsider. A sports rumor has it that "peanuts may be smaller or prices higher" at the ball parks next season.



AN INDOOR SPORT

BEING a Bug on all sports gives me also an interest in the manly art of mop-massaging. Next Monday Tiger Flowers, middleweight champion of the world (including the Scandinavian) will push over a set-up named Eddie Huffman. There's no reason for going.

But the champion with the fancy name happens to be just as fancy with his fists. We take a lively interest in his beauty business of lifting faces because he is a Negro athlete. Negroes have no clinch in sports. This fellow was so unusually good he literally fought his way up. On December 3 he fights Mickey Walker, former title-holder also in Chicago. That outfit to be a bout worth seeing. The Tiger is a paraon. But in the ring he doesn't use a bible. He wisely depends on his fists. If you enjoy seeing two excellent boxers exchanging compliments with both hands, here's your opportunity. If you look around the hall you might find

A common peanut is good "as is." But a common peanut sold by organized labor at a good ball game—ah, brother, that's something else again!

IN THE WAKE OF THE NEWS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

SECRETARY KELLOGG, as dumb a secretary of state and as obedient, as ever conducted the foreign affairs of the United States, is shaking the mailed fist at Mexico. The danger of intervention in Mexico is by no means over. The Knights of Columbus are discreetly singing low for the good reason that their yelling for war on Mexico might arouse the anger of the anti-Catholic elements and make things hot for the administration, if it could be proven that Coolidge was incited to action by papal pressure. American diplomacy is not as slick as the European brand. Kellogg usually speaks frankly. This is not a virtue. It is only stupidity.

THE reason for the latest threat against Mexico is as follows: There is a revolution in Nicaragua and Mexico was charged with supporting the progressive elements against the reactionaries that had the support of the United States. Washington made a bluff at not recognizing the reactionary Chamorra regime on the ground that it came into existence thru a coup d'etat. Yet this virtuous government of ours did not repudiate Mussolini of Italy, Horthy of Hungary, Primo de Rivera of Spain or Pilsudski of Poland tho all these brigands seized power by force of arms. But he who expects honesty from a capitalist government is liable to be found wanting.

THE reason for Washington's refusal to recognize Chamorro was other than that. In all probability Chamorro did not see the necessity for complying with the demands of American capital, or he held out for a better price than was originally offered. Then the progressive elements attacked, and his government did not look like ten cents for a while. The United States got busy and sent cruisers to cheer up the reactionary forces. It was reported that Mexico sent arms to the progressives. The latest news is to the effect that a fellow by the name of Diaz has been seated in the presidential chair with the backing of the United States. So Kellogg warns Calles to keep his hands off South America since that is the stamping ground of American imperialism. It should also be noted that the American agent in Nicaragua, Lawrence Dennis, suggested to Diaz that he buy off the liberal opposition with a few cabinet seats.

IN connection with the threat against Mexico in the latest Kellogg note on the Nicaraguan question if might be well to notice that an obscure paragraph appeared in the capitalist press a few days ago to the effect that the secretary of war sent out a notice to draft boards that functioned in the world war to hold themselves in readiness. The war department did not deny the report point blank but suggested that the story was based on indefinite instructions. It looks very much as if American cannon fodder might be soon asked to add more oil fields to the domain of American imperialism.

WHY did the queen of Roumania decide to leave for home so suddenly? This question is on every tongue. The queen says it is because her husband "Ferdy" is ill. But the queen would not quit a dog fight for that reason. What we think is this: The queen has her $150,000,000 loan tucked away in her royal stocking. And the storm of protest against her mission, which was initiated by the Communists in reaching such proportions that the wise lady believes discretion is the better part of valor and decents it a good time to make herself scarce. There may be interesting developments in Roumania also. Ferdinand's illness may only be diplomatic. But he is sitting on a lock and those that have the say in that oppressed country, those that own the real estate can make "Ferdy" dance any way they want. Perhaps they are afraid the queen may get her $150,000,000 and leave them little in the nails. There are many surmises. But just now it is on the cards that

THE capitalist class, it is said, intends by an overwhelming majority to accept the government peace proposals which were submitted by the federation leaders with more or less benevolent suggestions for acceptance. This is the only case we can recollect where the rank and file have persistently and successfully resisted the counsels of their leaders to surrender. A. J. Cook and Herbert Smith are honest trade union leaders, but they made serious errors during the severe crisis. And the most serious was Cook's failure to back up the demand for a complete discussion on the question of the betrayal of the general strike at the Bournemouth meeting of the British Trade Union Congress.

THE South Wales miners, the Lancashire miners and the Scotch miners have refused the terms of surrender. Those terms meant longer hours and less pay. On the other hand British industry is in dire straits owing to the strike. It has lost $6,000,000,000 directly so far because of the tie-up and its loss in trade is enormous. British is now importing 4,000,000 tons of coal per month at a cost of more than $25,000,000, while in the same period last year she was importing hardly anything but was exporting $18,000,000 worth a month. Only five of her 470 blast furnaces are in operation. All this taken in conjunction with her $40,000,000,000 war debt shows what a sorry plight the old empire is in.

THE heroic struggle of the British miners is a glorious page in labor history. But for the aid rendered them by the Russian workers they would have been obliged to return to the pits long ago, because of sheer hunger. It is to the everlasting discredit of the American workers that they have neither given financial nor moral support to their comrades in Great Britain outside of the contributions made by the radicals, those workers that the pampered labor fakers never tire of branding as enemies of labor. The A. F. of L. bureaucracy "received" a delegation of British trade unionists, who came here for money, gave them nice speeches and sent them home with their pockets empty. On the other hand the workers of the Soviet Union have already contributed over $5,000,000. Who are the friends of labor?

Bernard Shaw---Fool of the Bourgeoisie

By K. A. WITTFOGEL.

Bernard Shaw, the English dramatist and writer, is no revolutionary Marxist. Co-founder and member for a long number of years of the reformist-socialist union of the Fabians (so-called after a Roman general who is supposed to have crushed his opponents not by open attack, but by caution and hesitation*), Shaw has just recently rejected the revolutionary methods of Communism as a deplorable tactical error. Even for Marxism, the theoretical expression of the Communist movement, Shaw—quite logically—is unable to muster up any enthusiasm. Once before, in his literary youth, Shaw was an adherent of the Marxian theory of value. But that was a long time ago. Today he obviously has only quite a hazy idea of the basic thoughts of Marxism. That does not prevent him from disapproving these thoughts most energetically.

Like many social reformers who have no objection to socialism "coming" some day—a hundred years after their death—Shaw, too, calls himself a socialist. What is the nature of this socialism of his? In his dramatic cycle, "Back to Methusala," the poet presents a socialist to us who, in spite of his alleged socialist sentiments holds fast to the good old manners and virtues of the bourgeoisie. "Bourgeois manners may be snobbish manners, they may offer no kind of pleasure . . . but they are better than no manners at all. Many bourgeois virtues may be false, but at least they still exist." Hence bourgeois socialism, "virtuous" or "honorable" socialism. This is undoubtedly one of the sides of the artistic-political personality of the English poet. In contradictory union with this, however, there is another side to Shaw's nature. Shaw is not only a last bourgeois; he is also a last bourgeois. In his manner he recognizes and hastens the decline of capitalistic bourgeois society. Herein lies not only his literary but also his political, world-historical significance.

Bernard Shaw's Other Side.

Nonetheless, Lenin, who knew Shaw's Fabian attitude very well, described the Englishman (more exactly the English-Irishman) as "an honest fellow among our and out hypocrites," as a reformist who stands much farther to the left than the rest. In fact, no reformist has recognized and published, like Shaw, the contradictions and the weak points of bourgeois society. Altho himself bound to the existing capitalist world by a thousand ties, Shaw still sees with outright revolutionary acuteness that the culture and the ideals of the bourgeoisie have run their course, that they are devoid of their meaning. Each single truth of the bourgeoisie is a lie. Bourgeois ideology, which once had its historic force, has today become rotten and weak with age. This ideology must be demolished; its emptiness must be exposed! Shaw, standing within the camp of the bourgeoisie, is one of the most persistent, one of the most clever and successful destroyers of the ideals of the bourgeois era. By means of the social comedy, he, playfully attacks the structure of bourgeois ideology from all sides.

The bourgeoisie would very much like to make capitalistic wage-labor palatable to the workers by sentimental phrases. In Shaw's "Man and Superman" a young bourgeois "idealist" watches his chauffeur repair the damaged car with the sweat of his brow and says, while looking on: "I find very much in the dignity of labor." This remark did not make the slightest impression on Shaw's chauffeur. He answered calmly: "That's because you have never worked yourself, sir. . . . My aim is to do away with work."

According to Shaw, then, there is nothing to the "dignity of labor," as capital proclaims it. Nor does the "dignity" of the bourgeois fare any better. The latter is nothing but a legally protected robber. The Spanish robber-captain, Mendoza (in "Man and Superman"), faces the wealthy English Tanner and introduces himself to him with the words: "Allow me to introduce myself: Mendoza, president of the League of the Sierra. I am a robber. I live by robbing the rich." Whereupon Tanner replies: "I am a gentleman, I live by robbing the poor. Let us shake hands!" The essence of bourgeois society is here drastically concentrated in a single sentence.

But the gentleman is not only a robber; he is also a hypocrite, a lying fellow who, in the face of the ugliest and aspects of his world, buries his head deep in the sand. "I have the scruples of a gentleman," declares Edstaston in "Katherine the Great." The Russian gentleman, his partner, does not understand this. "In Russia a gentleman has no scruples. In Russia we look facts in the face." Thereupon Edstaston makes the reply, magnificent in a twofold sense: "In England, prince, a gentleman never looks a fact in the face, if it is an unpleasant fact. . . ."

Measured by this standard, to be sure, Shaw himself is no gentleman, either; for, as we have already seen, he has an outspoken predilection for the "unpleasant facts" of bourgeois society. Here everything has become a commodity. But then the essential content of things and accomplishments is distorted in a twofold manner. Let us take the doctor. Under capitalism he is compelled to sell his medical services the greatest number of times and in the most remunerative form. Shaw formulates it thus: "I cannot seriously injure my skin without forcing upon a surgeon the difficult self-directed question: 'Would not a handful of gold pieces be more useful to me than this man's leg to him? Could he not write just as well or even better, with one leg than with two? And the gold pieces would be so extraordinarily useful to me just now. My wife—my dear little ones—the leg may become gangrenous—it is always safer to operate—he will be well in two weeks—artificial legs are made so well now that they are really better than natural ones. . . ." This schism, which arises from the innermost nature of capitalist society, can only be done away with, concludes Shaw quite correctly, thru the socialization of the medical profession. Until then the medical profession will necessarily remain what it is at present, "a conspiracy for the exploitation or the general credulity and human suffering."

What Shaw says otherwise about bourgeois culture with its normal hours, its air & sunshine and hundred other graft, is at a glance which can be required by every poor devil in a shoe time it only one takes the trouble to "Pigs along to the etc. . . . and read in Shaw's different writings themselves, or it can be heard from off the stage. Only two of Shaw's "successes" because of their highly pointed social-democratic character, are excluded upon Shaw's mandate, the role of fashion in bourgeois society and his discussion of the problem of force. Both are found in the Salvation Army drama, "Major Barbara," that comedy in which the poet, in certain sentences, comes closest to a revolutionary concept of things.

The cannon king, Undershaft, declares serenely: "All religious organizations exist because they sell themselves to the rich." The defender of the Salvation Army exclaims indignantly "Not the Army! It is the church of the poor." Whereupon the capitalist replies cynically: "One more reason for buying it." Now the Salvation Army man becomes angry. "I don't believe that you know exactly what the Salvation Army is doing for the poor." Answer: "Oh yes, I know it pulls their teeth. That is enough for me—as a business man. . . ." "How so? Why, religion makes the workers altruistic!" "Indifferent to their own interests, that suits me to a T. It directs their thoughts towards heavenly things . . . And not towards trade unions or socialism. Splendid!" We see, the social role of religion is clearly grasped and, indeed—may Shaw not be offended—entirely in the sense of the accursed Marxism.

At the end the problem of power is then cut into. "Spiritual" power alone, about which the reformist friends of Bernard Shaw rave so soulfully, is in no way adequate; material power must lie at the basis of it. The head master, Cusins, converted from his Salvation Army craze, declares: "I gave the educated man weapons against the common man in that I taught the former Greek. Now I shall give the common man weapons against the educated man." His bride says: "Is there no higher power than this?" She points to a bomb. "Yes," answers Cusins, "but this power can destroy the higher powers, just as a tiger can destroy a human being. Therefore man must first learn to control that power. I had to admit that in the last war between the Turks and the Greeks my best pupil left to fight for Hellas. I did not give him a copy of Plato's Republic as a parting gift but a revolver and hundred Undershaft cartridges."

All social pacifists who wish to see socialism brought about by purely spiritual means may confidently accept the conclusions of Shaw in these axioms.

The "Fool" of the Bourgeoisie.

How, then, is it possible, many will perhaps ask themselves, that a poet who utters such truths can be an author esteemed by the bourgeoisie and played in bourgeois theaters? The riddle is solved if we recall that Shaw is a comedy writer, that he utters all of his unpleasant remarks in the form of apparently unobligatory jests. One recalls the fool in Shakespeare's plays. This fool, under the protection of his cap and bells, could say things not openly the mere hint of which would have cost the head of anyone speaking seriously. It is just the same with Charlie Chaplin's social satire. And the both artists have certain bourgeois evils, ambiguities and deviations in common, the destructive, anti-bourgeois effect of their best work remains untouched.

To conclude. Shaw is the Shakespearean fool of later bourgeois culture. But, said Lenin in connection with the remark reproduced above, may Shaw be a buffoon for the bourgeoisie, for the revolution he is something entirely different. We may make this sentence of Lenin's more concrete. Shaw is an enemy of the bourgeoisie living in the camp of the bourgeois. By his demolition of bourgeois ideology he lets the moral authority of the ruling class works into the hands of the revolutionary proletariat struggling to overthrow this class.

In doing this it is relatively unimportant whether Shaw "wants" the proletarian revolution or whether he does not want it. Neither did the great philosophers of enlightenment of the eighteenth century want the revolution. Nevertheless they have become important spiritual well breakers of the coming social upheaval.

To Webster-Thayer-Judge-Hangman.

You have given your decision
You have dealed their appeal
Their last appeal
Not for freedom
Not for mercy,
But for justice
For a chance to prove
Their innocence
Their innocence believed in
By millions of workers
The world over.
Carry down in your soul
(If such as you have a soul)
You know damned well
That Sacco and Vanzetti
Are innocent
Innocent of robbery and murder
But guilty
For you and your kind
Of a far greater crime
A thousand times greater crime
The crime of being radical
Sacco and Vanzetti
Are guilty of despising
Capitalism
Militarism
Imperialism
And all the institutions
Sacred to the grafters.

You denied them a new trial
You want to cover up
With the martyred corpses
Of two innocent workers
The cesspool of iniquity
That is Massachusetts' justice
That is capitalistic justice
But the stench of your guilt
And the guilt of your gang
Shall rise to the heavens
And liberated posterity
Will curse your memory.

A PEEK EACH WEEK AT MOTION PICTURES

"BREAKING CHAINS."

You are going to be shown a better picture than the best picture you ever saw. "Breaking Chains" is about to start on a tour of the country. Here is a Russian-made movie acted entirely by workers who never faced the camera before and the result is the equal of any acting we have ever seen in the most praised picture. You can't realize how really good it is until you see it for yourself—and you simply MUST see it.

The photography is fine. The story is a thrilling one. It moves fast and comes to a thrilling climax that will send you away with a happy smile on your face, a little tear in your eye and determination in your heart. It begins on the barricades of Petrograd in 1917. The following events take place in the village. The story then takes you to the factories, meeting halls, educational clubs, the homes—and Lenin. It's a thrilling story of your young workers of this new revolutionary Russia. In the telling of the story you are given an intimate picture of the life in Russia—so intimate and personal you will feel and see it as no written word could ever inspire you.

A girl whose name is not given acts the leading role of a peasant girl. It is a splendid characterization. The girl herself is a chubby, healthy, round-faced typically Russian little comrade who will win your heart quicker than you could. Children act remarkably—they would surely prove a sensation in any American movie. One little fellow with a thousand or more freckles you will never forget. The men in the picture are fine, energetic types of workers and unusually good actors.

There is an inspiring atmosphere about the whole production that will astonish you. Technically, it is the equal of the very best American-made movie. In acting it is far superior. It is a picture that will hold you from the very first moment. There are moments of excellent comedy. There are dramatic spots that will bring a tear to your eye—as they did even to the unsentimental eyes of editors and others who were given the privilege of seeing it.

The International Workers' Aid has arranged the showing of the picture in this country. The first showing will be held in Chicago on Friday, December 3, at the Douglas Park Auditorium. Go to see it, comrade and fellow-worker! We promise you that you will thank us for the advice. You comrades in other cities thruout the country need not be without it. Begin today to make arrangements to have it shown in your city. Ten thousand books and ten barrels of leaflets will never do you one-half as much good as one showing of "Breaking Chains."

- THE THEATER -

"IN THIS ROOM."

The first word in review condemns this play to the category of those you should not take the time or trouble to see. The same can be said for the good that is "In This Room" (showing at the Princess Theater), while much can be said for what is bad. In a few words we can say that very good acting is being wasted on a terrible play.

Louis Wolheim does very well as Gustav Bruno, called such because "his mother did not know his father's name," but, try as he did, he could not "put over" the show. Wolheim plays a double role, as do Olive Tell and Donald Gallaher. This, however, is not a great feat, as the incidental introduction to the main part of the play at the beginning of each act and the epilogue are inconsequential.

The plot itself is not worthy of a long review. It is of hackneyed type, being the story of a playwright who writes a play which is enacted as he writes. His wife is the heroine, he is the hero and a friend is the villain. There is also a son, butler and housekeeper. Our playwright gets his inspiration from a diary which he finds in the room and some "Hennessy—1860" which probably was not as good as it was supposed to be. That may account for the result.

Adding a note of warning, if you want to have a good time, don't go to see "In This Room."

"SEED OF THE BRUTE."

A drama of America, which Eugene O'Neil could be proud of, had he written it, but which undoubtedly in certain ways is bigger and more far-reaching than anything he has ever given us, is now playing at the Little Theater, New York City. It is called, "Seed of the Brute," and the playwright is Konovlev Emrikin.

It is stark realism, yet interesting from the prologue to the end of the third act. There is no attempt made to play to the gallery or to insert comedy relief. In this reviewer's opinion, it is the most significant play by an American since "What Price Glory?" several years ago. But its field is different. It shows passion in all of its nakedness, letting us see the petty-bourgeoisie of America as they actually are. Rough and coarse language is uttered, not to make the play more attractive, but because it fits into the situations wherever used. A spade is called a spade on every occasion.

To describe the story would take up too much space. Suffice to say: "Go and see it before our 100 per cent saints close it up."

The Workers in Iron and Steel

By W. J. WHITE.

WITH the single exception of those in the textile industry, I know of no union so weak in membership as the union of iron and steel workers. The steel union, like the textile, is faced by a giant combination of industrial and finpermalistic capital which will stop at nothing in its endeavor to keep its slaves from organizing. As an outstanding and glaring example of the lengths the steel trust will go, we have the testimony of Gary that the steel trust spent fifty millions in the 1909 strike of the tin plate workers to break up their branch of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers.

The result of this merciless smashing and the unlimited millions which is appropriated to keep the workers from organizing is summed up in the testimony of Gary before the "Industrial Relations Committee," when questioned, in his answer. "Yes, we spent a lot of money, but we made a lot of tin workers." So merciless is the combination in its hatred of the union that they will not even tolerate that panacea of the business world for its numerous ills, the company union.

Company Union Needed.

PERHAPS in this they are wise, for In the present weak Amalgamated Association, whose membership is largely composed of the highly skilled and fairly paid upper strata of workers who remain silent and refrain from resistance to the encroachments of the trust, they have a splendid substitute for the company union. They thus get rid of the trouble which they must incur in controlling a union run on the B. & O. plan, while in officers such as M. F. Tighe and D. J. Davis they have the ideal officials of a union which is the best possible substitute for the company class-collaboration union. The policy of this official-dom seems to be to keep the organization at a membership that will pay their salaries, align a few scales, which the companies are willing to sign, and thus keep the rank and file hypnotized into the belief that they are members of a bona fide union. The strength of the union at the present time, as reported to the last convention, was a fraction over eleven thousand out of a possible six hundred thousand. D. J. Davis, the secretary-treasurer, reported at the convention held in Pittsburgh last April that they had lost 321 members during the year.

Spent $60,000 for New Members.

M. F. TIGHE reported they had spent $60,000 and had had 20 organizers in the field and had only brought into the association 100 members, at a cost of over $600 dollars per member. Needless to say, this is a pleasing condition of things in the steel industry to Gary and the officers of the trust. This does not include the wages and expenses of the special organizers of the association, whose wages and expenses will run close to $10,000 for the year.

That there is a growing unrest within the membership of the Association and also among the great mass of unorganized goes without saying. Many of the workers are ready to rebel, and all that is needed is the courageous, the right men at the head and a militant left wing is an assured fact. This leadership cannot and will not come from the present officials, nor will it come out of the so-called progressives, which include such workers as A. M. Jennings of Granite City, John Stose of Cannonsburg, who are honest and fearless, but whose hands are tied by the weak and vacillating membership who continue to confine their work within their own organized membership, and who refuse or who cannot or will not see the splendid opportunity for a militant organization of workers amongst the hundreds of thousands of unorganized who compose the great mass of workers in this most basic industry, and who are robbed and fleeced by the most ruthless band of industrial and imperialistic capitalists the world has ever seen.

Foster Did it once.

"BILL" FOSTER started such a movement in 1919, but he was hamstrung by Gompers and Tighe, who could see the rising tide of revolt of the steel slaves overwhelming them. This they did not wish, hence they did everything to kill the movement, with the result that it fell a victim to the machinations of Tighe and Davis, who, if they are not being paid by the capitalists at the head of the trust, are doing the kind of work the trust officials want done.

A militant left wing will come out of the steel industry when the time is ripe, but when it comes it must be led by men who have been trained in leadership and in the class struggle. Personally, I see no future for organization outside of the workers who have had such training, and there is no greater work the Communist Party can do than prepare men to lead these workers when the hour strikes, as strike it will in the not far distant future.

The Communist Movement in Iceland

By GUNNLAUGUR BJORNSON

In order to throw some light on the progress of the Communist Party in Iceland, it would be desirable to note the historic development of the country and its relationship to the outside world. This, however, is no mean task; starting to it could not be accomplished in a short article of this kind. But there are some main factors we must touch upon if there is to be any comparison drawn between the Communist movement in Iceland and the rest of the world. One might say that this is "much ado" about an insignificant country. The answer is that nothing is too small for a Communist point of view if it widens our knowledge.

In Iceland there is no industrial proletariat to speak of. Industries are few and have no possibilities of development beyond a certain amount of home production, excepting the fishing industry and dairy farming, which form the principal exports of the country. The population of approximately 120,000 is scattered over an area larger than that of Scotland or Ireland, an area of which probably four-fifths is uninhabitable.

Transportation is mainly by horseback riding, automobiles and small coastal steamers, under municipal or government ownership. Roads are good, but costly of building and upkeep.

Since 1906 a network of telephone lines connect the remotest villages in the country, and about the same time a cable communication between the Shetland Islands and Iceland brought it in daily contact with the whole world.

As already mentioned, the majority of the population is engaged in the fishing industry and dairy farming, the conditions of which as a whole strangling, hard-to-meet both ends, weather-beaten and frost-bitten individuals, with back and there an "aristocrat" who pulls down his fat, without working for it himself—usually the municipal representative of the community. Not so with the sea man. He is the big brother of the "land proletariat" wage worker, and, like him, is organized into one of the strongest unions. These union men have a score or two marked on the butt of their arms, indicating victories over the bosses. The building trades, common laborers and harbor workers form another main section of the working class part of which is comprised of migrating wage laborers, shifting according to seasons from the towns to the agricultural districts in the summer, and back again to the towns in the fall and winter.

Common education in the inland persists of any comparison. The language is one. And illiteracy is unknown.

Early in the year 1916 the workers of Iceland created their own political party for the first time in history. This is now a mass party, capable of a real opposition to the old parties and, in fact, the only adversary to be reckoned with by the conservative party in power. Unlike other labor parties, or perhaps it is the only one of a kind that serves the double purpose of a federation of labor and a political party at the same time. The unions are members by affiliation, and are the backbone of the party.

An auxiliary committee to the general party apparatus heads the affiliated unions in a capacity of a federation committee, which has the power to call and terminate strikes, formulate the general policy, etc. At the present time one-third of the votes on this committee are Communist.

The general executive committee of the labor party is dominated by the social democrats. There is only one Communist on the G. E. C., Comrade Olafur Fridriksson, one of the foremost Communist leaders in Iceland. He was Iceland's representative in Moscow, 1923.

Some time after his return from Russia his home was stormed by the entire police force of the capital. Fridriksson and some other comrades were taken prisoners, with arms in their hands defending the place. Special citizens' militia was established and guards were thrown around the state prison. For months the papers gave their front pages to anti-Communist propaganda.

The labor union "Dawn" in Reykjavik is the oldest union in the land. It is over 30 years old. It has a membership of about 700 to 800, of mostly unskilled laborers. In the beginning this union was not what the name implied, having in its ranks many contractors and employers, who in later years have gradually been weeded out of it. The union published a weekly called "Dawn," which at the foundation of the labor party was taken over by it. In 1919 the name of the paper was changed to "Workers News." It is a daily.

Everything went smoothly with the party policy until 1921, when differences between the Communists and the social democrats took a sharp turn, and in the fall of 1922, when Comrade Fridriksson, editor of the Workers News, was to be sent to Russia, the general executive committee immediately threatened him with the loss of the editorship, and while he was away in Moscow a new editor was appointed. But in spite of all this there has always existed a unity of action in election campaigns, and in strikes.

The labor party holds biennial conventions, to which are elected one delegate from each affiliated organization, and one delegate for every 100 members or a major fraction thereof. The convention elects a general executive committee of nine members for a term of two years.

The party is sprinkled with bourgeois intellectuals, professionals and middle of the trading classes. These elements, with the social democrats, have the upper hand in the leadership. But on real issues the Communists lead the rank and file workers. The policy of the social democrats is and has been to look for an opportunity to force a split in the party and try to isolate the Communists from all contact with the movement, but all signs indicate that they will fail in their aims.

The Communist movement in Iceland is older than it is in the United States. On a miniature scale (compared with the great nations), this Communist group is going thru the same internal struggles that seem to be a necessary process in cleansing and steeling all Communist parties for the great struggles ahead. The problems facing the Icelandic Communist Party are in a measure the same as in all the other parts of the world, but on the Pacific coast and Canada with its mass movement there are opportunist tendencies forming a minority faction, willing to make petit bourgeois deals with the social democrats for a few crumbs in the leadership, who have just faith in their own ability to fight and to lead. And on the other hand, the group that fights on policy and believes it will win the masses for that policy in the end.

A Glimpse of the Youth Movement in Soviet Russia

By ROSE KATZ.

I was invited to address a mass meeting held under the auspices of the Moscow Health Workers' Club in celebration of International Women's day on March 8th. They were eager to know about the activities of the women workers of America. At the end of my address many questions were asked of me about the women's movement as well as about the women's activities in America. I was obliged to, promise the large group of Young Communists and Pioneers who were present that I would attend another meeting with them and endeavor to answer all they wanted to know about the Youth Movement of America.

Two weeks later I attended a meeting of the Young Communists. I told them of the difficult task confronting the Young Workers League of America in building up their organization, in combatting the capitalist propaganda in the schools, the churches, the movies and many other agencies of the capitalists which mold the mind of the youth of America.

Slowly but surely the Young Workers League was learning how to work, within the masses, how to build up shop nuclei, how to organize workers' sport clubs as opposed to capitalists' sport clubs, how to build up the Young Pioneers, to combat the activities of the Boy and Girl Scouts and how to counteract the militarist propaganda and overcome the religious and racial prejudices that keep the workers divided.

I told them that the Young Workers League of America was playing a significant part in the task now confronting the Communist movement in America in building up the unions. In the textile centers, in the mine fields and steel districts members of the Young Workers League are often found playing an heroic and leading part in these epic struggles of the American workers. I mentioned the beginnings that have been made in building up of Communist educational institutions.

I did not try to paint too rosy a picture. I spoke of the many blunders and mistakes that have been made, of the many times rebuilding was necessary because of faulty construction. But the Young Workers League of America was Communist in spirit, able to profit from their mistakes and unafraid to face difficulties. It would surely be a worthy part of the Young Communist International to whom they look for inspiration and guidance in the task confronting them in the United States.

They listened to me with the closest attention and from the many questions that were asked of me it was evident that they were by no means uninformed of what was going on in America. The following are some of the many questions that were asked: What were the American workers doing to help the British miners? Was the Young Workers League now organized on the shop nuclei basis? How about Mexico, Haiti and other victims of American imperialism? Would Mooney and Billings soon be freed? Would the workers succeed in saving the lives of Sacco and Vanzetti? Do the unions still prevent colored workers from joining? What was being done to protect the interests of young workers?

At the end of the meeting a resolution was passed conveying the greetings of those assembled to the workers of America and expressing confidence that the American movement would succeed in breaking the capitalist shackles and building up a workers and farmers' government in America.

Through my work with the Moscow Health Department I came in constant contact with the Young Communists and Pioneers. Children born since the October revolution are known as octobrists. They are organized and participate in parades under their own banners. Their ages are from five to eight and are under the guidance of the Pioneers.

From ages of eight to fifteen the children belong to the Pioneers. Though it is not compulsory to belong, most children are eager to join its ranks. Branches of the Pioneers are in every school. Besides their regular school work the Pioneers themselves conduct classes in economics. The school period is about seven years, at the end of which time they have completed the prescribed courses in economics and are now eligible to join the Young Communists. The Pioneers also conduct summer camps and participate in all kinds of outdoor and athletic activities. They have their own periodicals and periodicals. Their motto is, "always ready." The young Communist League is responsible for the welfare of the Pioneers.

Not all the Pioneers become members of the Young Communist League. Membership in the Young Communist League means obligations that all are not ready to undertake. Before I join disciplinary workers from the shop must first go through a period of six months probation, and office and professional workers must go through a probation of two years.

The Young Communist League is responsible for a good deal of serious work for the Communist movement in Russia. They conduct much of the organization work amongst the masses. It is expected of them to at all times guard the interest of the young workers and peasants. Besides themselves carrying on an intensive study of political and economic subjects they conduct classes to raise the political level of the masses. Their main tasks are in the nuclei of the unions and the factories. Non-party workers look to them for any redress of grievances and for improvements in conditions. They are also concerned in the raising of productivity. Their daily organ is the Young Communist Pravda, but they also have innumerable magazines, periodicals and wallpaper bulletins. They have organized many cultural and athletic activities amongst the masses. The fact is that in every undertaking of the Communist Party the Young Communist League plays an important and effective role.

THE STUDENTS IN REVOLT

By HARRY KLETZKY.

The Russian Revolt is sending cold shivers down the backs of the American capitalists. And the capitalists are not nearly as disturbed over the alleged moral lapses of the younger generation as they are over their discarding of all the props that have been erected to support the present economic system.

This revolt of the present day youth against the indigestible fodderies which are being stuffed down their throats is making itself evident strongly in one of the most powerful units of the capitalistic system—the college campus.

Because the college students are at the age where even their youthful powers of rationality, such as they may be, are able to penetrate the imbecilic fetishes that are thrust at them in the guise of mental and spiritual nourishment, the Y. M. C. A., the Rotary Club and all its ilk of prepathic bally-hooers, the commerce clubs and "big business" men, ostensibly spurred on by a neurotic sense of philanthropy, but more truly by a remarkably intelligent insight as to what is happening are taking keen interest in what the youngsters are doing in the colleges and churches.

Hence every college student body in the country is hopelessly bored and made the helpless victims of barrages of words by alleged "success" lecturers and fawning ministers who swarm to the college platforms, at the behest of the "big boys," to instill in the hearts of the "great American youth" the fear of god and the virtues of capitalism. True, once in a great while, when the college trustees are napping or busy chipping bond coupons or pay envelopes, a speaker gets by the "chapel committee" and tells the students some of the things they are clamoring to know. But these times are so rare and cause so much furore in America Legion, W. C. T. U. and Rotary meetings, ending with the dismissal of at least three social science professors (suspected of a tinge of pinkness) that the students barely have their intellectual appetites whetted, and are given a worse dose of capitalistic virtue than before.

How the students manage to survive is both a puzzle and a compliment to their power of endurance. But they are surviving and each year despite these attempts of the capitalists, the colleges are producing young men and women who are thinking, or, at least, who are beginning to realize that there is something to think about. Not much credit for this, however, can be given to the average college. Most of them are thinking, not because of the colleges, but despite them. Many a bearded professor of economics looks back with horror on the memory of students who received his instruction and kept him awake nights trying to think of "theories" which would stand the bombardment of the renegades who refused to accept his textbook dribblings.

Back in the former years a teacher of economics in college had a fairly easy time. His theories in support of the present system were accepted as readily as the bible. But not so to-day. The economics professor is the most punished member of the college faculty—that is, if he is the kind that handshakes with the university president every morning, is a member of the Rotary Club, and his wife has social aspirations. Of course, there are some professors who delight in the new spirit of the collegians and even foster it. But these are rare, and when their popularity becomes too great are soon slated for the "can."

The modern college president is being driven frantic by the awakening. Perhaps both Nicholas Murray Butler's and Mayo brothers' nervous prostration because of an "outbreak" on the campus that caused the donor to believe that he was contributing to a university that was developing "reds" rather than the promised "safe and sound" 100 per cent citizens.

His main job is not to supervise education, but to raise money and endowments for "good old College," usually for the purpose of constructing football stadiums. And as he sticks out one mit to the meat packers, oil magnates, big corset manufacturers and mail-order millionaires, he has to use the other to place over the mouths of his students. Many a big gift has been withdrawn and many a college president has been sent to the rescue of those who had betrayed the miners, calling upon the congress in the name of a million striking miners not to open the question of the betrayal. Without Cook's active support on the floor, the general council would never have succeeded in shutting off all discussion as they did, even tho they maintained control of the machinery of the congress. Cook, after all the magnificent fight he has done for the miners, had again allowed him self to be trapped and used as an instrument against the miners by their betrayers in the general council. Never was there forcibly brought forth the importance of a clear leadership, and the disastrous effects of muddle-headedness which cannot be remedied by the best of intentions.

The observer is especially struck by the enormous weight of tradition carried by the British delegates in their higher organizations. And it was the most promising thug seen for years in the British movement.

The so-called left leaders made a miserable showing. Purcell spoke on international unity; the substance of it was to show that unity is impossible, and that the Russians are making the bulk, each delegate knowing that the Russians were difficult. Another him, the speech of Brown, delegate of the Amsterdam International, sounded like a very left-wing speech; Brown proposed a platform of 11 practical tasks upon which he that united action could be achieved; these included international financial assistance for strikes, prevention of international blacklegging, and other things. He did not explain why Amsterdam refuses all offers of joint action along these lines in concrete cases. That erstwhile "left," Hicks, appeared before the congress principally as the defendant to the charge of having split the Building Workers' Federation, of which the congress seemed to believe him guilty, for his motion was rejected after opposition by the other building unions.

From beginning to end of the congress a constant fight was made by the little group of militant delegates, members of the minority movement, to bring to congress to face its tasks, unloosening their way thru the wire entanglements of legalism thrown up by the general council, they continually hammered away. Every motion that touched real problems, every discussion on the report of the general council, was initiated and led by this little group of revolutionary unionists. The others had nothing to offer but frantic defense and appeals for "toleration." Outstanding figures of the revolutionary minority on the floor of the congress, who made life uncomfortable for the general council, were Jack Tanner, of the Engineers' Union; Horner, of the Miners' Union; Elsbery, of the German Workers; Chandler, of the Railway Clerks, Looker, of the National Union of Railwaymen; Strain, of the Wood Workers; Mrs. Bradshaw, of the Textile Workers; and McLoughlin, of the Iron Fitters. This little group, with a few other faithful ones, stood in this congress as the herald of the new leadership to come, the only sign of hope today in the British labor movement.

Impressions of the Bournemouth Congress

By EARL BROWDER.

After sitting thru a week of meetings of the Trade Union Congress at Bournemouth, England, I came away with one impression dominating all the others, anxious as to how it was possible for a great national body of labor, with delegates from every section and every industry, to meet for six days without a serious word being spoken by its leaders on the tremendous struggle which is shaking the British economic system to its foundations. And that these leaders should also be able to so effectively muzzle the opposition is astonishing to one from outside of Britain. A few impressions of an eye-witness of the congress may help to an understanding of the extraordinary events of Bournemouth.

Arthur Cook, leader of the miners, bears a large share of the responsibility for the failure of the congress to meet its responsibilities. Even the congress dominated by officials bitterly hostile to him, responded to Cook and the miners very deeply; Cook's appearance on the floor was the occasion of the first demonstration of enthusiasm in the congress. This was but a faint reflection of the deep feelings among the masses outside the congress. Cook occupied a position of tremendous potentialities. But he failed completely to make use of them. When the small group of minority movement delegates launched their main attack upon the general council, it was Cook who came to the rescue of the council, and who, by his "courtesy" required that these things should not be talked about. Tradition and precedent united with "courtesy," to give the president, Mr. Pugh, power to interrupt and close the speech of any delegate who said anything about the crimes of the general council, while the council members themselves must be listened to with gravity. Never have expressions of any development of the Bournemouth congress was when an elemental outburst of resentment against the insult of Bromley speaking as supporter of a motion for the miners' relief, developed to such an extent that Bromley, after standing for 25 minutes waiting for silence, had to give up and the general council adjourned. Such a thing never happened before in the 58 years of the T. U. C.; it called the general council members and the capitalist press. This was the first time the workers had ever broken thru the maze of precedent, tradition, and "gentlemanly conduct," which are the fetters which forge the activity of their higher organizations. And it was the most promising thing seen for years in the British movement.

The so-called left leaders made a miserable showing. Purcell spoke on international unity; the substance of it was to show that unity is impossible, and that the Russians are making the bulk, each delegate knowing that the Russians were difficult. # Anatole France - - By A. V. Lunacharsky

The newspapers brought the sad news of the death of Anatole France, one of the most significant writers of our time.

Anatole France is such a unique figure in modern European culture that to judge and evaluate him is a very difficult thing and one which can be done from the most diverse points of view. I shall attempt to give a short sketch of his development and a few touches of his social-cultural growth.

Anatole France was born in 1845; his life may be divided into three parts. From his first work written in 1875—to the Dreyfus Affair; from the latter to the World War; and the last period from the war up to the present. Anatole France began as a Parnassien. The Parnasse was an extraordinary refined school of bourgeois culture. Up to the time of the Commune, the intellectuals of the bourgeoisie were permeated with a certain bitter pessimism. The ruin of the regime of the big bourgeoisie called forth a certain nausea in the best part of the French intelligentsia. The intellectuals tried to separate themselves from the spirit of the merchants and the inhumanity which found an especially raw expression under the regime of Napoleon III and of the bourse. At the same time, this intelligentsia had not the slightest intention of organizing any kind of effective, political protest. Among the gifted poets and writers, there were only very few who had an inclination towards politics. The politics of the government seemed impure, the revolutionary politics—fantastic; all that lay between—petty and useless. Hence the striving of the artists after formal content, hence their philosophic reflections on the imperfections of life and their heightened pessimism. These were the features with which the leaders of those days, the leaders of the Parnasse, were endowed: Lecomte de l'Isle, the romanticist akin to him, Alfred de Vigny, such masters as Heredia, Gautier and others. The same spirit also dominated the great romanticist Flaubert.

The young Anatole France did not exactly incline towards pessimism, but he likewise felt himself to be a pure esthete, far from the hideous chaos of life, filled with the plastic wisdom common to the chosen strata of the refined bourgeois intelligentsia. Skepticism predominated in Anatole France already then. In his eyes, all truths were uncertain and vacillating. Towards Christianity he maintained a mocking attitude; he liked to oppose to it epicurean, heathen moods. In the eyes of Anatole France, the world had nothing serious to exhibit, and even this world seemed to him the product of chance. If life were worth living, then solely for the sake of the esthetic enjoyment, the esthetic working-up of experiences, and still more—its esthetic reproduction.

Already then, Anatole France stood out as a prominent stylist. At the bottom, that which constituted Anatole France's unique charm, was the union of his eclectic style, of his immense knowledge of all epochs from which he chose his themes, with his fine skeptical smile, which shone forth from all of his pictures and characters (as if he were smiling a little at his own marionettes, as if he wanted to say that he no less than anything else belonged to this marionette world).

With his "Abbe Coignard"—a wise toper and skeptic whom he had set in the midst of the middle ages—Anatole France had brought himself fame not only in France, but thruout the whole world. At the same time he also stepped to the foreground as a critic. It is very characteristic that Anatole France, in this his last quality, adhered exclusively at the time to the formal artistic performance. Zola, who at that time began to draw the serious furrow of his deep-reaching naturalism, inspired him with horror, and France wrote an article on him at that time, which is more like an exasperated pamphlet than a critical essay. Kurdjin, the not unknown Russian publicist of social-revolutionary tendency, dedicated an article to Anatole France and Jules Lemaitre, a similar gourmet in the field of esthetic culture, in which he does not differentiate the one from the other at all.

Anatole France, from all appearances a representative of the skeptical literature of decadence of the seventies and eighties, differed nevertheless very essentially from Jules Lemaitre, which was sufficiently demonstrated by the Dreyfus affair. The skeptic, Jules Lemaitre, as a true bourgeois, was joined by the monarchic-catholic reaction. How was this possible? Why could Jules Lemaitre and other representatives akin to him, as for example Barres, believe that gross fraud of the general staff and sink down to the most naive religiosity, to the most reactionary repudiation of all freedom? Could this all really be due to the Jewish captain and his involved guilt?

No, the matter is otherwise.

To a certain extent, the French bourgeoisie drew the writers near to itself, those writers who up till then had occupied themselves with cultivating hothouse flowers. The French bourgeoisie was preparing itself for a new struggle. Socialism was maturing, a whole cloud of proletarian organizations, parties, parasols pressed for the time being isolated over Paris. In the air, as in every social period, there gathered strong conflicts. The French bourgeoisie decided to [illegible] its state. [illegible] classic representative of the radical republic seemed the whole [illegible] Clemenceau, [illegible] thing the entire book of explanation even caused the ok plus [illegible] for [illegible] to be [illegible] the most extraordinary duplicity. But Anatole France, just because of the fineness of his culture, proved himself proof against these aberrations. His trained healthy mind could not stand that unbearable nonsense with its hypocritic savour which sounded from the right. His skepticism turned against the black expanding reaction.

Confused by its sudden onslaught, Anatole France searched after people who would be fit to defend that highest culture of freedom, of polished scientific analysis, of luminous humanity which he considered as the sole possible atmosphere for the thriving of a culture. And then it appeared that the same unsouth writer whom he considered a doughbottle wallowing in the dirt, Emile Zola, suddenly became the heroic bearer of a protest of the best part of the petty bourgeois intellectuals in the struggle against the military clerical counter-revolution. Thus was consummated the drawing-nearer of all fragments of all those who struggled against France sinking into a churchly, barrack-like night. Zola, Anatole France and Jaures became friends. It is pleasant and touching when, after the abuse of the young Anatole France directed against Zola, one reads the enthusiastic essays which the older Anatole France later dedicated to him after he had understood how much warm, upright, truthfulness, how much true love-of-man was hidden in this heavy genre-painter. Anatole France began to examine anew the latter's artistic aspects too, and a whole series of beauties hitherto hidden to him, revealed themselves to his enthusiastic esthete-eye. From that time on, he becomes the best friend and co-worker of Jaures. He participates most warmly in the Dreyfus Campaign, and remains even later a faithful ally of the socialism of the time, certainly a quite feeble and compromising socialism, but still far more noble than anything that the France of that time could present. His political labor, at times, gives one an odd, I should like to say, absolutely touching impression. I remember, for example, an enormous meeting at Trocadero, where from 4,000 to 5,000 citizens gathered in order to protest against the first assault upon China, against that notorious campaign of the European Robber-Knights which one of its leaders, William II himself, called a march of the Huns. Jaures spoke first; his voice rang out like a blare of trumpets; it rolled to the most distant corners of the immense hall. Following him, came the fine elegant old man, Anatole France, and, in a weak voice, read his venomous remarks directed against the imperialists. And the entire hall, packed full of workers, seemed to die away; the buzzing of the flies was heard; all leaned forward, almost all put their hands up to their ears in order not to lose a single word of what this noble artist, this aristocrat from the far heights of the elegant Parnasse was saying. With a mocking smile, the speaker said: "Are you know, the unexpressed international arrangement allows the Chinese to defend themselves against modern artillery, at any rate, with porcelain cannons. And now these Chinese seriously begin to defend themselves. Such an attack of primitive civilized is simply unforgivable. The fellows manifest—patriotism! They are inclined to defend their barbarous homeland from the claws of our dear fatherlanders who manifest the natural lust for nourishing themselves with the flesh and blood of these low beings. This haughty people must be shown that civilization deprives it of the right of resistance."

These words in essence Anatole France said with his soft voice, but which was loud enough to be heard by the entire civilized world; it was then that he called out the words so real now: "Hands off China!"

In this period of the Dreyfus affair up to the World War, the brilliant literary activity of Anatole France unfolded itself. The "Histoire contemporaine" belongs here first of all. In his time the mighty Balzac wrote an enormous series of novels under the title of "La Comedie Humaine." In this series of novels, the extraordinarily interesting history of a society is portrayed in which capitalism developed and intrenched itself. Balzac was the favorite author of Marx. Something similar must have been in Anatole France's mind too. He too wanted to portray his time in a series of novels. But how great is the difference! His colors are pale and polished, all events cross the brain of a clever painter of a hesitating pessimist, insufficiently [illegible] In this favor [illegible] the Anti-[illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Dist rict Convention of the Finnish Workers' Clubs, held in Superior, Wis., on November 14, adopted a resolution emphasizing the need of The DAILY WORKER for the Communist movement, which should be read by all revolutionary workers. The resolution, which pledges the support of the Finnish Workers' Clubs to The DAILY WORKER, reads as follows:

This convention is fully aware that all efforts to build the Communist movement in America amongst English-speaking people would be in vain without a daily organ in the English language.

We realize that to bring in and to preserve the class movement of thousands of Finnish-American youths in middle states is an impossibility without a daily organ in English, and therefore, to our regret, our lifelong work for the revolutionary movement would ha in vain.

We also realize that the publishing of a daily paper in a big city with a small circulation and without advertisement revenue is too hig of a burden for the small group of English-speaking workers who at present are in the Communist movement.

Therefore, this convention calls upon Finnish workers to rally their forces to assist The DAILY WORKER and ask that all Finnish workers' societies and clubs would energetically support The DAILY WORKER in its present financial campaign. We ask them to donate money from their treasurics, arrange entertainments and make collections, etc., and thereby demonstrate that we are willing to bear our shara in the work of building up an active Communist movement in America.

At the same time as we ask Finnish workers' clubs to rally around the present financial campaign of The DAILY WORKER, we particularly emphasize the fact, that The DAILY WORKER'S financial position in the future can be best safeguarded and best guaranteed by enlarging the circulation of The DAILY WORKER and its litarature and by so doing, we can guarantee The DAILY WORKER without special appeals.

Let us therefore adopt the slogan: 25,000 Subscribers for The DAILY WORKER During the Yeer 1927. Let us make The DAILY WORKER'S circulation work in all workers' clubs an honorary duty and make sure of that by electing comrades who know the English language, for that work.

Long live The DAILY WORKER!
Le - live the Communist movement of America!
Lo. .e the workers' and farmers' government!

This .esolution brings out strongly what The DAILY WORKER means to all revolutionary workers. It should be the signal for intensification of the support given The DAILY WORKER in raising the $50,000 Keep the Daily Worker Fund, nc. only among the Finnish workers, but among all workers who support the principles and program which The DAILY WORKER is fighting for.

The figures above show that we have raised 40% of the $50,000 fund thus far. During the last two weeks, in place of raising $5,000 each week, only a little over $5,000 has been raised during these two weeks.

Complete the $50,000 Keep the Daily Worker Fund thru united support of The DAILY WORKER.

THIS MUST BE THE ANSWER TO THE APPEAL OF THE FINNISH WORKERS' CLUBS AS STATED IN THEIR RESOLUTION.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE Republican stalwarts in the United States senate hope that they can organize the next congress with the aid of the so-called insurgents. While this is quite possible it might be wise to wait a few days before jumping to conclusions. The LaFollette group in the senate were not born yesterday and any flies that may have tickled their noses in the past are a long time dead. If they find it to their advantage to make peace with the G. O. P. devil, they will do so, if not, they will continue to harass the elephant by throwing an occasional carrot to the democratic jackass.

THAT the leaders of the G. O. P. should entertain hopes of being permitted to kill the fatted calf for the recalcitrants, shows how little fundamental difference there is between the position of the "progressive republicans" and the standpatters. Indeed, old "fighting Bob" himself was the bosom friend of Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania, as reactionary a tool of capitalism as ever sat in the senate. The so-called progressives are now in a favorable position to make a good bargain with the old gang. They use up some time haggling for a better price but they belong in the fold of the G. O. P.

SAMUEL INSULL did not spend all his money electing Frank L. Smith to the senate from Illinois or the two K. K. K. senators from Indiana. He still has a few dollars left.

School Board Voids Flag Salute Ruling to Avoid Test Case

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 21. — The school board of this city has caved in and has waived the compulsory saluting of the flag on the part of 50 children from the families of Jehovites, a religious sect. The Jehovites, while professing their patriotism, objected on religious grounds to a salute to a symbol of temporal power. Their children were barred from school last year under the ruling of the board.

While also opposed religiously to litigation, the sect finally consented to the action of the American Civil Liberties Union in bringing a test case. The board forestalled this action by readmitting the offending youngsters.

Andrews Asks Medicinal Liquor.

WASHINGTON —The request of Gen. L. C. Andrews, dry "czar," for legislative authority to reopen distilleries for making liquor for medicinal purposes has stirred up both wet and dry members of congress. The request has provoked enthusiasm among the wets, while none of the dry leaders are willing to give it unqualified approval.

JUDGE PRESCRIBES THANKSGIVING IN JAIL FOR STRIKERS ON PICKET DUTY

BELLEVILLE, Ill. Nov. 21.—Twenty-nine striking union workers, employes of the Belleville Enameling & Stamping Co. and the Roesch Enamel Range Co. will spend Thanksgiving in jail and be called on to pay fines as well, as a result of Circuit Judge Crow sentencing them for contempt of court in an alleged violation of an injunction against picketing.

EMPIRE'S END SEEN IN NEW COLONY PACT

Dominions Guaranteed Full Autonomy

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 21.—As the price for holding together the British empire for yet awhile, the representatives of His Majesty's government here have been forced to make concessions to the British dominions of a nature that in themselves are sure indications of the disintegration of the once closely knit empire upon which the sun never set.

The debate at the British empire conference now concluded in London on the question of the status of the dominions, that began with the independence declaration made by Premier Hertzog of South Africa and seconded by Mackenzie King of Canada, has resulted in the drawing of a document with far-reaching historical significance. The pact agreed upon by the British foreign office and the dominion premiers is a sure sign of the fast approaching dissolution of the empire that, however, has been temporarily halted by the granting of unprecedented concessions by the home government.

Big Guarantees.

The premiers insisted upon, and received in writing, guarantees of complete autonomy in handling their national affairs and also exacted definite guarantees of power in the conduct of international affairs. While the diplomatic document on the subject makes large of the "voluntarism" upon which the empire is presumed to have been based, the open acknowledgement of the equal status between the home government and the dominions hereafter, makes it plain that the closed debates which were held at the conference were marked by many dominion ultimatums that Chamberlain and Balfour were forced to concede.

Among the particular acts of the conference making the dominions entirely self-governing are the following:

Governor Generals Stripped.

Hereafter, the governor generals in the colonies will have the status merely of a king and he the personal representative of George V, but will in no sense represent the home government. A new system of communications is worked out to reconcile this with future practice. The colonies will have "direct access" to the king and will themselves have high commissioners in London to deal directly with the home government instead of thru the governor-general as heretofore.

Whenever the king acts in dominion matters, he will be required to act on advice of the dominion government. Especially in the matter of mercantile regulations, the dominions are granted

BRITISH CAPITALISTS WILL HELP FRANCE IF FRANC IS STABILIZED

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Nov. 21.—What was carefully announced as a "courtesy visit of Reginald McKenna, former British chancellor of the exchequer, and now one of the largest bankers of the United Kingdom, to Premier Poincare has given rise to reliable reports that Great Britain bankers are planning help to France in its present financial predicament.

Help from the bankers, however, is contingent on Poincare's ability to stabilize the franc.

When questioned on the visit, Poincare stubbornly insisted it was merely "friendly" and had no significance, but he later admitted that France's finances were "discussed."

"Coolidge and Prosperity"

KELLOGG SHOWS HIS HOSTILITY TOWARD MEXICO

Openly Insinuates Plot Against U. S.

By LAURENCE TODD,
Federated Press.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Secretary of State Kellogg, whipped up by Ambassador Sheffield and the "war party" to a state of fury against the working-class government in Mexico, has come into the open with insinuations that the Mexican republic and the liberal party of Nicaragua, which recently was in power, are engaged in a "bolshevist" conspiracy against the United States.

That is the dangerous feature in his recent scrapping of the Central American treaty for refusal of recognition of regimes in that group of states that are not based on legal elections. It is the ominous threat behind his talk of the possibility of armed intervention in Nicaragua.

A. P. Propaganda.

The Associated Press sent out from Washington on the night of Nov. 17 a dispatch which began with this sentence. "The spectre of a Mexican-fostered bolshevist hegemony intervening between the United States and the Panama Canal has thrust itself into American-Mexican relations, already strained."

That sentence was inspired by state department officials who hate the Calles government at Mexico City, and who fear its radical influence in Nicaragua, Guatemala and other states to the southward. These officials know that the president of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, William Green, sent to the department some months ago a protest against recognition of the militarist Chamorro in Nicaragua, because he had seized power by a military coup against the liberal regime that had been elected by the help of the Nicaraguan labor unions.

Kellogg Wobbly.

When Secretary Kellogg was asked, on Nov. 18, whether, in view of this Associated Press dispatch, he would say whether the department regards Mexico and the Nicaraguan liberals as being bolshevistic, he replied that the press had carried accounts of Mexi-

YALE PROFESSOR SAYS U. S. HAS NO CASE FOR NOT RECOGNIZING RUSSIA

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 21.—"It is difficult to see how America has a valid case to nonrecognition of Russia," declared Prof. Jerome K. Davis of Yale in an address here. Prof. Davis recently returned from a trip to Russia, where he carried credentials from Senator William E. Borah, chairman of the senate foreign affairs committee to interview Soviet officials.

Davis said that he learned that Russia is willing to send a debt commission to Washington to discuss terms of settlement for the claims of American citizens against the Russian government.

"Every other leading nation in the world has found it wise to recognize the Soviet government," he said. "Sooner or later the United States will recognize the Soviet government."

Admits That King Is Quite Well

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—As the exclusive guest of Charles E. Mitchell, president of the Standard Oil National City Bank of New York, Queen Marie is spending the time she was supposed to have put in at Cleveland and Detroit being entertained by members of the Four Hundred.

The queen and what is left of her quarrelsome party are no longer concerned over King Ferdinand's health. Confronted with the barrage of reports from Europe that the king was quite well, the tale about the king's illness being the reason for the cancellation of the tour at Cincinnati no longer holds water and so add has very obligingly let the world in on the secret that the queen has lately been informed that her husband is in fairly good health.

Entourage Weary.

The queen's cross-country entourage has almost to a man, made application at rest hotels and sanitariums to recover from the gruelling experience of the special train warfare

NEW AGREEMENT SETS ASIDE THE 'LANDIS AWARD'

Building Trades Pact Gives Strike Right

The building trades council of Chicago has unanimously ratified an agreement with Chicago building employers thru the medium of the Building Construction Employers' Association which eliminates and takes the place of the poisonous "Landis Award" over which a major struggle has been raging in the Chicago building industry since 1921.

The chief feature of the agreement, which is to run for three years, is the inclusion of a clause which upholds the rights of the unions to strike and makes certain closed shop guarantees not to be found in the Landis pact. While certain objectionable features of the Landis Award are retained, the importance of the elimination of the "No strike clause" cannot be underestimated.

"Paragraph 14" Notorious.

The clause was notorious as "Paragraph 14." It forbids strikes and provided for an arbitration board pro-

CHARGE NAVY ACTS FOR U. S. MONEY POWER

Seek Control of Banks and Railways

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.— Following upon sweeping charges made by T. S. Vaca, Mexican representative of the liberal party of Nicaragua, it is reported here that the senate will be asked by one of its members to investigate the manner in which the United States is imposing itself on that republic.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Nov. 21.—The first move of arms that puts the United States in the position of direct military intervention and control of Nicaraguan affairs came when the U. S. destroyer Norton steamed to Cape Gracias and overhauled the schooner R. S. Albert on board which was Gen Sacasa, liberal leader opposed to the Diaz government.

Gen. Sacasa was bound for the Nicaraguan mainland and would have disembarked a couple of hours later if his ship had not been forced to retreat by threat of cannon from the American man-of-war.

CAPITAL'S MILITARY MEN MAKE FLANK RAID ON CIVILIAN GOVERNMENT; LOSE

WASHINGTON—Civilians and military men are at loggerheads here over the intrusion of the latter element in civic affairs. The civilians are asking: "Who's running this country, anyhow?"

When Gen. John J. Pershing recently visited the White House, in company with a retired admiral, another general, a member of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, and the president of George Washington University, to tell the president whom he ought to appoint as district commissioner, it stirred up quite a bombardment from the civilian ranks. "I think they had a nerve," exclaimed Fred S. Welter, a member of the Citizens' Advisory Council, who felt it was their privilege to do the advising. "Two generals, an admiral, and a representative of big business. All they needed was a flag!"

As if this were not enough, Maj. Amos A. Fries, chief of chemical warfare service, attempted to turn Lewisite gas on to Henry Flury, a teacher in the Eastern High School, who had turned an honest penny by winning a magazine's $5,00 prize by framing a definition of, naturalism, which Fries, who is also commander of the American legion in the District of Columbia, decided was "unpatriotic."

The gas attack was a military failure. The grand board failed to see any harm in the definition of socialism and asserted that Flury had served in the world war and had never propagated socialism in the class room. They refused to fire him.

To enhance the remedy, Fries found he had not even the backing of the American legion in his chemical warfare!

Bolshevist ideas thruout Latin America."

Gen. Calles and Foreign Minister Saenz are quoted as saying that the situation is not serious enough to warrant official action altho they privately express themselves in sympathy with the views of Gen. Obregon, who, not being in an official position at present can speak with more freedom.

Obregon a Power.

While Obregon is temporarily retired from public life because of Mexico's constitutional provision requiring presidents not to immediately succeed themselves in office, it is generally agreed that he will be Calles' successor and it is accepted that Obregon is perhaps the greatest single political force in Mexico.

He defended the Calles government stand on the catholic controversy and his statements of Friday in which he championed Latin America against Wall Street can be taken as consonant with the views of Chapultapec Castle.

False Rumors.

The rumors that have been spread in the United States, especially emphatically at a time when propaganda is put out concerning Mexico's role in Nicaraguan affairs, with regard to uprisings in various provinces of Mexico are branded as wholly inspired in Washington and Los Angeles dispatches have been telling news of large bands of de la Huerta's followers rebelling in Sonora, Durango and Jalisco. This is not true. De la Huerta's following in Mexico is negligible if it is known that the former presidential president, an enemy of both Calles and Obregon now living in the United States, is offering himself for sale to American interests who want profit by a revolution in Mexico. But his influence in the republic is entirely vitiated and all political faction is negligible in Mexican affairs.

Counterfeit Money Valued at a Half Million Destroyed

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Counterfeit money of over $500,000 face value captured by the United States secret service in the last year, has been destroyed by the treasury, it was announced today.

More than two tons of printing presses, paper, vats and other miscellaneous paraphernalia confiscated by government agents in all parts of the country went under the official axe.

DETROIT, Nov. 21.— Henry Ford, arm in arm with Prince Nicholas, conducted the royal lad about the big Fordson plant of the Ford Motor company on Saturday. ## DEATH PENALTY, DUCE SAYS, WILL SAVE ITALY FROM SPIRITUAL AGONY

By a Worker Correspondent.

ROME, Nov. 21.—Some cornars of Mussolini's mind are revealed in his comments on the law which provides the death penalty for those who try to kill the premier, the royal family or the premier. While asserting that he is completely indifferent to attempts on his life or his mom in a vain effort to turn him from "the chosen path" and his "mission," he asserts that these attempts cause "profound spiritual suffering to the people," and are followed by days of savage disturbance —which is trespassing on the premier's own preserves. To try these offenders, he says, special tribunals will serve, composed of persons chosen by himself, who will be, he naively adds, "above suspicion."

"It Hurts That We Cannot Do More for Our Daily"

A LETTER FROM A COMRADE.

Dear Comrades:

Am enclosing the amount for three monthly renawals and one dollar for sustaining fund. It is more than the commonplace when I say that I sencerely wish that I could make it a hundred times that much. IT HURTS VERY MUCH THAT WE CANNOT DO MORE FOR THE DAILY WORKER WHAT ONE'S MIND, HEART AND ENTHUSIASM PROMPTS.

But what is the matter with the Communists and revolutionary socialists? I mean the unaffiliated particularly? Old timers, have they all really retired, retired to the extent of allowing THE MOST GLORIOUS, THE MOST AGGRESSIVE AND FEARLESS, MOST INSPIRATIONAL ORGAN OF REVOLUTIONARY SOCIALISM—or Communism—in this or any other country to be in constant danger of liquidation for lack of support, for want of the necessary funds?

IT MOST BE PURE.

Do you want The DAILY WORKER to become a prostitute? Like the New York Call get to be in the end? Or like tha yellow unspeekable low Jewish Daily Forward, selling its "socialism" at so much per inch? You knew that no newspaper can exist even, much less prosper, without being subsidized, controlled by capitalist advertisers, and that a paper like The DAILY WORKER espsecially the way it is conducted and edited now, cannot hope to get or hold even when desiring to obtain or obtaining sufficient advertising to make it financially self-supporting or secure.

IT CAN BE DONE.

It must and ought to be sustained without the whole staff and the whole apperatus of the party being compelled to inaugurate periodical moneygetting campaigns when they could and should invest their time and talents to make the paper still better and the party of the American revolutionary forces more influential, more powerful and nearer to the masses. And this could be done if all sincere revolutionaries would do their duty only to a limited, a very modest extent.

We may differ in some things, we may be able to pick flaws here and there with some errors, some imperfections which no doubt exist both in The DAILY WORKER and the party it stands for, but on it (or they one) it is the only real revolutionary voice and power (I mean in the English language) and all left wing socialists, independent Communists, and sympathizers should read it, support it, keep it afloat, always with flying banners.

Yours for the cause.

N. S. REICHENTHAL, Los Angeles.

C. F. L. DEMANDS UNION TEACHER ON SCHOOL BODY

City Doctors' Union Is Seated

The Chicago Federation of Labor at its regular bi-monthly meeting Sunday afternoon, voted unanimously to place a member of the Teachers' Federation on the school board. The motion was introduced by a member of the teachers' union who pointed to the fact that the teachers in Chicago schools were entirely davoid of any avenue of appeal for their many grievances.

Recommend Miss Harrison.

Florence Curtis Harrison, secretary of the American Federation of Teachers was the union member recommended for the post. Right now teachers to make complaints concerning school conditions has been entirely abolished. For example, it was shown, classes are overcrowded, for the capacity of the teachers and the teachers have no way of bringing this grievance to the attention of school authorities. The sitting of a union member on the board would open means of appeal and constitute a way of making the teachers' demands felt.

One hundred and thirty doctors employed by the board of health as diagnosticians were represented as a union for the first time on Sunday last Saturday, Dec. 31, and President Groen of the American Federation of Labor has been invited to speak.

In reporting on organization activities, Anton Johnson said there were as many local unions in Chicago unaffiliated to the C. F. of L. as there were affiliated and that this condition required redoubled activity in the organization field of work.

$30,000 Sent to N. Y.

Delegates of the joint board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union reported that $30,000 had been forwarded from Chicago to the striking cloakmakers of New York and that more funds are to follow the next week.

A grievance committee from the Chicago Federation that was sent to visit the Superior Mattress Co. whose workers are on strike, were told to leave the premises. The company has gotten out an injunction against the strikers

Lynchings on Increase.

The number of lynchings in this country so far in 1926, as compared with 1925, show a disheartening increase of 31 over 18, according to the figures sent out by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Florida leads the country with eight; Texas has five; Mississippi, four; South Carolina and Arkansas, three each; Tennessee, two; Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, New Mexico and Virginia, each one. Two Negro women are in the number.

HOW VANDERBILT 'SOLD' DAUGHTER TO DUKE SHOWN

Title-Holder Gets Big "Dowry"

RIVERHEAD, N. Y., Nov. 21.— The 31 year old contract by which William K. Vanderbilt "sold" his daughter Consuelo for a British ducal title for his 19-year-old daughter, Consuelo, was revealed today.

The contract, a voluminous indenture between the "Most noble Charles Richard John, Duke of Marlborough, party of the first part, and William Kissam Vanderbilt, party of the second part, was found in the musty file of an obscure courthouse here. It was as formal, as cautious and as self-regarding thruout its lengthy provisions as tho the able financier was transferring a valuable piece of real estate or a valuable block of railroad bonds instead of securing a beautiful heiress into the nobility.

Distrusted Each Other.

The hitherto unpublished document revealed the shrewd bargaining by which the Duke of Marlborough shared his title right with Consuelo Vanderbilt after having wrung concession after concession from her wealthy father. It was also disclosed that the Duke and William K. Vanderbilt were mutually distrustful of one another.

The discovery of the marriage contract comes on the heels of the recent annulment of the marriage by the tribunal of the Rota at Rome.

By Gives Duke Income.

By the terms of the contract Vanderbilt settled, outright, on the Duke of Marlborough the proceeds of a trust fund of $2,500,000. From the duke was despite the fact that the couple has been divorced for several years, the Duke of Marlborough has already collected $3,100,000, and continued to receive an income of $100,000 a year from it.

In addition, Vanderbilt agreed to furnish Consuelo with an annual income of $100,000.

Provided "Sefe-Guards."

To make doubly sure that the duke got his "pile," the contract provided that in case the first trust fund in the duke's favor was voided by Consuelo's Vanderbilt relatives, on the ground that she was not of age, the duke was to receive a second trust fund of $2,500,000 which was left by William Henry Vanderbilt to William K. Vanderbilt, and which the latter promised to turn over to Consuelo.

In event of Vanderbilt's death Consuelo was to receive that second trust fund, thus insuring her an annuel income of $100,000.

Vanderbilt's distrust of his titled son-in-law was evidenced in the provision that Consuelo should not be allowed to draw in advance a single dollar of her annual income.

But this was matched by a stipulation in favor of the duke that if Consuelo should draw in excess of ten thousand pounds sterling, or $50,000 in any one year, all such funds in excess of the ten thousand pounds sterling should be paid into the ducal trust fund.

NEW AGREEMENT SETS ASIDE THE 'LANDIS AWARD'

Building Trades Pact Gives Strike Right

cided over by an umpire whose decision was final.

The building trades unions split on this question in 1921. Thirteen small crafts accepted the Landis Award. The big trades, notably the carpenters and painters, refused to abide by it. A "Citizens' Committee to Enforce the Landis Award" was created to assist the scab contractors and the struggle has been on for the past five years over this question. The Landis agreement expired this year.

Considered Victory.

Building trades union officials claim the employers were brought to time chiefly because of the huge expense involved in scab labor and the unceasing controversy over the Landis Award.

But while officials of the Builders' Association who drew up the agreement are in full accord with it, the employers' association has not yet ratified it. They meet this week to consider it. Already some employers are diffident and have expressed themselves as determined not to go along with the new agreement. There is talk of creating a new building contractors' association to continue on an open shop basis.

Wages Not Included.

The new agreement makes no provision for wages or working conditions. These matters will continue to be settled each year as heretofore. The important paragraph in the agreement follows

"This agreement shall not be construed to require members of the party of the second part to work with nonunion workmen engaged in building construction, nor to work for members of the party of the first part on any building or job for any firm or person having construction done in Cook county by nonunion workmen, provided the union of the trade in which such nonunion men are working is a member of the Building Trades council which has a similar agreement with the recognized association of employers."

While it is somewhat vaguely put its superiority over the corresponding clause laid down by Paragraph 14 of the Landis award is obvious.

Other Provisions.

The other provisions, which were also contained in the Landis document, are:

1. There shall be no limitations as to the amount of work a man shall perform during his working day.

2. There shall be no restriction of the use of machinery, tools or appliances.

3. There shall be no restriction of the use of any raw or manufactured material, except prison made.

4. No person shall have the right to interfere with workmen during working hours.

5. The use of apprentices shall not be prohibited.

6. The foreman shall be the agent of the employer.

7. The workman is at liberty to work for whomever he sees fit, but he shall demand and receive the wages agreed upon by the joint arbitration board in this trade under all circumstances.

8. The employer is at liberty to employ and discharge whomsoever he sees fit.

Back in Fold.

The constitution of the building trades unions say explicitly that no agreements shall be made signing away the right to strike. The thirteen small crafts that signed the Landis award in 1921 therefore, violated their own constitutions. But the present agreement brings these crafts back into the fold again and will probably contribute to more unity of action than has been the case since the Landis controversy.

The concession, a hang-over from the Landis award that will stand criticism is the provision concerning the handling of nonunion material by the trades. The agreement is lacking in point of establishing uniformity of contract for the various trades.

But the agreement proves, as nothing has since, the disastrous and devitalizing split in 1921, the necessity for united action on the part of all building trades workers in their struggle with the employers.

Trial of Doheny and Fall on Oil Steals Opens in Washington

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The curtain will again ring up Monday on the oil leases scandal when, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, will begin the trial on the charge of criminal conspiracy of Albert B. Fall is distinguished as being the second of Harding's cabinet to face a criminal charge, the first being Harry M. Daugherty, whose escape from conviction in New York by a hung jury was anything but a vindication of the acts of the Harding administration and the Ohio gang.

Unmasking of Traitors Must Aid the Drive for Labor Party of Masses

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE North Dakota Nonpartisan, "official newspaper of the North Dakota Nonpartisan League," in its issue of Nov. 17, removes all doubt as to the intentions of the members of the so-called LaFollette group in the United States senate to return to the "old guard" republican fold. It openly states:

"If Senator Frazier is asked to return to the party, there is no doubt that he will do so."

This sentence appears in an editorial. There is no doubt that Frazier will be asked to return. In common with the other members of this insurgent group. The first page of the same issue of the North Dakota Nonpartisan carries a big streamer headline: "Republicans Want Frazier Back in the Fold."

In editorial and news article, therefore, the full trend of the LaFollette group, as pointed out in these columns, is clearly revealed. The retreat of the once self-styled third partyites has become a rout.

The complete surrender of the LaFollette group is called a "peace agreement." It is pointed out that

"A peace agreement with insurgents is planned. The argument was that the socialist party should remain the propaganda organization while the Nonpartisan League should wage the actual parliamentary struggle and take the jobs. The result was that the socialist party was effectively destroyed in the "league" state, "the league" rose to power for a time, but its officialdom gradually slipped back into the republican party from whence they had come.

The same thing happened in Minnesota, except here the workers and farmers broke away from "league" politics sufficiently to organize completely independent of the old parties in the Farmer-Labor Party. Yet at the first opportunity, when the struggle becomes difficult, the leadership scatters both ways, back into the democratic and the republican parties. Shipstead's hesitancy in coming straightout for the Farmer-Labor Party only means that he has always been a republican, loving Wall Street's fresh pots, and that only his having been riding the farmer-labor protest in Minnesota to find a soft place for himself in the capitalist congress in Washington.

While the leadership thus exposes its treason, great numbers of the workers and farmers will go ahead their own way building their own party. The basis for the Farmer-Labor Party is strong in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, Washington and Oklahoma. It will sprout and grow in Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska, now that the halo above the heads of "prominent leaders" has crashed to the ground. There should also be an awakening of the millions of workers who cast their ballots for LaFollette in 1924 in the great industrial states, especially of the east. The treason of the leaders must develop the loyalty of the masses for the struggle for independent political action thru the Labor Party.

can abhorrence of arms reaching the liberals in Nicaragua, and whether that was evidence of bolshevism he did not care to say.

Won't Deny Statements.

Other propaganda statements which he refused to "discuss," and hance did not care to deny, were the assertions that the Mexican government is helping the Nicaragnan liberals, and that the United States will stop these shipments by blockade of Nicaraguan ports. He said the United States had never intervened with arms between warring factions in Central America, but he would not care to say now whether it would or would not do so in this case. He left the impression that President Coolidge might decide to crush the liberal revolt by force of arms.

At the same hour were made public the president's proclemation of an embargo against shipment of arms to Nicaragua from the United States, and the text of the appeal for help sent to Washington by Adolfo Diaz, the Chamorrist dummy who had been "elected" as president by the militarists. Kellogg's statement of recognition of Diaz was also made public.

Hopes Liberals Give In.

Kellogg declares that he hopes the liberals will accept amnesty and a share in the cabinet, offered them by Diaz. He claims that 45 votes were cast for Diaz in the congress out of a total membership of 64, and ignores the fact that the voting took place under the noses of Chamorro's machine-gun squads, which would scarcely have permitted any other result of the balloting.

Plan National War on Company Unions

A joint attack on company unionism by all 16 of what are known as the standard railroad labor unions is proposed by the international committee for amalgamation in the railroad industry, located at 702 E. 62rd street, Chicago. The committee is circularizing the 10,000 local railroad lodges in the United States and distributing a series of leaflets with the slogan, Destroy the Company Unions! Build the Standard Railway Organizations! Increase Wages!

Locals in various sections of the country have responded with orders for additional leaflets and endorsement of the campaign against the company unions, which now cover about half of the American railroad mileage.

WILL PUBLISH 'STRONG' NOTES SENT MEXICO

Pope Urges Catholics to Resist Calles

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Gloating that the recent note sent to the Mexican government is the "strongest" ever framed by the United States government, to that republic, the state department has announced that it will make public the correspondence between the two countries Wednesday.

The notes concern the United States attitude toward Mexico on the enforcement of the constitutional provision on disposition of oil lands and rights in Mexico.

Mexican Government Firm

The Calles government has replied in equally firm terms, it is indicated, maintaining its sovereign right of dealing with the oil question as the Mexican government sees fit.

The return of Ambassador Sheffield to Mexico by the department of state is seen as an indication that the Coolidge administration fully approves of Sheffield's jingo tactics toward the Calles government.

Rome Attacks Mexico.

ROME, Nov. 21 — Denunciation of the Mexican government and application of the tactics of Mexican and American catholics in plotting against the Calles administration is contained in an encyclical by Pope Pius, just published, to the entire hierarchy of the Roman catholic church.

Commends K. of C.

The papal decree commended the activities of the American Knights of Columbus, the catholic organization that has conducted a vicious campaign of abuse against Mexico in the United States and which engineered plots against the government in Mexico.

The pope called upon the faithful to continue their war on the government indefinitely until the "persecution" of the church ceases.

"Have Faith in Our Lady."

After calling upon his followers to continue their active war on the government, the pope exhorts his flock "to always hope and confide in the protection of Our Lady of Guadalupe, patroness of Mexico" to conduct them safely from the present situation.

"No wisdom, no prudence, and no counsel against God, and hell will ever prevail against the church, immaculate bride of Jesus Christ," says the encyclical.

It is significant that this encyclical on Mexico is addressed to the entire church, and not only to the Mexican episcopate.

Intrenational Power.

In international matters, the dominions are guaranteed representative-with full power to act for the particular dominion. The conference condoned the appointment of ministers to foreign states by the dominions. This was a question upon which both the Irish Free State and Canada had quarrelled when the problem of representation from these countries to Washington was a topic of discussion between them and the home government.

The colonial charter drawn up by this historical conference marks the period of decline of the British empire and lays the basis for the complete separation of the colonies in the not too distant future, is the view of working class observers in London. While certain mutual considerations still hold the dominions together, the degree of autonomy granted by the charter entirely changes the status of the empire from federation under control of London to federation by mutual consent.

Net So Much Harmony.

While the London foreign office began to greet the results of the conference as of harmony in the conference, it is well known that the charter was finally drafted only by long and acrimonious debate in which the colonies made unprecedented challenges.

The concessions apply to Canada, Newfoundland, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Irish Free State.

COOLIDGE ASKS BUTLER TO STAY AS G. O. P. HEAD

Think It Means He Will Run Again in 1928

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Senator Wm. M. Butler's acquiescence to the wishes of President Coolidge that he retain the chairmenship of the republican national committee renewed in Washington today a wave of discussion among politicians as to Coolidge's political intentions for 1928.

Think It Means 1928.

A canvass among prominent republicans now gathering for the opening of congress revealed a considerable divergence of opinion as to what algnificance should be attached to Butler's retention.

Some republican leaders who here always believed that the president plans to be a candidate to succeed himself in 1928 accepted the announcement that Butler would continue as confirming their belief.

Still others expressed the opinion privately that the president desired to keep Senator Butler in his post in order that he might be secure in control of the organization until such time as he (Mr. Coolidge) must make up his mind about his candidacy for another term.

Colonel Harvey Again.

All this week there has been considerable politics discussed at the White House, for the president has had as his guests Colonel George Harvey and Senator Butler. Their presence at the executive mansion together is not regarded as accidental.

QUEENSLAND, Australia, Nov. 21.—The board of trade and arbitration of the government here has ruled against the adoption of the five-day week in industry here. At the same time the federal high court has ruled that the New South Wales act providing for a 44-hour week thruout the nation was unconstitutional. It declared that the act could not supersede the federal arbitration court's decision that the 48-hour week shall prevail.

Russian Farmers Pay Taxes According to Amount of Incomes

MOSCOW, Nov. 21.—(FP)—Twenty four million families or breadwinners who make up the peasant mass of the Soviet Union will pay about 300,000,000 roubles in taxation next year, as compared with 240,000,000 in 1925-26 and 310,000,000 in 1924-25. The new agricultural tax law is based on the principle of graduated burden according to income.

Six million families are to be exempt from the tax. Another 40 to 45 per cent will pay less than last year—namely, 7 roubles average tax. About 14 per cent will pay 20 roubles, the same as last year, on the average. The richer peasants—3,500,000 families—will pay an average of 50 to 55 roubles each. The new maximum tax will be 25 per cent while in the old law the maximum was only 15 per cent.

Britain Urges U. S. Navy to Protect Her Chinese Trade Ships

SHANGHAI, China, Nov. 21.—The British government and British capitalists are making a determined attempt to have the United States navy become involved in Chinese affairs. Following an attack on the British steamer Sunning this week, by Chinese "pirates," the United States has been appealed to by Great Britain to aid in exterminating what is said to be a pirate nest in South China. Japan has also been appealed to.

It is reported that 12 ships have been pirated since 1923, and many passengers kidnapped. The loss to British, French, and Portuguese shipping is said to amount to many millions of dollars.

PARIS, Nov. 21 — The municipal council is expected to act favorably on the proposal of the Communist councillor asking that all toys given to children at Christmas of the nature of rifles, cannons, lead soldiers, cap pistols, and army caps be suppressed.

This is urged so that the minds of the French children will not be directed toward war.

TREATMENT OF SOVIET WORKER DRAWS STUDENT

Visitor Impressed By Human Element

By THOMAS L. DABNEY,
(Federated Press)

Dabney is a member of the Teachers Union, one of the first two colored students at Brookwood Labor College, and went to Russia with the summer student delegation from the United States. This delegation was a spontaneous one, having nothing to do with any radical organization in this country and making its own arrangements directly with Russian authorities.—Editor).

During my stay of eight weeks in Russia with the American delegation of students, I visited factories in Moscow, Nijhni Novgorod, Saratov, Kharkhov, Goriovka and other places. In all, inquiries were made in regard to the social benefits provided for workers in the various factories. I found that a certain percent of the returns of each factory was paid to the state to cover the social insurance for the workers. Trade unions, likewise, set aside a sum of money for social benefits.

Workers Come First.

In Russia one is impressed with the fact that the workers are considered to be of more importance than the expansion of industry or the making of profits. The human element comes first. Wages are the smallest item in the workers' reward for labor. Needs such as recreation, travel, sick and insurance benefits, medical attention, housing, the education of their children, the yearly holiday and rest are supplied by the state. The trade unions also grant certain benefits.

The care of workers' health is emphasized everywhere in the Soviet Union. I saw rest homes, resorts and hospitals for workers in several cities and in the Crimea. At Samara, for example, our delegation had dinner at a rest home for workers. There were well kept flower gardens and provisions were made for recreation and games.

Vacation System.

Our delegation visited a tuberculiar hospital near Samara where 1,000 patients were receiving medical attention. While there we were informed that trade unions were allotted a certain number of beds in such hospitals according to their membership. On the recommendation of a physician a member of the trade union who is in the most urgent need of medical attention is sent to the hospital. All workers receive an annual vacation with pay. The length of vacation varies from two weeks to a month according to the kind and danger of the work to health in which one is engaged. Coal miners get a month's vacation.

I saw what is being done for workers in Don Basin coal fields at Lugovka. Already 112 new homes have been built. These homes are built of stone and some of lumber in house families of four, six and eight members. Electricity is being installed and modern equipment for the service and comfort of the miners and their families. A new hospital and a palace of labor are in the process of construction. Practically all homes built before the revolution are still occupied. The new homes are much larger and more sanitary. They surpass any of the homes for the miners in the anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania.

When our delegation visited the Secretary of State Planning Commission (Gosplan) in Moscow, we met one of the enthusiastic workers of Russia. He had been to America for over eight years and was imprisoned in 1919 for radical activities. He explained his preference for Soviet Russia in this way:

"In America there was nothing but work and work. After one has finished working, one is too tired to go anywhere. And there is little amusement or recreation for the workers. Here it is different. I can go to the theater, visit friends or read, and I am not too tired to enjoy my leisure. If I feel bad or sick I go to my comrade and say I want to go home, and it's all right. I do not have any boss here. I am my own boss."

This idea of being one's own boss, of being free to quit work when one is sick, seems to permeate the whole working class. One works for one's self and for the common good. It is this idea that furnishes the motive power for increasing production and social reconstruction in the Soviet Union.

Ormiston to Chicago Police: "It's Bunk"

Evidence said by Chicago police to link him with Aimee Semple McPherson, Los Angeles evangelist, was branded today in a letter said to have been signed by Kenneth G. Ormiston, missing radio operator, as the "bunk."

With this comprehensive expression, Ormiston, according to Edward H. S. Martin, his Chicago attorney, dismissed the "dear darling man" letter, said to have been written to him by Aimee herself, and also the trunkful

CHINESE STUDENTS ARE BEHIND PEOPLE'S GOVERNMENT IN CHINA

By C. F. WU
(Chinese Student in U. S.)

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 21.—The following two resolutions were unanimously adopted in a special meeting on Chinese affairs by the local Chinese Students' Club at Madison, Wisconsin.

1. We oppose any armed intervention in China by the powers.

2. We accept the people's government (the southern revolutionary government) as the legal government of the Chinese Republic and urge the peoples of the other nations to recognize our people's government as the same.

These two resolutions represent not only the sentiments of the thirty-three Chinese students at the University of Wisconsin, but the sentiments of the Chinese people as a whole, especially the toiling classes.

Southerners Chine's Hope.

For years our people's government (the southern revolutionary government, whose seat has been at Canton, but is now ready to be moved to Wuchang in central China) has been the center of revolution, the inspiring banner which all the revolutionary minds of China have been looking toward as in contrast with the nominal Peking government, a den of corruption and bribery.

The people's government, founded by the late Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, has been led by Kuomintang, the followers of Dr. Sun or the people's party, as in contrast with the reactionary Peking government, which has always been played among the hands of the militarists, lackeys of the imperialistic powers and terrorists of the Chinese masses.

The people's government, forgerly only two provinces behind it, has defied the British lion at Hongkong for nearly two years, while the Peking government, under the arch-militarist of China, Yuan Shih-Kai, and with practically the whole of China under his control, made the concession to the notorious and shameful 21 demands of Japan in 1915. At present the people's government, under the joint leadership of the Nationalist Party or Kuomintang and the Communist Party of China, has control of over half of China as one solid unity, and the people's armies are victorious wherever they go, while the phantom Peking government, without a president, without a cabinet, has an influence not beyond the city.

Powers Recognize Phantom

And the powers are still holding diplomatic relationship with this non-existing Peking government while ignoring the people's government.

It seems almost ridiculous at the first thought. But no! The powers are not out of their senses, they are not foolish. They have tried their best to keep the Peking government paralyzed, but existing. They have tried their best to maintain our reactionary militarists in power, they have tried their best to help put down all revolutions in China, and they have tried their best to check the advance of the people's government. They have done these all for their own good. Thy have been using the puppet Peking government and the reactionary militarists as tools to exploit the Chinese people, to maintain their powerlize. They know that they will loss all their prestige and will no longer be able to exploit the Chinese people when our people's government comes into full power.

Becoming Desperate.

The imperialist powers, particularly the British have done their best in supporting Wu Pei-Fu, and they are doing their best in supporting Sun Chuan-Fang. But Wu has been completely defeated and Sun is approaching his downfall. The people's armies are victorious and welcome everywhere, and are now approaching Shanghai. Now the imperialistic powers are more desperate than ever. They have failed in supporting their puppet Chinese militarists. They are now ready to resort to open intervention. The British warships, the American warships, the Japanese warships and the warships of the other imperialistic powers are crowding into Shanghai harbor. They are showing their maddening teeth. The negotiation between Great Britain and Italy and that between Britain and Japan reveal that they are going to take joint action. At present the British are trying to induce America to participate in the same.

But you must know workers of America and elsewhere the Chinese toilers' cause is your cause. That is how I come to appeal to you. You can help us. In case America should join hands with Great Britain, you must demand that the troops of China must not, but active resistance such a movement. You can help us in influencing other people to do the same. You can force your government to recognize the people's government as the legal government of the Chinese republic.

Dutch Government Is Hard Pressed by Javanese Workers

BATAVIA, Java, Nov. 21.—All Java, in its three geographical subdivisions, is aflame with revolutionary activities and wholesale arrests are being made by the alarmed authorities.

The Communists in western Java are charged by the government with having a base for arms and ammunition at Singapore, British India. Twenty-five were killed and 29 taken prisoners when 500 people attacked the garrison at Labuen early in the week.

In Central Java, where 10,000 revolutionary circulars were recently distributed, 30 agitators, including two leaders, Moeradilla and Mohammed Ali, were arrested.

Houses have been searched in eastern Java and the Communist leader, Hardjong, is under arrest.

The papers attribute the discontent to "outside influences" and are clamoring for drastic action to prevent the spread of the revolutionary movement.

Kill, Wound, Arrest Java Revolutionists

BATAVIA, Java — Revolutionary disturbances have been resumed in many parts of the country. At Bandoeng the Communist executive committee was arrested, while over 400 persons were taken into custody at Welterveden. Several Communists have been killed and many more wounded in attacks in several parts of Java. The home government at Amsterdam, Holland, is keeping itself closely informed as to the revolutionary movement and is feeling considerable alarm at the persistency shown by the rebels and the widespread sympathy which they are gaining.

John Bull Picks Two Plums.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—British industry has just secured two large contracts. One is a little "home industry," the building of a naval base at Singapore on 2,500 acres of land which the municipality of Singapore has "donated" to the imperial government. As Great Britain is building this to curb the "yellow peril," she asked the dominions, at the imperial conference, to contribute to the cost of $52,000,000. Australia and New Zealand were agreeable, Ireland and Canada give it a cold shoulder, while South Africa is opposed.

The second contract is for the building and equipping of a 36-mile subway in Buenos Aires, Argentine. This is

American Airships to Tour Latin-America as "Friendship" Show

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21. Latin American diplomats in Washington have met the commander and four pilots of the American army air mission which will start next month on an aerial tour of the 21 Latin-American republics.

The meeting took place around the table at the Pan-American Union, with Secretary of State Kellogg as the host. Guests, in addition to the diplomats, included Secretary of Navy Wilbur and Secretary of Commerce Hoover.

Kellogg, in introducing the flyers, characterized their forthcoming journey as a "great historic voyage" that will "force another tie in the bonds of friendship which already bind together the United States and these nations."

Post Labels Calles "Red Conspirator"

WASHINGTON (FP) The Washington Post, published by Edward B. McLean, of the famous "peaches and cream and apricots" code messages disclosed in the Teapot Dome investigation, is glad that Secretary Kellogg barred Mme. Kollontai from landing in this country on her way to be Soviet minister to Mexico.

"The communist disturbances in Central America," it says editorially, "are directed from the city of Mexico with the knowledge and consent of the Mexican government, which itself under the influence of Russian communism. Mme. Kollontai in her self a devoted and expert propagandist whose duty it is to break down popular government and substitute the despotic rule of the soviet. In Mexico, Guatemala and other countries where communism has obtained a foothold in this hemisphere, converts are obtained by representing to them that they are enlisting in a movement to benefit labor. They are persuaded to forsake the republican system of government in favor of communism under the guise of organized labor."

"Die-Hard" Road Finally Gives Raises.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Delaware and Hudson railroad has finally fallen into line behind most of the eastern railways, giving its shop workers 2 and 3-cent an hour wages increases Leonor F. Loree, head of the road, is called one of the "die-hards" because of his antagonism to the American Federation of Labor shopcrafts unions from the 1922 strike.

Russian Potash Will Give Franco-German Trust Hard Bump

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 21.—The Soviet government has allotted 5,000,000 rubles for the next two years' work in exploiting the vast deposits of potash which have been discovered in the Western Urals. Already forty square kilometers are known to be rich in this deposit, with a probability that it extends under a surface of 2,000 square kilometers, a much greater source of supply than that of Alsace, at a much shallower depth, and with no trouble from water and gypsum. The government is confident that it can deliver potash at the port of Leningrad at one-half the price charged by the Franco-German trust.

Shipments of machinery and stores for the development of the region have begun. The work includes the building of a branch railroad forty kilometers in length. The present undertaking will ha completed by March, 1929.

Allies Will Force Germany to Abide By Arms Restriction

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Nov. 21.—Neither France nor its former allies will allow Germany to evade complying with the disarmament measures demanded by the conference of ambassadors, it is indicated here. If Germany refuses to comply, control of the matter will not be surrendered to the league of nations commission, as intended, General Welch, president of the inter-allied military control commission, has been ordered to go to Germany and investigate military conditions there.

Reports that Foreign Minister Stresemann will refuse to attend the league council next month, unless the matter is negotiated beforehand have reached here, but the government discounts them. It is felt that the German premier is not strong enough in the reich to force the issue.

British Statesmen Aghast at New Book

LONDON, Nov. 21. — "Ridiculous fabrication," gasped Lord Balfour. Lord Oxford, Lord Reading, Lord Cecil and Winston Churchill all in unison today.

This sweeping condemnation was directed at a book "The Whispering Gallery" which has created a considerable furore here in the first 24 hours of its publication.

"The Whispering Gallery" by an anonymous author who claims that his name is "an household word among diplomats of Europe" purports to give spicy and intimate details of life behind the scene in high quarters.

DISTRICT NINE HOLDS PLENARY SESSION, IMPORTANT RESOLUTIONS ARE ADOPTED BY FULL COMMITTEE

The District Committee of District Nine, Minneapolis, of the Workers (Communist) Party recently held a plenary session. This was practically the first full meeting of the committee, since its election. The meeting did much to clarify the situation, to create a better understanding of the political and organizational problems of the party and to unite on methods to solve these problems.

The meeting considered the general policy of our party and its application to conditions in District Nine. It gave serious consideration to the campaign to build the party and was an effective factor in the completa unification of the party.

Among the resolutions adopted were the following:

Partias Policies.

"The plenary session of the district committee of District No. 9 declares its full accord with the policies of the party and of the central executive committee.

"In the endorsement by the C. E. C. of the measures of the central committee of our Russian brother party against the opposition in the C. P. S. U. the plenum of the district committee sees a very necessary measure against the pessimism which develops of its international, and, to a degree also in our party. This pessimism, often clothed in radical phrases as evidenced by the propaganda of Comrades Trotsky and Zinoviev, and often outright opportunism, as evidenced in the letter of Medvedeff and Shlapnikoff, is really a liquidatory tendency. In our party this pessimism proposes to overcome the difficulties of our movement in this period of lull in the revolutionary surge of the proletariat by leaving the field of revolutionary action and taking a position of mere propaganda.

"In the extended activities of our party in the struggles of the workers on the economic field, especially the achievements in the textile strike in Passaic, the plenum of the D. E. C. welcomes a sign that our party designs its policy with a view to establishing it as a real mass party, attaching to it the masses of exploited who can find leadership only in our party, in the Communists.

"In this period, the party must continue the policy applied in Passaic, namely the transformation of the slogan "Organise the Unorganized" into a concrete activity of the party.

"The plenum of the district committee considers the activities in the field of organising the unorganized, and in the field of forming a labor party movement for the campaign of 1928 the most effective means of making our party a real revolutionary party of action.

"To make these campaigns successful the organization work must be intensified and our energy must be mobilized in the near future for the inner strengthening of our party. As one important measure to do this, the district committee calls upon all members of the party to support the present drive of the party to Keep The DAILY WORKER.

"In united work of our party the plenum of the district committee of District 9 sees the necessary prerequisites for a successful onward march of our party and the establishment of our party as the leader of the American proletariat."

District Organization Work.

"The district committee in plenary session notes with great satisfaction the excellent results of the organizational efforts of Comrade Tallentire as district organiser. We pledge our wholehearted support in the continuation of this work and in cooperation with the central executive committee promise to carry on these activities for the building of a stronger Communist Party in District No. 9."

"The plenum of the district committee of the Workers Communist Party, District No. 9, learns with indignation that the murderous negligence of the profit-hungry mine operators in the Michigan Iron Range has again decoyed the lives of fifty-one workers. Near Ishpeming, Mich., in the mines of the Cleveland Cliff company, a subsidiary of the U. S. Steel corporation, because of the neglect of preventive measures, a swamp broke through into the shafts and buried and drowned in the mine these fifty-one workers.

"A score of these man were members and close sympathisers of our party. Always ready in a struggle against the men-devouring capitalism these men themselves became victims of the profit-hunger of the operators.

"The plenum stands up in honor to the memory of these victims of capitalism. It calls upon the whole district of the party for the fight against the unbearable conditions in the mines on the range. It pledges the strength of the whole party for this fight.

"As a first step, the plenum calls upon the party organisation in Ishpeming to organise at once a meeting in memory of these victims and in protest against the murderers.

"Down with capitalism

"Its victims are our heroes. To their memory is devoted our struggle against capitalism."

WE MUST KEEP THE DAILY WORKER TO COMBAT THE CAPITALIST PRESS

THE American working class consumes daily a terrible amount of mental poison. No working class in the world is deluged with so monstrously huge an amount of the written word. Thirty-three million copies of the capitalist press circulated daily throut the United States in 1925. Over 2,200 capitalist dailies circulated in the United States in 1924.

The American press is based on the basis of mass production on a scale in harmony with the whole character of American industry. Its products are standardized, as is everything else, drugs, and other articles of daily consumption. What the American workers read is like what they eat, produced by millions in a similar shoddy manner. The American newspaper is a tremendous industry controlled by the capitalist class and, in the last analysis, by a small oligarchy, which uses this power to divide the workers, cripple their thinking and paralyze their action.

Special Propaganda.

The bourgeois press pandering to the lowest prejudices, is able to succeed in this task of poisoning and enslaving the workers by cunningly spreading their dope manufactured by the skilled cartoonists and journalists whose products are dictated by their masters. It is against this influence and power that The DAILY WORKER must struggle along on short rations, hard-pressed by the paper manufacturers and the whole industry of newspaper production. Yet, if the competition is difficult, the task of The DAILY WORKER in leading the struggle of the enslaved is, on the other hand, great.

Need Is Now Great.

At no time was there greater need for The DAILY WORKER than at this time. In New York City 40,000 cloakmakers are on strike, thousands have been arrested, hundreds are herded into jail and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment for exercising their right to strike and picket. The brutality of the police knows no limit and yet, despite a demonstration of 20,000 workers in New Madison Square Garden against these arrests and against the injunction, the capitalist press maintains a conspiracy of silence, boycotts the news of the heroic struggle of the cloakmakers and uses its power to intimidate and crush these workers struggling against the most brutal conditions of sweat shop.

This press, serving the political fortunes of Al Smith, who is playing the role of a strike-breaker in this struggle, shows what a vicious power it is in the hands of the capitalist class.

Need Own Press.

The American workers need a press of their own to break the blockade maintained by the capitalist class. They need a powerful English daily, which can lead in their struggles, give them unity, organization, discipline, and give aim and a common goal a Communist English daily that speaks fearlessly, that gives voice to the grief, the pain, the indignation of the masses of American workers against their exploiters and misleaders.

The DAILY WORKER is performing this role. It is watched by the special agencies of the capitalist class. It is read and slipped by all the labor bureaucrats. It is the only voice that labor has in the country daily speaking in the interests of the millions of exploited workers.

No Effort Too Great.

No effort is too great to keep The DAILY WORKER. No contribution is too large to maintain a labor daily, speaking in the English language. While the entire working class of America must regard the paper as their own, the burden of maintaining it falls heaviest at this time upon the Communists and left wingers. The task of maintaining and broadening the influence of The DAILY WORKER, the revolutionary-minded workers must not shirk. Let the $50,000 campaign speedily go over the top! New York will do its share.

A NEW NOVEL By Upton Sinclair

VI

Had anybody seen them in the moonlight? Or had Vee whispered the secret to Annabelle? Or was it just the light of happiness radiating from the eyes of the young couple? Anyhow, it was evident next day that the truth was out, and there was an atmosphere of festivity about the Monastery. Nobody went so far as to sprinkle rice on the pair, or to throw old shoes at them, or tie white ribbons to their cars; but there were friendly smiles, and sly jests, enough to keep the play spirit alive. Annabelle, of course, was enraptured; she had planned this from the beginning, she had picked this young oil prince for her friend from the day that Verne had told her about him. And Verne—well, you can imagine that when he started to make jokes on such a subject, nobody was left in doubt as to what had happened!

Strangely enough, when Bunny got home, he found this spirit of orange-blossoms and white ribbons in some mysterious way communicated to Dad. Could it be that Verne, the old rascal, had taken the trouble to telephone the news? Here was Dad, shining with satisfaction, and Bunny could read his every thought. Dad had met Vee Tracy, and liked her fine. A motion picture star—by golly, that was something to brag about! That was the right sort of career for a young oil prince—quite in the aristocratic tradition! Bunny would have something else in his mind now but this fool Bolshevik business.'

Presently here was Dad trying to drop hints—with about as much tact as you would expect from a full grown rhinoceros' Had Vee Tracy been up at the Monastery this time? Say, that was a live wire, that girl! Verne said she got as high as seven hundred a week; and that was no press agent money either. She had more brains than all the male dolls put together; she had money salted away, owned lots all over Hollywood. She'd come to Verne to ask his advice about Ross Consolidated, and he had told her to go the limit, and by golly, she had brought him a cashier's check for fifty thousand dollars, and had got a block of the stock at the opening price, and now it was worth three times that, and Vee said that Verne had saved her from six rapings. Then the old rhinoceros went on and explained what Vee had meant—that she wouldn't have to act in six pictures!

And then there was Bertie, who got the news at once because it happened that Charlie Norman's bootlegger was in love with Annabelle Ame's sister. Right away Bertie was curious to meet Vee Tracy, and ordered Bunny to bring her to lunch. Vee was uneasy about this—declaring that sisters always poisoned men against sweethearts. But Bunny laughed and said he had plenty of antitoxins against Bertie. So they met, and everything went off beautifully; Vee was humble, and anxious to please, and Bertie was the great lady, supremely gracious. That was according to the proprieties, for Vee was only an actress, while Bertie was in real "society," her doings appearing in a sanctified part of the paper, where the screen people seldom broke in. After the luncheon, Bertie told her brother that Vee was all right, and maybe she would teach him a little sense; which, from a sister was the limit of cordiality.

So there they were, everything hunkydory. Bunny's sleep was no longer disturbed by dreams; the dream had become a reality, and it was his. When they visited the Monastery, they were placed in connecting rooms; and when he went to visit Vee at her bungalow, the discreet elderly lady who kept house for her would quietly disappear. As for the moving picture colony, it said nothing more—having already said everything there was to say.

Bunny would call Vee on the telephone, and if it was a Saturday or holiday, they would make a date; but if it was a weekday, Vee would say, "No, Bunny, you ought to stay home and study."

He would answer, "Oh, bosh, Vee. I'm a whole week ahead of my classes."

"But Bunny, if I make you neglect your work, your father will get down on me!"

"Dad's more in love with you than I am! He thinks you're the brightest star in the movie zodiac."

"We just must not overdo it, Bunny! Your conscience will get to troubling you, and you'll blame it on me."

"Dog-gone-it, Vee, you boss me worse than if we were Annabelle and Roscoe."

"Well, let me tell you, if I manage to keep my oil prince as long as Annabelle has kept her's, I'll count myself a lucky woman!"

DISEASE CAUSES IN INDUSTRY CAN BE STAMPED OUT

Director of Women's Bureau Says

NEW YORK, Nov. 21. — (FP) — Practically all the causes for industrial and occupational diseases can be stamped out, Nelle Swarts, director bureau of women in industry New York state labor department, told her radio audience in the regular state health department broadcast. The task of eliminating industrial diseases needs study and "the cooperation of all interested groups," said Swarts. Lead, arsenic, mercury, benzol and carbon monoxide are the most common industrial poisons to which workers are exposed, she stated.

Lead Poison.

Printers, painters and plumbers are exposed to lead poison. Workers in gold and silver refineries, copper and brass foundries, dye works and glass factories are exposed to arsenic. Mercury exposure comes to workers on thermometers, hats and explosives. Benzol effects workers in pasting rubber and leather and sealing tin cans. Chronic carbon monoxide poisoning is one of the commonest types of industrial disease occurring often where furnaces, gas-heating devices and improperly maintained heating arrangements exist. Industrial poisons are controlled by the substitution of some other substances or removal of poisonous fumes from workshops by exhausts and ventilating hoods.

Occupational disease develops from "dust in many industries, Swarts stated. But industrial dusts can be controlled by eliminating processes a sing dust; altering process to reduce dust; use of exhausts, hoods and respirators; through supplying workers "ith pure air by means of helmets. Headaches from glaring lights, backaches from standing all day at machines; colds from overheated or underheated and badly ventilated rooms also could be called occupational diseases when incurred at work. "Bad or faulty working conditions play a large part in the amount of sickness among industrial workers," concluded Nelle Swarts.

Charleroi, Pa., to Hear Howat in Election Speech

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 21. — Alex Howat, well-known leader of the United Mine Workers of America, who recently returned from a European trip, will address a huge mass meeting at Turner Hall, 7th and McKean Ave., Charleroi, Pa., on Tuesday, Nov. 23, at 6:30 p. m.

He is coming to Charleroi to speak on the election in the U. M. W. A. Howat, who is perhaps the most liked and the most hated man in the union and well known among the miners throughout the world, is supporting the progressive candidates headed by John Brophy. It is expected that this will be one of the biggest mass meetings ever held in this district.

On Wednesday, Nov. 24, he will address another meeting in this district in New Kensington, Pa. Both meetings are arranged under the auspices of the "Brophy for President Committee."

FRED SIDERS HEADS ANTI-LEWIS TICKET IN U. M. W. DISTRICT FIVE

AVELLA, Pa., Nov. 21.—Fred Siders, candidate for president of District Five of the United Mine Workers of America and head of a list of progressive candidates for all district offices, has issued the following appeal to the Western Pennsylvania miners in support of John Brophy, candidate against John L. Lewis and has endorsed the platform upon which the Brophy forces are rallying against the Indianapolis machine:

To the Officers and Members of U. M. W. A. District Five.

Fellow Trade Union Brothers:

I am accepting the nomination for district president of District No. 5, U. M. W. A. given me by the numerous local unions for the following outstanding reasons:

First, I accept the program of Brophy to "Save the Union" and will fight most vigorously to put it into effect.

Second, it is no secret today that our union in district five has lost several thousand members in the past few years. In spite of the fact that we have been losing members, the district officials still refuse to pursue a vigorous fighting policy against the coal operators of this district, and are still following the same policy as the international officials, of local strikes, which is costing us thousands of members. They still refuse to pursue the principle of mass picketing.

Lost Big Mines.

Third, The policy of not fighting the coal operators vigorously enough has cost us some of the mines such as the mines in the Kiski Valley of the Hicks Coal Co., and if we do not change the policy, we stand a chance of losing completely the union in the mines of the Pittsburgh Coal Co.

Fourth, The Jacksonville agreement is not being enforced by the district officials who were partly instrumental in drawing it up and having it adopted. The district officials wherever they get a chance try to avoid taking the necessary steps to put it into effect. Hundreds of local grievances are pending thruout the district, yet we find that the district is not doing anything about them. District board members whenever they are called to settle these grievances usually do not come around.

Favor Companies.

In cases where they do show up, nine times out of ten the local dispute is settled in behalf of the coal operators. The the district board members do not show up very often at local meetings they do come around when nominations, elections, district and national conventions take place. It seems that they can bump into organizers and board members practically everywhere you go, losing valuable time that could be used in the interest of the miners, and creating expense to keep themselves in power.

Fifth, During the last few weeks a number of mines have opened for many months and even years have been reopened. This was due to two main reasons. One, the British coal strike which has created a demand for American coal, and which we, the miners of the United States, are unconsciously helping to break. Two, the preparations of the coal operators of this country for a strike in April, 1927, which seems sure to come. But no matter what the reasons may be the situation presented a splendid opportunity to the United Mine Workers to strengthen the organization, to place the operators on the defensive, to force them to live up to the Jacksonville agreement.

But the present leadership of our district not only fails to realize the causes of the present so-called boom in the coal industry, but fails completely to take advantage of the situation to build and to save the union. While the operators are organized and are preparing for the coming strike not a thing is being done by our district officials to prepare for the coming onslaught of the open shoppers. The watchword of the miners against the coal operators must be "No Wage Cuts."

Sixth, All the above conditions must be remedied by immediately preparing the miners for the next strugsle in April, 1927, and when the policy of mass picketing, organizing the unorganized in the non-union fields of Pennsylvania, Kentucky and West Virginia, and the southern coal fields of United States, nationalization of mines under union management, a labor party in Pennsylvania which will represent the interests of labor. Immediate reinstatement in his district and in the international such members as Alex Howat, who have been unjustly expelled, with full right and privileges in the organization.

For Vigorous Policy.

I believe that in fighting for the above policies and remedies vigorously, the union can be saved and can be built up to where it will extend its banner to include the non-union fields such as the Latrobe, Irwin and the Connellsville coke region coal fields in this district, West Virginia, Kentucky and other districts in the international.

In this way we will be able to regain our influence and make the banner of the United Mine Workers fly in the districts for whose welfare hundreds of members of the United Mine Workers died, and which the policies of our officials would now destroy.

Accepts Brophy Policy.

On the above platform I accept the nomination for the office of district president. I am glad to say that the undersigned candidates for various offices in the district, accept the policy as enunciated by John Brophy and the program set forth above. We are conducting our campaign on the basis of the above program to save the union and to increase its power in this district as well as on an international scale.

Hoping to receive your support for the undersigned candidates who have pledged to save the union and to make it better and stronger.

Fraternally yours,

Candidates.

CAPITALISM IS FAILURE, ADMITS HOOVER IN FAVORING GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN U. S. BUSINESS

Private property fails as a basis for efficient organization of the country's economic life and government initiative is required. This is the outstanding lesson in secretary of commerce Hoover's report on Progress in Elimination of Waste. Though he goes over all his way to voice the propaganda of big business, Hoover shows how the government has been forced to step in to protect American living standards from capitalist waste.

"While various divisions of the department have been actively aiding in the campaign," he says, "it must be borne in mind that the whole program is one fundamentally to stimulate action among the industries, trades and consumers themselves. It is obviously not the function of the government to manage business, but for it to recruit and distribute economic information; to investigate economic and scientific problems; to point out the remedy for economic failure; the road to progress; to inspire and assist in cooperative action in reduction of waste."

CANCER CURE IS INVESTIGATED BY U. S. SCIENTISTS

Electric Current Use May Be Success

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21. — Cancer cure by exposure of the patient to extremely high frequency electrical currents is under investigation by the United States public Health service, Dr. C. O. Pierce acting surgeon general, announced today.

The method, while not officially approved by Surgeon General Hugh S. Cumming, is believed by medical scientists to offer real possibilities and may be the method for which surgeons have searched for years.

Referring to the reported anti-toxin cure evolved by Dr. T. J. Glover, of New York, who announced isolation of the germ and accepted by some leading authorities, Pierce declared that surgery, radium and x-rays are the only forms of treatment so far justified by experience and observation. The Glover method has been investigated but, according to Pierce, does not yet have the sanction of the public health service.

Experiment With Animals.

Pioneering in a virtually unexplored field, Scheraschewsky is exposing white mice and other small animals, afflicted with cancer, to frequency currents from 20,000,000 to 60,000,000 cycles per second.

Symptoms, which produced death after exposure, were discovered, but with proper application of the current, material results were obtained in killing cancerous conditions.

Will Attempt Cures.

A long series of tests will be concluded with animals and later human beings, the method would not be approved unless actual human cures in a high percentage of the tests made were accomplished.

"Should this or any other method of cancer cure be discovered in the Scheraschewsky investigation the results would be made public for the general good," he said.

High frequency currents have been applied to geranium plants afflicted by tumors caused by inoculation. In a report on these tests it was shown that the diseased plants were exposed to radiations omitted by a vacuum tube oscillator at a frequency of about 150,000 cycles per second.

Tested on Plants.

After an intermittent exposure lasting over 16 days the plant tumors died and were easily removed, effecting, apparently, a permanent cure. Where similar treatments were discontinued the tumors recurred and grew to enormous sizes.

If the same success can be accomplished in applying the method to animal life, medical scientists believe that an actual cure for cancer may be obtained.

Is Trust Menace

"Reports show that the death rate from cancer is from 25 to 30 per cent greater than 21 years ago," Pierce said. "Census figures indicate that one out of every six adults living in the United States is destined to die of cancer. Between the ages of 45 and 65 one out of every five deaths among women, is due to this disease, which is a greater menace to adult life than tuberculosis."

WEALTH OF NATION BECOMING MORE CONCENTRATED INTO SMALL OWNING CLASS' HANDS, INCOME TAX SHOWS

The tremendous concentration of wealth in the hands of the country's tiny owning class is again shown by the report of the commissioner of internal revenue covering income tax returns for 1924. This shows 75 multi-millionaires at the top of the pyramid revelling in annual income sufficient to support 135,000 worker families at the scale considered adequate by the National (employers) Industrial Conference board.

These 75 individuals with net incomes in excess of $1,000,000 apiece have a combined gross income of $190,357,268 and a net income after large deductions for gifts, etc., of $156,974,475. The average gross income of this group was $2,538,000. Each of these profit glutions could have supported 1000 worker families in accordance with the U. S. department of labor health and comfort standard and still have more than $300,000 income left for his own luxurious living.

The 3 richest men in this upper crust of society had a combined gross income of $34,186,629. The number of persons reporting 1924 income and the combined total of their incomes arranged by income group are:

|---|---|---|
| $1,000,000 — $2,000,000 | 2,851 | $3,654,000 |
| 2,000,000 — 3,000,000 | 2,112,552 | 4,272,147,000 |
| 3,000,000 — 4,000,000 | 1,606,000 | 3,847,000,000 |
| 5,000 — 10,000 | 437,320 | 2,991,197,000 |
| 10,000 — 25,000 | 191,516 | 2,953,396,000 |
| 25,000 — 50,000 | 47,501 | 1,509,000,000 |
| 50,000 — 100,000 | 15,814 | 1,046,788,000 |
| 100,000 — 200,000 | 3,945 | 477,844,000 |
| 150,000 — 200,000 | 1,875 | 274,000,000 |
| 200,000 — 500,000 | 447 | 127,248,000 |
| 500,000 — 1,000,000 | 142 | 134,467,000 |
| 1,000,000 — 1,500,000 | 39 | 44,444,000 |
| 1,500,000 — 2,000,000 | 12 | 22,310,000 |
| 2,000,000 — 3,000,000 | 12 | 34,672,000 |
| 3,000,000 — 4,000,000 | 6 | 18,446,000 |
| 4,000,000 — 5,000,000 | 3 | 13,219,000 |
| 5,000,000 and over | 3 | 27,386,000 |

Small Group.

In 1924 the country paid 5715 individuals incomes so large that after deductions for net incomes amounted to $100,000 or more apiece. The group of millionaires was less than 1-10 of 1% of all those reporting incomes, yet they reported nearly 2% of the total net income for the year. Altogether their net income totaled $1,327,929,830.

The 21,531 who reported net incomes of $50,000 or more had a combined net income of $2,304,723,127. They represented less than 3-10 of 1% of all those reporting their incomes, but received 5% of the income. Similarly the 68,592 persons reporting net incomes of more than $25,000 are less than 1% of those making returns, but their 904,571,695 total is more than 18% of all the net income reported.

The report shows that less than 10% of all these making returns are less than 2% of all carefully scrupulous persons in the country have incomes amounting to as much as $5,000.

O'Connell Urges U. S. Adopt Five-Day Week for Navys Yard Workers

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21. — James O'Connell, head of the Metal Trades division of the American Federation of Labor, today urged the navy wage board to consider the advisability of establishing the five-day working week in all navy yards.

"The shorter week has proved beneficial to many large corporations, he said. He asked for more money for navy yard workers.

Twin Cities Liberal Book Shop Sells Out

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 21. — An announcement of indeed unusual interest has just come to the attention of the book-loving public. The Liberal Book Shop, 210 S. Third street, Minneapolis, which is the only store of its kind in the Twin Cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and which specialized in labor, radical and Communist literature of all kind, is selling its entire stock at prices over heard of before, and which will probably never again be duplicated.

Who ever heard of buying Trotsky's book, "Literature and Revolution," at $1.25 before? Yet that is the price at which it can now be purchased. Who ever could buy a copy in two volumes of Ibsen's "An American Tragedy" for $2.50 at any other time? The sale now going on in the Book Shop will continue until Friday, November 27. Everything is being sold at half price and less than half price. If orders of $7.50 or more are purchased.

Every liberal and radical should immediately take advantage of this event, and provide himself with all the books he has always wanted to own, that are now within reach of everybody's purse.

Workers Pay Respects to Debs in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 21 — In spite of a rainy evening some 600 workers gathered in the auditorium at Hall Park to honor the memory of Eugene V. Debs.

Robert G. Whitaker of the Civil Liberties' Union presided. Rudolph Schaffner Liebiach had rendered the Russian funeral march The Friedrich Gerame chorus sang appropriate songs. Mother Bloor, James Fisher and Frank Spector spoke.

The speaker had portrayed the life work of Eugene Debs as a shining example of unswerving devotion to the working class. The meeting closed upon his fighting aggressiveness in this half-century struggle on the class war front.

An appeal for "Debs Enrollment" into International Labor Defense brought many responses from the gathering.

Electric Linemen Strike for Union

Y., Nov. 21. — Thirty deputy sheriffs and all police that can be spared are on guard in Westchester county power plants in Mount Vernon, New Rochelle, White Plains, Mount Kisco, Tarrytown, Yonkers and other New York city suburbs. Several hundred electric linemen employed by the Westchester Lighting Co. are on strike for recognition of their right to organize independently of the company.

"Let Us Call A Spade A Spade"

The Advance Publishes a Full Page Editorial Attacking the Left Wing

By BEN GITLOW.

IN the November 12 issue of The Advance, the official organ of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, appears a full-page editorial entitled, "Let Us Call a Spade—a Spade." This editorial, which is full of invective, is a vicious attack upon the left wing. The niceties of polite expression that usually characterizes the editorial style of The Advance is in this editorial abandoned. Evidently the administration in control of the Amalgamated is very much excited.

The occasion for the abusive editorial is the holding of a meeting by the Amalgamated section of the National committee of the Needle Trades section of the T. U. E. L. in Central Opera House, New York City, Nov. 6. The meeting was called on behalf of the striking cloakmakers and to protest against the Amalgamated officialdom, who were neglecting to mobilize sufficiently the Amalgamated for the relief of the striking cloakmakers.

Three Issues.

At this meeting, at which representatives of the militant and progressive forces of all the needle trades unions spoke, three outstanding issues of importance for all workers to the needle trades were raised. These issues, ignored in The Advance editorial, were the following.

1. The full support of the needle trades unions, to the cloakmakers' strike until victory is assured.

2. The rallying of the rank and file of all the needle trades unions to wage a war against strike-breaking activities of the right wing.

3. The amalgamation of all the existing needle trades unions into one powerful needle trades union.

In addition, the meeting exposed the conduct of the Amalgamated in failing to come to the support of the striking cloakmakers as soon as relief was urgently needed and as generously as it was able to.

THIS editorial, if it indicates anything indicates that President Sidney Hillman is not interested in maintaining a high reputation of progressiveness for the Amalgamated, but is intent upon continuing a policy that in a short period of years has transformed the Amalgamated into one of the blackest and most reactionary unions in the United States. The Advance editorial reminds one of the tactics used by the bosses to meet the issues raised by the workers. The bosses always begin by ignoring the workers' demands by raising the cry of reds and Communist control. The Advance editorial ignores the issues of the meeting by hurling invectives against the Trade Union Educational League and making statements and charges that have not a tissue of truth to them.

Yes, Call it a Spade.

I AGREE with the editorial to let us call a spade a spade, without mincing words. The Amalgamated is enraged because the Amalgamated left wing, in spite of the boasting threats of A. Beckerman, manager of the New York Joint Board, did hold a very successful mass meeting that was well attended by the rank and file. When Hillman first foisted Beckerman upon the New York organization against the will of the membership, Beckerman, the appointed dictator, boasted that as long as he was manager the meetings called by the left wing of the Amalgamated would be broken up by him. The Advance roared with delight when Beckerman, with the aid of strong-arm squads and police, smashed a number of left wing meetings. It was declared that the left wing was dead and peace and order once more restored in New York. The Central Opera House meeting showed that the left wing in the Amalgamated is far from being dead; that it still has the confidence and support of the rank and file. Beckerman did not dare to break up the Central Opera House meeting because he know that the left wing was able to prevent him from doing so. The left wing, with the Central Opera House meeting, pricked the Beckerman bubble and paved the way to the overcoming of the ruthless terrorism instituted against the rank and file in order to prevent them from expressing their opposition to the methods and policies of the administration.

The Advance wants to discredit the meeting by stating that a regulation New York Workers Party crowd attended the meeting. It takes the genius and logic of a Salutsky to make such a convincing argument."

Workers Party Influence.

THAT the Workers Party has influence among the workers in New York, especially the tailors, cannot be denied. The Workers Party is proud that The Advance has to admit that workers from the shops attend its meetings. If a gathering of workers is synocomous with a Workers Party meeting, what has that to do with the Central Opera House meeting and the role of the Amalgamated in the cloakmakers' strike. The Workers Party does not boast of meetings with the assistance of Jacob Panken, Rose Pastor and of banquets attended by manufacturers and contractors. Beckerman and Hillman are proud of attending such gatherings. The left wing is opposed to such fraternization between the officials of the union and the bosses. The left wing of the Amalgamated, unlike the reactionary officials, is not afraid to face its face before the masses, and particularly before the rank and file of the union.

The Amalgamated rank and file is not frightened by such asinine arguments. Furthermore, The Advance should know that the rank and file of the Amalgamated, and especially the supporters of the left wing, know that the Communist Party is the most loyal champions of the working class and the workers' staunchest supporters in their struggles against the bosses.

THE ADVANCE screams, "They would rather make the Amalgamated what they thought it ought to be or break it." What tommyrot! Why doesn't The Advance take stock of the disruptive activities that are carried on by the reactionary officialism, activities that are undermining and destroying the organization. No one knows better than The Advance that the left wing is interested in building and strengthening the union, not destroying it.

The Advance, being on the inside, could give more facts about the destructive activities of the reactionary officialdom than I can, nevertheless I will numerate a number that will be sufficient to convince anyone.

The Amalgamated officials have been carrying on an expulsion policy. The most active and loyal members have been expelled from the union. Local unions have been reorganized and the duly elected officials either expelled or suspended from the organization.

Policy of Terror.

A FASCIST regime of terror against the membership has been instituted. Workers are brutally beaten up for expressing an opinion in opposition to the policies of the administration. Workers who do not obey the orders of the officials are deprived of their jobs. For maintaining a political view distasteful to the officials, members have been expelled from the union.

The union officials in league with the bosses have agreed to the speeding up of production, reductions in wages and the firing of hundreds of workers from their jobs.

When other needle trades unions ware fighting for better conditions for their workers the Amalgamated in New York closed a most shameful agreement with the manufacturers, making no demands upon them, an agreement that paves the way for speeding up and peacework in the New York market. That when this agreement was emphatically rejected by the masses the administration ignored the will of the masses and hailed the agreement as a great victory.

Constitution Flouted.

THE constitution no longer is being lived up to in New York. Elections are not held as provided for. Meetings of local unions are a farce, the meetings being packed with gangsters and the membership not permitted to talk. When a vote is taken and it is against the officialdom it is registered in their favor. Elections when they are held, are a farce. Thousands of votes that have never been cast are recorded, as, for example, the vote for Beckerman for member of the G. E. B., while votes cast for the left wing are not counted.

These are some of the things that are undermining the union. It is against these evils that the left wing is fighting. But the left wing does not stop there. It is not a mere opposition. It has a constructive program and lavors policies that will build and strengthen the union, not break it.

The left wing fights for democracy and constitutional conduct of the union. The left wing proposes a militant fighting policy to better the conditions for the workers. The left wing stands for the elimination of the speed-up system. The left wing is for the 40-hour five-day week and is ready to help it. The left wing is for organization of the unorganized. The left wing is for greater unity of all needle workers thru amalgamation, the building of one powerful union for all needle workers. The left wing is for a labor party to unify and obtain political power for workers. I would like to know by what stretch of the imagination The Advance can maintain that such proposals will end in the breaking up of the Amalgamated. The left wing is a constructive force; it doesn't try to build up the organization like Hillman, by bringing back into power corruptionists who have besmirched the name of the Amalgamated and who are still dragging it in the mire for their own selfish purposes.

About Contribution.

THE ADVANCE is particularly indignant over a statement that Ben Gitlow, the writer of this article, made to the effect that the Amalgamated contributed only $10,000 to the cloakmakers' strike. It is a lie, declares The Advance, the Amalgamated contributed more. It gave $27,500. Splendid! A credit to the Beckerman-Hillman administration. Twenty-seven thousand five hundred dollars from a large national needle trades union that has over 100,000 members, while a small union like the furriers, with only 10,000 members, has already given over $50,000. And how was the money given? Relief was withheld until very late in the strike, at a time when the workers were desperate from starvation and on their last legs. The first payment—Mr. Hillman cannot deny it—was not more than a miserable $10,000 dollars from an organization with two prosperous labor banks.

The payments were made in dribbles until a total of $27,500 was reached. The whole matter is an indictment against the neglect, conscious withholding of the relief so urgently needed by the striking cloakmakers who were putting up a magnificent struggle, not only for themselves, but for all workers. In the needle trades. The same cannot be said of the cloakmakers' officials. As we says hitherto, they showed little or no of the Amalgamated in their struggles with rank and file class conscious spirit.

Made a Bad Job.

The facts are very clear. The Advance has made a bad job in trying to impugn all kinds of foreign motives to the Central Opera House meeting. The rank and file, which has suffered too much from the destructive activities of Beckerman, Hillman and Co., will call a spade a spade. It will continue to condemn the criminal role played by the Amalgamated in the cloakmakers' strike.

About the other issues raised in the editorial, the question of the T. U. E. L. receivership and that the union under the left wing has not functioned well, will be dealt with in another article.

A Roumania in the East

Dutch Java in the East Indies has become the Roumania of the Orient thru the bloody campaign of extermination launched against the revolutionary workers on the island.

Many slain and wounded, hundreds imprisoned and now the announced exile of the Communist leaders of the struggle indicates deep-rooted discontent among the workers and the most brutal methods on the part of the reigning tyranny to maintain itself in power.

Details leading up to the present events are lacking. But they show an increasing militancy among the workers of Java in common with those of neighboring countries, especially in Australia, India, the Philippines and China.

Boasting of its alleged "democracy" at home, Holland, nevertheless, employs all the torture instruments of imperialism in order to subdue the coffee, sugar and rubber workers on its treasured colonial possessions, even as Belgium in its Congo.

The socialist sentiment on the island was strong even before the world war. Since the Bolshevik revolution in Russia, the revolutionary movement on the island has developed into a strong Communist Party wielding great influence in the trade unions. Owing to the oppressive measures of the government, the unions have been forced to lead a semi-illegal existence, but this does not seem to have isolated them from the masses of workers. The failure of the exploiters to crush the organized workers no doubt brought on this latest assault with its killings and jailings, as a result of which the governor general reports to the Dutch colonial ministry that the situation thruout West Java is "satisfactory." Just as "satisfactory" as Mussolini sirting on his Italian "Vesuvius."

The attack on the Javanese workers is merely another argument in favor of greater unity, not only between the workers of the Orient, but of the Pacific nations and of the world. American labor can help by sending delegates to the proposed Pan-Pacific Trade Union Conference to be held at Canton, China, starting May 1, 1927.

Investigate the War on Nicaragua

Dispatches from Washington indicate that sentiment is growing in favor of a senate investigation of the war openly launched against Nicaragua by the United States government.

This is an opportunity for Senator William E. Borah, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, to translate into action some of the many altruistic words he utters on behalf of oppressed peoples.

Congress has not formally declared war on Nicaragua, as it is supposed to do, according to the constitution, before actual hostilities can be started. But the constitution was adopted nearly a century and a half ago, and is therefore considered an antique document. Congress never declared war on the Union of Soviet Republics, but armies were sent in, nevertheless, thru Archangel and Murmansk, on the north, and thru Vladivostok, in the Far East, in an effort to destroy the workers' republic. The crushing defeat suffered by American troops, in common with other imperialist Hessians, at the hands of the Soviet red army, will not be mentioned in histories for use in American schools.

Similarly, American workers and farmers are asked to turn their faces while Wall Street's chosen butchers, the marines, do their bloody work in Hayti, yesterday, in Nicaragua, today, and somewhere else, tomorrow. In the words of the Chicago Tribune:

> "That famous emissary of peace and order, the American marine, tho he carries a rifle in place of an olive branch, continues to be the good angel of feverish and distraught little republics of the banana belt."

Let no one be deceived. A senate investigation will not stop imperialist aggressions in Central and South America. It will, however, help throw the limelight of publicity on the cutthroat rule of the financial bandits, hailed by the American flag, and partially blessed by the Roman pope, thru his attack on Mexican labor, at our own front alley of the Nicaraguan people. The war on Nicaragua gives Senator Borah an opportunity to apply himself to a concrete example of American bullying tactics of "dollar diplomacy" near home. Let him go to it.

Karl Marx on Fordism

Henry Piles Up His Big Profits on the Time the Worker Works for Him and for Which He Is Not Paid—An Explanation of RELATIVE and ABSOLUTE Surplus Value

By THURBER LEWIS
ARTICLE THREE

MARX calls this difference between the value that the worker adds to the commodity to pay for his labor power and the value of the total eight hours of application, SURPLUS VALUE. It is the time over and above the VALUE of his labor power that the worker works and for which he is not paid, his unpaid labor time.

It is in this surplus value that Henry is interested altho he doesn't call it that. This is the source of his profits as it is the source of the profits of all capitalists. What they do is to own the means of work. Henry OWNS the Highland Park plant in which thousands of workers slave eight hours a day EVERY ONE OF THEM contributing his share of UNPAID LABOR TIME or SURPLUS VALUE from which Henry reaps his big bank balances and his ability to reinvest in the industry and make bigger profits. And all this time Henry pays them at their value. What protest have the workers got coming?

What About 5-Day Week.

NOW that we have cleared up these things, we come to the main question: Why, if he gets his profit from the unpaid labor time of the workers, does Henry shorten the work-time of the workers? Doesn't he reduce his profits accordingly?

Let us go back to Marx again. There are two kinds of surplus value. One kind Marx calls ABSOLUTE surplus value and the other RELATIVE surplus value.

Absolute surplus value is derived by the employer by LENGTHENING the hours of work so that, the period required by the worker to work out the value of his labor power remaining the same, the extra hours tacked on in his day means extra profits to the boss. This is the method used in some industries. When the open shoppers make a drive for the abolition of the eight-hour day and the substitution of a nine or ten-hour day, it means they are increasing the ABSOLUTE surplus value by one or two hours and swelling their profits that much.

The New Method.

IN other industries, and this is the rule in the present highly competitive and efficient period of industrial development, instead of lengthening the working day, the bosses make the worker produce more in the same or less amount of time than he did before. The intensify the amount of labor power that he expends in, say, eight hours.

Another way of doing it is to introduce better and more efficient machinery and by systematizing and dividing the work to create an ever greater amount of saleable material in the same period of time. This type of surplus value Marx designates as RELATIVE surplus value. This is the kind of surplus value that has become endeared to the hearts of Henry and some other capitalists that use his methods, and that has made them rich.

In the Ford auto plants, the extraction of relative surplus value has become a science. As we saw, the Ford economists explain their profits on an altogether different ground. They speak in a superficial way of Henry getting rich because he had the foresight and the industrial science to "save on labor" and to introduce "efficiency methods" and install "time saving machinery." But boiled down, all these things mean that Ford is getting exorbitantly rich by extracting the maximum amount of RELATIVE SURPLUS VALUE from his workers.

So how do you account for the much vaunted eight-hour day and six dollar minimum and five-day week? Upon this very fact of Ford's ability to arrange his production in such a way as to intensify and increase the expenditure of labor power to a point where the very extraction of relative surplus value in a large measure depends upon his shortening the work day and paying his men more wages.

Limit to Endurance.

THIS points is that there is a limit to human endurance. An employer can make a big profit when his workers are able to give their utmost to production. The well-known intensification and systematization of production in the Ford plants have been carried to the point where, taking all his workers together, it would be physically impossible for them to work more than eight hours per day. Then six dollars a day because, by his getting such a large amount of relative surplus value out of his workers, he can afford to pay them a little above the value of their labor power so they will have more comforts, be stronger physically and be able to work with greater intensity as a consequence.

Ford Benefits by 5-Day Week.

THE same thing applies to the five-day week. With two days a week rest, Ford's workers come to the shops on Monday morning fresh and strong. The forty hours of intensive and monotonous labor that his plants require to keep them going under his system make an eight-hour day and a two-day rest an ABSOLUTE DISADVANTAGE for Ford by enabling the workers to keep up the pace and Ford to extract the maximum of surplus value

HENRY IN HIS FIRST CAR.

In these days Henry didn't amount to much. Even horseless carriages were a scarcity. Large scale production had not begun to blossom. He himself could not foresee the phenomenal development of American capitalism that was to come. Swept along with the rise of capitalism in this country Henry Ford got into the main swim of large scale production and built an industrial machine upon which millions of people are in one way or another dependant. This is not merely to be attributed to Ford. The Ford machine, like all big industrial machines, is a social instrument. But because Henry and his family are the OWNERS, these millions must allow themselves to be exploited by one little family which gets richer every year by millions of dollars. It is this social aspect of capitalism that Ford so conveniently overlooks and that Marx explains so well.

Americanizing Europe and Coolieizing America - By Bert Miller

SLOWLY but surely the tide of business activity is turning from America toward Europe. The much vaunted American standard of production, which was to safeguard the American workers from the economic ills of Europe—is beginning to feel the brain of the world's economic crisis and of Europe's adoption of American methods, under the benevolent tutelage of American capitalists.

The industrial workers of New England, the cotton textiles of the south and the farmers of the West are already feeling the heavy weight of "Coolidge prosperity." European industry is being reorganized in the gigantic cartels, on the American plan, under the leadership of American finance. The stream of cheap foreign products has begun to flow to our shores and it will soon turn into a mighty flood under the magic touch of the international bankers. The isolation and security of the American workers is being battered down just as surely as the walls of the feudal lords were battered down by the cannons of a rising capitalist class.

Germany Adopts American Methods.

In this connection it is interesting to note the comment of Dr. David Friday before the American Association of Security Analysts in New York. The New York Times makes the following report on the meeting.

> "An industrial revolution, based upon the widespread adoption of American industrial and technical methods, largely financed by American capital, has taken place within Germany in the last eighteen months. This move has proved so effective and profitable that Germany is now paying reparations with ease, is rapidly accumulating capital and in recent months has begun to report an excess of exports over imports."

Even the American monopoly of company unionism is being destroyed. The October 15 issue of the Communist International gives an instance of this from England.

> "A certain John Dickinson owner of a large paper firm, declared after the strike that in view of the disloyalty displayed by certain of the trade unions of which his workers were members he, Dickinson, had decided not to recognize the trade unions in the future, but to form a 'Union of the House of Dickinson,' instead. In the 'manifesto' which the owner of the House of Dickinson presented to his 'subjects' for them to carry out and be guided by, he expounds the principles and regulation on which the 'company union' is to be based. In accordance with these statutes all the directors, employes and workers are members of the 'union of the House of Dickinson' and needed side by side with the trade unions in order to maintain competition with America on the world market. It is necessary to come up to the level of America in all respects. The German capitalists are 'levelling up!'

The American workers must awaken to the dangers in the situation and prepare themselves to meet them by an intensive campaign of organization into the trade unions as well as in concerted move toward world trade union unity to establish a firm line of resistance on an international scale against the efforts of international finance to reduce the workers of the United States to the level of the coolie.

Gov. Pinchot Defends Raids on Reds' Homes

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WOODLAWN, Pa., Nov. 21.—Gov. Amos Pinchot is apparently disposed to whitewash the police of this city in the matter of raiding three homes on Nov. 11. The accused, according to the governor's report, have been for six months holding seditious meetings and forming a society "avowedly for the overthrow of the government." He maintains that the bosses were searched with proper warrants and that the state police, the cossacks, were called in to reduce the "chance of bloodshed and disorder." The raids resulted in the arrest of eight men and one woman, seven of who were said to have been attending a birthday party at the time.

The American Civil Liberties Union protested in a telegram to the mayor of this city against the "unlawful activities of local police," and dispatched messages to the governor and to James Maurer, president of the State Federation of Labor.

So he is going to build a palatial building to house his grand opera which he expects to be the best in the world. And no doubt he will, since ditras will dive for money with as much enthusiasm as a cormorant will dive for a fish. This investment may also be worth while to him in the way of winning back that "public" favor which was considerably outraged by his expenditure of funds to debauch the electorate in the recent elections.

THE Chicago Tribune is angry because several members of a labor union were acquitted of bombing charges by a jury after a few moment's reflection. Our esteemed anti-labor contemporary is always hot up when such acquittal happens. We admit that had the defendants been radicals instead of followers of old party politicians things might not have gone so well with them, but whether or not the capitalist press never likes to see a trade unionist escape the pen, unless the frameup is so obvious that the masses might begin to doubt capitalist "justice."

BUT frame-ups are in the habit of escaping the attention of the capitalist press until the masses get dangerously aroused—dangerously for the capitalists. An example of this kind is the Sacco-Vanzetti case. Here are two Italian labor leaders who were hooked for the electric chair. But for the intervention of the working class the worms that figure on juries on Sacco and Vanzetti for a few years, would now be begging for their fodder. And not until repeated attempts on the part of the ruling clique of Massachusetts to hang those workers were thwarted by labor did a few of the capitalist papers decide that the enormities of their execution-departments called for a change of heart.

THE charge made by Joseph Jonas, an official of the Yorkshire Miners' Federation, that American Communism held back money they had collected for the relief of the British miners has been indignantly repudiated by the Workers (Communist) Party and Jones has been taken severely to task by A. J. Cook, secretary of the British Miners' Federation, who pointed out to Jones that, while the reactionary unions affiliated with the Amsterdam lousied money like mayors to the starving miners, the unions of the Soviet Russia, under Communist leadership contributed over $5,000,000 in a true spirit of class solidarity.

JONES'S bitterness against the Communists can be attributed to the defeat at the hands of A. J. Cook, for the secretaryship of the federation. Cook was supported by the Communists and won because of that support. Now Jones declares that he will devote all his time to defeating the Communists out of the coal fields and ignore the fight against the operators. Cook writes him that dis action is the best part of valor. The British miners call Jone's attention to the fact that only the miserable sum of $50,000 came from the American Federation of Labor, while the Russian trade unions that are alleged to be under the iron rule of the Communist Party sent over a million rubles to say the least of traitors like Jones has little effect on the miners.

MARRYING American heiresses has developed into a heavy industry among the aristocracy of Europe nevertheless it was somewhat of a shock to us to learn that the illustrious Duke of Marlborough has already collected $3,100,000 in return for marrying Consuelo Vanderbilt, daughter of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont. Originally Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt Mrs. Belmont admits that she coerced her daughter into marrying the duke who is donating a $100,000 a year as part of the bargain. Now talked about the nationalization of women.

STRIKE STRATEGY

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

ARTICLE XXI

Arbitration

Strike strategy must deal with the question of arbitration. Arbitration in strikes is almost always a weapon of the employers against the workers. Only in rare cases can the workers make effective use of it. Arbitration is a cornerstone in the general structure of class collaboration. It is based upon the anti-working class principles of class peace and a harmony of interest between exploited and exploiters. It kills the spirit of struggle among the workers. This is to the employers' advantage. It also saves the employers from making concessions which they would otherwise have to give up in open strike struggle.

Employers capture the "odd" or decisive men on arbitration boards with almost uncanny regularity. Conservative labor leaders are nonplussed by this, to them an inexplicable phenomenon. Time after time they place "friends" of labor on arbitration boards, only to have them turn tail and support the employers. The reason for this is simple. These "friends" are always members of either the middle or capitalist classes (for the employers will not accept workers) and they have class and personal interests more closely allied to those of the capitalists than to those of the workers. Hence, when the test comes they simply support the interests of their closest class affiliates, the employers.

That Impartial Third Party

This process goes on continuously, with the reactionary trade union leaders being constantly disillusioned by their "friends" on arbitration boards. Yet their hope springs eternal. A typical situation exists on the railroads, where the workers' leaders have accepted Edgar C. Clark as one of the two "odd" men (the other "odd" man is a capitalist) on the board to arbitrate the demands of the conductors and trainmen on the eastern railroads. Clark was formerly Grand Senior Conductor of the Order of Railroad Conductors, but now he is a railroad corporation lawyer. The railroad union leaders believe Clark is their "friend," but the railroad company officials know he is in their service.

A favorable outcome of this arbitration is already assured for the companies. And so it is always. This certainty of controlling the "odd" men, whether selected by agreement with conservative union leaders or appointed by the government, makes the employers ardent advocates of arbitration, voluntary and compulsory.

Employers usually offer arbitration to strong unions in key and basic industries, and refuse it to unions that they believe they can defeat in strikes. An offer of arbitration from the employers is always a compliment to the power of the union involved.

Employers are anxious to establish arbitration in such industries as coal mining, railroads, etc., especially when the workers have secured good unions. Such strategically placed unions are capable of delivering heavy blows. These the employers are keen to ward off. Besides, it is exactly in such situations that the "odd" men on the arbitration boards are most reliably active in protecting the interests of society as a whole.

The Right Wing and Arbitration

The right wing trade union leaders commonly support the employers' policy of foisting arbitration upon the workers. They accept it as a vital part of their general class collaboration program. But the experience of the American labor movement with arbitration has been so bad and there is such a widespread opposition to it among the workers that these leaders are careful about too openly endorsing it.

In industries such as printing, building trades, etc., where the unions are strong and where their strikes usually have no sharp political character, the reactionaries often make a show of opposing arbitration, but wind up by accepting it. But in key industries they actively advocate arbitration, and for pretty much the same reasons as the employers. Typically, Lewis co-operated with the coal operators in forcing the anthracite miners to accept arbitration in their present agreement.

The latest act of treason of the bureaucrats in this respect was the passage of the Watson-Parker railroad law, brought about by them in open alliance with the great railroad magnates. This law, which practically saddles compulsory arbitration upon the railroad workers, is a menace to the progress of the entire American labor movement.

Left Wing Policy

The left wing opposes arbitration in principle as well as in practice. It stands for a policy of open negotiations with the employers. This makes for the best clarification of the issues involved, for securing the most material concessions from the employers, for the greatest stimulation of the workers to struggle and generally for the best development of the trade union movement.

In some cases, however, even the left wing will find it expedient to arbitrate. This is when the workers are especially poverty stricken (which sometimes favorably affects "odd" men) or when their weak unions, hopelessly outmatched by the employers' organizations, must grasp at any straw. Thus it is correct to advocate that the left might refuse arbitration offers from the employers at the begin ning of a strike when the union is strong and get accept arbitration at the end of the same strike, when the union is practically defeated. In such desperate circumstances something may sometimes be saved by arbitration.

When going into arbitration it is of great importance to try to have basic points in controversy, such as recognition of the union, etc., agreed to beforehand, and only points of lesser importance referred to arbitration.

CANTONESE DEFY IMPERIALISTS

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

IT would not be technically correct to say that the British empire conferences and the results of that conference mark the beginning of the dissolution of the empire, because nothing is absolutely right or absolutely wrong. It can be stated, however, with ample proof that the concessions forced from the "mother country" by the dominions mark the OBVIOUS beginning of British imperial dissolution. Fine phrases are used by the British foreign office in an endeavor to prove that the empire has been strengthened rather than weakened by those concessions. But this is the hunk and every intelligent person knows it.

EACH one of the dominions will now have its own ambassadorial and consular service, can make commercial and diplomatic treaties and in full enjoy as much independence as any comparatively weak country can have under imperialism, outside of the formality of recognising the British king as head of the "commonwealth of nations." The dignity of this much freedom was not extended to India which is populated by "inferior people" and which is furthermore the most precious jewel in the imperial crown. The empire is retiring to the old arm-chair, while our imperialistic democracy is polishing up its armor ready for real work.

WE do not mean to imply that Great Britain is going to stop looting, murdering and lying in time-honored fashion, tomorrow or the day after. In fact its activities in that line are today as much in evidence as ever. But the "right little tale" is no longer the workshop of the world and her dominions are not only managing to supply a goodly portion of their own needs for manufactured products but are competing with Britain in the markets of the world. And as for the "blood is thicker than water" nonsense, we might retort that so is molasses. And we should not forget that England's chief competitor today is the United States, a former colony of John Bull.

IN my opinion the empire conference is the biggest story of the day despite the fact that the news of the world is throbbing with life. Imperialism is on the warpath but meeting with resistance. It is becoming clearer every day that a clash between the United States is inevitable with the United States trying to provoke Mexico into giving our imperialists some excuse to whip up popular emotion for a war with our southern neighbor.

AND it must be confessed that our imperialists have played their cards well. The Kellogg is stupid and his diplomatic notes have about as little refinement and finesse as the ribald inscriptions one finds scratched on the walls of a smoking room, the psychological preparation of the public for intervention in Mexico has been effective. It is quite evident now that the vatican and the American government are working hand in hand against Mexico and that Coolidge's refusal to comply with the demands of the Knights of Columbus to intervene in Mexico at that time, was a political move calculated to prevent anti-catholic hostility to the administration in the recent elections.

NOW that the elections are over, the administration is getting truculent towards Mexico, openly seizes Nicaragua and establishes a conservative puppet on the presidential throne, dictates its policy to that fake government, advises Diaz (the aforesaid puppet) to buy off the liberals with money, furnished by the Wall Street bankers and compels Diaz to accuse Mexico of aiding the liberal revolutionists. At the same time the pope issues another one of his spook-inspired encyclicals to the powers of the world and declares that the fight against the Mexican government will continue until the Mexican government is defeated, which means overthrows.

NINE KILLED WHEN BOILERS OF TUG EXPLODE; SEARCH FOR BODIES

ANACORTES, Wash., Nov. 22.—Search for the bodies of nine men who were thought to have been killed when the tug Bahada blew up, was under way in Puget Sound waters, near Samish Island, today.

When the tug, when was towing a log raft from this city to Bellingham, failed to reach its berth a vessel was sent to investigate the delay. The raft was found and also fragments of the tug's pilot house and life boats, indicating the blitzes of the Bahada had exploded.

BUTLER WILL NOT QUIT AS G. O. P. HEAD

Morgan and Mellon Want Him to Stay

By LAURENCE TODD,
(Federated Press)

WASHINGTON— (FP)— William Butler, Massachusetts textile mill baron, will remain chairman of the republican national committee until after the party convention in 1928, regardless of the fact that the voters of his state have retired him from his appointive place in the senate.

That is the word passed out by Butler thru one of his closest friends. President Coolidge confirms it to the extent of indicating surprise that anyone should imagine that his friend will quit.

Keep Tight Hold.

Butler is going to keep a tight hold on the central machinery of the party for two reasons. The first is that the biggest business and banking magnates in the country want him to watch the political fences against any progressive insurgency. The second is that Butler is trusted by Coolidge to manipulate the national committeemen and state chairmen into a Coolidge renomination corral for 1928.

Rifts of the Norris-Frazier-LaFollette-Brookhart group in the senate to the position of balance of power between the block of job-hungry democrats and the block of regular job-holding republicans has lent new importance to the national chairmanship of the G. O. P. This Norris group is pro-labor and pro-farmer, and is likely to propose a series of measures in congress this winter and next year that will give them to Wall Street and Pittsburgh. Butler will stand ready at the long-distance telephone to direct the attacks by editors, party leaders and chambers of commerce in all parts of the country. He is as ugly-tempered in personal defeat as was Alexander Hamilton, and his assaults upon the pro-labor and pro-farmer group will lack nothing in vigor and virulence.

Borah Menace.

Then there is the Borah menace to be met. Borah stays just inside the party lines, denouncing many of the privilege-serving acts of the administration and remaining silent on others. Nobody can safely predict, in advance, whether the republican machine can count on his opposition when a new raid on the public interest is to be carried out. Butler is trusted by Coolidge to resist all the suggestions of compromise that Borah may offer. Less hard-holies will owner that the New Bedford man might yield, occasionally, to the Borah argument that the party should stand with Lincoln on this or that issue. Butler is Lincoln-proof.

Morgan Wants Butler.

Fundamentally, the Morgan-Mellon-Gary interests want Butler to stay on the party quarterdeck because he will steer clear of any suggestion of public ownership or social legislation. Butler will not favor the keeping of government-owned merchant ships. He will oppose all plans for government operation of power plants, either at Muscle Shoals, Boulder Canyon or elsewhere. He approves the sale of the government's air mail planes to private companies. The only public ownership deal that meets his favor is the sale to Uncle Sam of the Cape Cod ship canal which has lost so much money to the Belmont crowd that built it.

As for old age pensions, sickness insurance, federal mediation for industrial disputes, and all other measures for making modern industry safe for wage-workers, Butler regards them all as bolshevism and sedition. This is the final and sufficient evidence of his suitability to manage the renomination of Coolidge.

Raise Keep The Daily Worker Fund to $25,000 by Nov. 30th

Balance needed to reach $25,000..... 5,429.30

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, General Secretary Workers (Communist) Party.

WE must raise the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund to the $25,000 mark by the end of November. That will mean that we have reached the half way mark in raising the total of the $50,000 fund.

There remain nine days in which The DAILY WORKER will receive contributions during the balance of the month. Can our party and its sympathizers raise $5,429.30 during these nine days?

Six of the districts of the party have already passed 50 per cent of their quota. If the other districts of the party mobilize their forces as they have been mobilized in these districts, it should be easy not only to reach the $25,000 mark by November 30, but to greatly exceed this quota.

MOBILIZATION of the party in these districts mean the actual establishment of functioning Keep The DAILY WORKER committees thruout the party organization in these districts. It means sending speakers to every nucleus, checking up on the work done for the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund by each member of the nucleus, and organizing the membership to each raise the $5.00 which is the quota of every party member.

The party members in the Detroit district have shown that it is possible thru systematic work to raise the quota assigned to the district. The party members in the Agricultural District have demonstrated the same fact. The Buffalo district is going forward at a good pace to the 100 per cent mark.

ALL the other districts have been assessed on the same basis. It is not more difficult to complete the quota in these districts than in Detroit, the Agricultural Territory or Buffalo. WHAT IS NEEDED IS THE SAME KIND OF ORGANIZED WORK.

The driving of the total of the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund to the $25,000 mark by the end of the month will just about enable The DAILY WORKER to meet its obligations for the month. On Monday, November 29, The DAILY WORKER will have to meet a bill of close to $2,000 for a car load of paper, without which The DAILY WORKER cannot appear regularly.

This and other obligations makes it imperative that all the forces of the party be concentrated on raising the $5,429.30 to raise the total of contributions to $25,000 by November 30.

The last two weeks' contributions to the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund have shown an upward tendency, after the bad slump of the weeks before.

We must develop the movement in the Keep The DAILY WORKER Campaign that will increase the returns from week to week until the total of $50,000 is raised. The future of The DAILY WORKER depends upon the raising of the whole $50,000.

INCREASE THE WORK FOR THE KEEP THE DAILY WORKER FUND!

DRIVE UP THE TOTAL TO $25,000 BY THE END OF NOVEMBER!
COMPLETE THE $50,000 FUND AND REGISTER A VICTORY FOR THE PARTY AND KEEP THE DAILY WORKER.

BANKER STRAUS AND HENRY FORD TO FIGHT IT OUT

Attacks Against Jews Bring Challenge

BOSTON, Nov. 22.—Charging that Henry Ford has been duped into attacking the Jewish race by the "sycophants who surround him," Nathan Straus, New York financier, has issued a challenge to the Detroit automobile manufacturer to submit his allegations against Hebrews to a committee of ten men, clergymen and laymen. Ford to pick eight and Straus to pick two Christians.

Ford Misinformed.

The Ford attacks, which appeared in the Dearborn Independent, a paper owned by the manufacturer, resulted from the ministrations of those who "for their own reasons have misinformed and deceived him," Straus stated.

"If he submitted the facts to such a committee," Straus added, "he would be fully convinced of the justice of my claim. Is not this a fair proposition?"

The challenge was issued before the national conference on Palestine.

BARON IN U. S., CLAIMS WIFE, SERBIAN PRINCESS, KIDNAPPED BY ROYALISTS

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Court intrigue reaching here from the stormy Balkans was blamed today by Captain Baron Alfred J. V. Hartenau, Austrian nobleman, for the disappearance of his wife, by birth princess of the house of Obrenowitch, former ruling house of Serbia. The baron told police he believes his wife had been kidnapped by agents of the present ruling family at Jugo-Slavia. She disappeared last Friday.

The baron and his wife have been in New York for three months. He is an automotive engineer, here to study American methods.

Youthful Chinese Leader Proclaims Revolution's Aim

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NANCHANG, Kiangsi, Nov. 22.—The consolidation of the revolutionary forces in China; their program for the reconstruction of the country under people's rule; the defeat of the northern war lords; and the expulsion of the imperialist powers from their position of control in China—these were features of the historical pronouncement made in an interview with the press by the youthful General Chang Kai Shek of the Cantonese people's army now pushing northward against the combined armies of Marshal Sun and the Manchurian war-lord, Chang Tso-lin.

The thirty-year-old generalissimo of the revolutionary armies addressed the press in his modest semi-European dress that gave no hint of his high command. He spoke mildly and with no show of bragadaccio. But he bespoke the power of millions of liberated Chinese who have dumped their tuchuns and broken the chains of imperialist bondage.

Challenges Powers.

Throwing down the challenge to the Western powers whose constant intervention and intrigue in China has made for the enslavement and disunity of its peoples, Gen. Chang said:

"The present revolution, will not and until extra-territoriality rights and concessions and unequal treaties have all been abolished. After the success of the present revolution in China, all treaties with all powers will be abrogated instantly, and China will refuse to recognize any treaties whatsoever made with any powers by former governments of China.

"Conquering of the northern militarists but a step in the revolutionary army program. We must instantly remove extra-territorial foreign concessions, put an end to the foreign supervision of customs, and to the foreign postoffices."

But the Cantonese are not only opposed to imperialism in their own country, they are opposed to it everywhere as shown in the words of their young spokesman:

"This revolution purposes the downfall of imperialism, not as it is confined to China alone, but our opposition to it must spread to other countries under imperialist yoke.

"Denunciation of the Belgian treaty by Wellington Koo, minister of finance in the Pekin government, meets our approval. We are willing now to enter into treaties with the powers on an absolutely equal basis, considering at present no treaties exist as all are unequal.

Attitude Towards U. S.

Speaking briefly of the attitude of the Chinese revolutionary movement towards the United States, Gen. Chang lumped America in as of a piece with other imperialist powers whose activities in China are resented by its people:

"Our attitude toward America is friendly, but we consider America an imperialist because she has not given the Philippines freedom. Any country holding territory outside its natural boundaries has an imperialist nature and must relinquish claims to such territory.

But while the first objective of the people's government is the abolition of militarism and the conquering of the feudal lords, the reconstruction on that part of China now in their control is not forgotten.

More Capital.

"Within this month," said Chang, "we will have established the capital of China at Wuchang, removing the government bureaus there from Canton." The object of this is to put the seat of power in the center of the industrial section of China. Wuchang is known as the Pittsburgh of the Far East. It is on the great Yangtze river and was recently captured by the Cantonese from Wu Pei Fu after a long seige. He spoke also of building a bridge across this huge stream, as a step towards unification.

Committee Government.

As to the form of government being set up by the revolutionists with the purpose of spreading it to every section of China, Chang said briefly: "China will have a committee form of government."

As to the immediate military program of the Cantonese against the war lords, the general announced:

"Co-operation has been established with Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang for a drive against Pekin soon, Gen. Feng having joined under our command.

"It is our intention to continue the revolution immediately over the entire country—not limited to any particular territory."

POWERS ACT TO MAINTAIN HOLD ON THE CHINESE

Chang Foretells Latest Ultimatum

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—The declarations of the Cantonese, General Chang-Kai Shek that the revolutionary forces in China would demand the abrogation of all foreign extra-territorial and judicial rights was a well-timed shot that takes the wind out of the sails of the foreign powers who are about to announce their intention of maintaining their present positions in China.

There is unconcealed alarm in Washington over the presentation of the demands of the revolutionary forces of Southern China and there is some disappointment in that Pekin, not the leader of the Cantonese forces called the powers in that, before their ultimatum is delivered—he has told the world what the new China is going to do.

Commission Reports.

The United States government and eleven other powers whose capitalists have money invested in China are on the verge of making public their decision to retain the extra-territorial rights that have been part of the machinery of exploiting the Chinese people.

The commission of representatives of the powers headed by Miles Sherwin of the United States has prepared a 20,000 word report that purports to show cause why the powers should not abandon the extra-territorial privileges they have imposed by force of arms on China.

Based on North

Strangely enough, the report bases its reasons for extra-territoriality on the semi-barbaric and unsound administration of the Chinese war lords and tuchuns that the powers are supporting against the Cantonese. The report tells of the depletion of the government treasury at Pekin; it details statistics concerning the lack of judges and law enforcement machinery in the north. It is on the fact that the Pekin government is only a shadow. And it on arguments that Pekin is now in control of the militarists Cheng Tso Lin and Wu Pei Fu.

Ignores Canton.

A summary of the report now available scarcely mentions the facts of the people's administration in Southern China. It seems to ignore the growing power of the revolutionary movement and the fact that Peking itself is about to fall to the revolutionary forces under Chang Kai Shek.

It is obvious that, far from being directed against the militarists of the north, the report is in actuality a statement of the aims of the powers with regard to the whole of China and foresees the inevitable growth of the revolutionary movement and the end of foreign domination.

Fear Canton.

It is precisely because of the great successes of the anti-imperialist forces of Southern China that the powers will insist upon the privileges they have bribed from the very tuchuns that the report condemns or have secured by marines and gunboats.

The revolutionary pronouncements of the Cantonese puts the report in an entirely different light than had been supposed by its writers it would be.

CONTRACTING BREAKS DOWN UNION FRONT

Practice Extending in Anthracite Mines

By ART SHIELDS.
Federated Press.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 22. —(FP)— Extension of the contractor system this summer and fall in the big railroad company mines in the Scranton and Wilkes-Barre district is breaking down union standards and undermining the United Mine Workers of America. Worst offenders are the Hudson Coal, Pennsylvania Coal, Glen Alden Coal and Scranton Coal companies.

More and more of the tonnage is being taken away from the individual miner and laborer and turned over to these contractors who hire and fire at their own sweet will. All of the new mechanical loaders that began to be introduced this year are adopted by contractors. And a considerable minority of the old fashioned kind of mining is now done then contractors employing from eight to a hundred and fifty men. The contractor takes over several working places and sometimes several whole sections of a vein on a tonnage and yardage basis and hires his labor on a day rate. Some of the contractors are such big operators that they employ straw bosses known as "pusher men" to speed the men up.

Tony Ross.

Tony Ross, one of the biggest Pennsylvania coal contractors, operates several collieries of the No. 6 Big Vein on an open shop basis. Any of his miners and his miners and laborers heard to favor unionism face discharge. Richetto Matteucci, another big Pennsylvania coal contractor, with nearly a hundred men, is more tolerant. He permits his employes to belong to the United Mine Workers as long as they do not agitate" for union standards. But those tolerant contractors expect their men to support the contractors' interests at local union meetings and the "contractor gang" are often a powerful political machine in the union.

Contractors have every reason to seek control of the union and thus stifle protests. The contractors got special privileges in the collieries for which they are reputed to grease the palms of superintendents. They have worn individual miner and laborer can't get them. They get favored places to work in where the money is big. Sometimes they make as much as $760 net for a two weeks' pay.

Ravelt in Union.

Revolt against the contractors breaks out in union meetings. Earlier in November Stanley Klimchak, a miner and six mine laborer at the Mayfield colliery (Pennsylvania Coal) was shot dead at his local meeting. The victim was a co-worker in the mine with Joseph Dzwonczyk, a miner, president of the local union. Dzwonczyk was fighting the contractors' privileges. The contractor gang host charges against him in the local but failed to press them the evening they were to be heard. Instead guns blazed out, the shots missing the president but slaying his laborer. Many women and girls were present in the hall at the time and there was wild confusion. Later the police arrested Louis Consagra, a mine contractor and his two nephews "Santo" Consagra and Joseph Tuzzi for the shooting. Louis Consagra had been suspected six years years ago of a killing in the 1920 strike against the contractors.

That 1920 strike, led by Alex Campbell, lasted three months. At the end the contractor gang of 33 who ruled the Pennsylvania collaries was broken. Some contractors were driven out of the Pennsylvania coal towns. Others had to become individual miners. All coal contracting was abolished the system continued for rock work. In the last three years the system has come back, and has been gaining speed in the last few months.

Pullman Co. Disturbed as Workers Flock to Porters Brotherhood

NEW YORK, Nov. 22. — Pullman Co. officials are disturbed by the number of men old in service who are joining the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, declares W. H. DesVerney, organizer, who has been working in the middle west.

The resignation from service of E. J. Bradley, one of the most popular and influential men in the district, to take charge of the St. Louis union office was a bomb shell to the company, says DesVerney.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—A fourteen-roll trial of legal fencing ended in the small, drab courtroom of Justice Hoehling as Albert B. Fall and Edward L. Doheny, both grey haired, both nationally known, went on trial on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government out of its naval oil reserves.

Many Lawyers.

Fall and Doheny, central figures in the famous case, sat alone, together, flanked on either side by one of the greatest arrays of legal talent ever gathered in a Washington court. Two tables, running half the length of the room, were necessary for the lawyers.

Corporations Are at Least Frank in Their Demand for Tax Cuts

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11. — That there is little demand for further reduction of the normal income tax rate on individuals, but that corporations need an immediate cut in tax rates, is the plea of the American mining congress, thru its official journal, on the eve of its annual meeting in the capital.

It pleads for a cut from 13½ per cent to 10 per cent in the corporation tax.

"It has been the opinion of many authorities on federal taxation that no few individuals pay taxes to the federal government," says the mine owners' statement; "that it would be a good thing for the country, particularly in respect of the attitude of the people toward their franchise responsibilities, if more individuals had to pay some tax . . . Congress should be impressed with this, that because of the diffusion of stock ownership in corporations, a reduction in the corporation rate will afford relief to a larger number of individuals than would a further reduction in individual rates."

No proof of this claim is offered.

BLANK SHELLS, HARMLESS BOMB USED ON DUCE

Confession Reveals Fascist Tricks

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Nov. 22.—There can no longer be any doubt about the status of Col. Ricciotti Garibaldi. By his own confession, the grandson of the great Italian liberator now held by the French police in conjunction with fascist plots hatched on French soil, has revealed that he was working in league with the fascisti in framing up bogus attempts upon the life of Premier Mussolini.

When confronted with documentary evidence showing that he was known to have received thousands of dollars from Rome, Garibaldi confessed. But he protested that his motives were misunderstood. He claims it was his purpose to use the funds given him by the fascisti against the fascisti themselves and said he remains loyal to the anti-fascist cause.

The examining inspector, however, showed that all of Garibaldi's acts were plainly in the service of the fascisti and that he could produce no evidence to show that any of his activities were a help to the anti-fascist movement, altho he said Ricciotti Garibaldi is the victim of his own muddle headedness.

Blank Shells.

Garibaldi said he knew all the details of the attempted "assassination" of Mussolini by the English woman, Violet Gibson. He claimed that blank cartridges were used in her gun and that Mussolini's wound was feigned. The fascisti themselves put Gibson up to the attempt, he said.

With regard to the so-called bombing in September, when Sino Locatti threw a "bomb" at Premier Mussolini, Garibaldi disclosed the following facts: Locatti's movements were closely watched by the Italian police from the time he left France to perform the "deed." The "bomb" that was placed in his hands was of a similar kind. Mussolini himself knew about the would-be assassination.

Boy "Assassin" Trained.

Garibaldi also claimed that his fascist fellow conspirator, Locatti, the eighteen-year-old boy that fired at Mussolini recently, for many weeks. "The revolver that was put into the boy's hand was loaded with blank shot" the colonel said.

Italy in Grip of Terror.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 18. — All Italy is in the grip of a "reign of terror" instituted by Benito Mussolini in an hysterical attempt to crush all opposition to fascism, according to reports leaking past the strict fascist censor.

Murders have been committed with official sanction, wholesale arrests have been made, opposition papers flogged, private homes invaded, and other outrages have occurred thruout the nation.

Arrest Deputies.

Opposition members in the chamber of deputies have been expelled, and following expulsion were ordered arrested by Mussolini. Many are already thrown into jail, awaiting "fascist justice."

At Vittorio, 30 republicans were ejected from their homes in the middle of the night, seized by mobs of fascisti, beaten and forged. At Cone, republicans were forced to march thru the streets, amid hootings of the mobs, with their faces painted.

Murder Former Minister.

Cavazoni, a former cabinet member, was murdered by a mob in Bergamo. Cavazoni was taken from his home and beaten mercilessly. A rope was placed around his neck and he was dragged to a gallows. Their intention of lynching him was not carried out, but Cavazoni succumbed to the severe blows he received.

The Rome residence of Count Sforza, former foreign minister, was raided by mobs of fascists and destroyed.

News of other outrages continue to pour in, but details are lacking.

Dissolve Societies.

All societies and organizations in Italy, suspected of anti-fascist tendencies, have been ordered dissolved by official decree.

In Paris, fascisti invaded the offices of the royalist newspaper, L'Action Francaise because of confriendly statements published in the paper. Shots were fired and one fascist was wounded. The mob attempted to destroy the newspaper building.

GOVERNMENT SUES ARMS MANUFACTURER WHO SOLD DEFECTIVE WAR WEAPONS

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 22.—Suit for $129,444.81 was filed by the government here today against the National Malleable and Steel Castings company of Cleveland, it being alleged that the government paid that sum for a shipment of trench mortar shells during the war which later were found defective.

The defendant company, which also has branches in Chicago, Toledo and Indianapolis, is alleged to have made a delivery at Indianapolis on December 31, 1917, of 183,161 of the stokes castings on a contract calling for 1,150,000 of the shells. They were found, it was cited, to be improperly annealed.

Complete Plans for Sacco-Vanzetti Meet in Chicago, Friday

Plans for one of the largest meetings held in Chicago for a long time are being completed by the Chicago Sacco-Vanzetti committee. The meeting will take place at the Ashland Auditorium, Ashland and Van Buren on Friday, Nov. 26, 8 p. m., and from the advance sale of tickets it is planned to accomodate the overflow audiences which will undoubtedly come thars in nearby assembly rooms.

Unions thruout the city have already purchased large amounts of tickets in bloc, some unions of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of Chicago having already bought upwards of 7,000 tickets. Thousands of other tickets are being bought by other labor bodies. The entire Chicago labor movement is backing this protest meeting to prove the unbroken solidarity of the workers of this city with the cause of the two innocent Italian workers who are being menaced with legal assassination in Massachusetts.

Besides the speakers, the local conference committee has secured the support of prominent liberal and labor men of the city who will cooperate in the meeting. These will either attend the meeting and occupy special seats on the platform or send special messages of greeting and solidarity. Among them are the Reverend Dr. Normsn R Berr, of Olivet Institute, Dr. John A Haigh, of the American Civil Liberties Union and the Chicago Liberal Club, Fred A. Moore, of the Chicago Forum Council, Miss Jane Addams, of the Hull House, Clarence Darrow, William H. Henry, national secretary of the Socialist Party, and William Z. Foster. Others who have been invited include Graham Taylor, Mary McDowell, Professor Ernest Burgess, Professor Paul Douglas, Professor Thomas D. Elliott, Sheilar Mathews, Prestown Bradley and others.

Over 30,000 tickets are already out and it is expected that a record crowd will turn out to hear the speakers. John Fitzpatrick president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, Vincenzo Vacirca, editor of the New York Italian labor daily, Il Nuovo Mondo; Elizsheth Gurley Flynn, national chairman of International Labor Defense; Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison, of the Christian Century will be the speakers under the chairmanship of Anton Johannsen, of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Wrangle of Farmers Winds Up in Murder

PEORIA, Ill., Nov. 21. — Homer Driscoll, 29, farmer, was held today for the murder of Andrew Podjunas, 44, whose shot-riddled body was found in a corn field by his wife.

An argument over the use of a driveway which led into the two farm yards is believed to have been the cause of the shooting.

Legal Fight Outlives Rooster.

WAUKEGAN, Ill., Nov. 21. — Six years of legal fighting was ended here today when Lenora Kingsley, 12, was given $1,200 for the loss of an eye pecked out by a rooster on the farm of Emil Wsinechi, a distant relative, near Barrington.

The settlement was made out of circuit court where Leonard Kingsley, Lenora's father, was suing Weinecki for $20,000. The Kingsley were guests at the time of the accident.

Conspirators Must Stand Trial.

Federal Judge Fitzhenry yesterday overruled demurrers in the Druggan-Lake jail liberty conspiracy case and ordered the defendants to enter pleas. Two of the defendants, Sheriff Hoffman and Warden Westbrook, have already served jail sentences for contempt of court in the same case, which involved permitting Druggan and Lake, two millionaire beer barons, to walk in and out of jail at their pleasure.

China's Revolutionary Army Struggles for the Downfall of Imperialism

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

REVOLUTION rumbles on in the Orient. Ever forward!

Out of the thunder of the northward moving revolutionary armies of the South Chinese Republic a voice speaks clearly and confidantly.

It is the voice of the youthful general, Cheng Kai Shek, and he declares with a note of defiance to world imperialism, clear and unmistakable, that all treaties hitherto imposed on China must be scrapped, that all extraterritorial foreign concessions must be wiped out, foreign judicial jurisdiction must be abolished and then adds:

"This revolution proposes the downfall of imperialism, not as it is confined to China alone, but our opposition to it must spread to other countries under the imperialist yoke."

That is encouragement for all the victims of imperialism in the Far East. It will help steel the mild protestings of the Filipinos, it will inspire the growing militancy of Australian labor, it will be a more brightly burning beacon light for India's suffering millions, it will hearten the victims of Dutch oppression in Java and thruout the East Indies, it will nerve for new struggles the people of Afghanistan, of Persia, of Syria and on into Egypt and the other countries of Africa. American labor, too, must learn where its interests lie.

The declaration just issued by General Chang Kai Shak shows conclusively that the Chinese revolution feels the earth solid beneath its feet, that it is confident of quickly terminating the struggle to drive the last pro-imperialist "war lord" into the Pacific, and, most important, that there is inherent in the revolution sufficient strength to combat and overcome any armed force that the foreign imperialists may hurl against it.

I think national revolution speaks out with all the self-assurance today that was shown by the Bolshevik Revolution of the Russian workers and peasants in November 7, 1917, that launched the world social revolution.

The declaration by General Chang Kai Shek, that the American capitalist news agency, the Associated Press, carries as the day's most important news to great number of the newspapers of this country, is not the individual opinion of this revolutionary leader. It is the expression of the revolutionary movement itself. This is clearly shown by a comparison of this statement with the official proclamations issued by the Kuomintang, the party of the revolution. In a recent proclamation to the Hang-Kong strikers, the central executive committee of the Kuomintang, declares:

"Fifteen years ago the Manchu Dynasty was overthrown and a republic was established. But during those 15 years our country was a republic in name only, in reality it was under the domination of imperialism, militarism and reaction. The militarists carried on incessant civil wars which devastated and impoverished our people, while the imperialists kept us in the state of a subjected race, dividing us thru our own reactionaries and dominating us economically and politically. The chief enemy of our country . . .

"Today, two and a half years after the first congress of the Kuomintang, the central executive committee of the party solemnly proclaims before the revolutionary world that in entering the banners of the national revolution to the masses of the people, our expectations have been fully justified. Today the National Revolutional Movement rests upon the firm foundation of the people and in proportion as this foundation deepens, widens and grows stronger we get nearer and nearer to our goal.

"The power of the National Revolution is no longer confined to the province of Kwangtung. Every day brings us the gladsome news that our armies together with the revolutionary forces of the people are gaining more and more ground against militarism, imperialism and reaction. While the goal of the National Revolution is still far we have many reasons to rejoice at the progress we are making.

"The new policy means that much effort must be used in the re-establishment and strengthening of the people's organizations thruout the country, and in securing revolutionary provincial and district government in the places which have already been occupied or will be occupied in the future. When all this is done, then the anti-imperialist front will become unshakable and its final victory assured. Then the independence and liberty of China, the welfare of the suffering masses will be secured.

"Comrades! Today, we are reorganizing to prepare ourselves and the whole country for a new advance against imperialism, militarism and reaction.

"Long live the Hongkong-Canton strikers!

"Long live the Revolutionary Patriots, who have loyally supported the anti-imperialist boycott and strike!

"Long live the National Revolution."

It is on the basis of such Kuomintang policies that General Chang Kai Shek speaks declaring that:

"The present revolution will not end until extraterritoriality rights and concessions and unequal treaties have all been abolished. After the success of the present revolution in China, all treaties with all powers will be abrogated instantly, and China will refuse to recognize any treaties whatsoever made with any powers by former governments of China.

"Conquering of the northern militarists is but a step in the revolutionary advance.

"Within a month we will have established the capital of China at Wuchang, removing the government hereue there from Canton."

China thus rises to demand her place in the sun. To do so shakes the pillars of the world imperialist structure, challenging its very existence. This includes the United States and that is why every word that General Chang Kai Shek utters should be of tremendous interest to the whole American working class. The Chinese revolutionary general says:

"We consider America an imperialist, because she has not given the Philippines freedom. Any country holding territory outside its natural boundaries has an imperialist nature and must relinquish claims to such territory."

That draws the whole American working class into the orientel situation, because American workers will be called to arms, to fight for Wall Street, to retain the Philippines under its imperialist flag. American labor, however, must instead join the Chinese workers in their struggle "for the downfall of imperialism."

GUATEMALA IS NEW CAUSE OF U. S. CONCERN

Nicaragua Quelled by Force; Guatemala Next

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—With rebel forces in Nicaragua intimidated by the presence of a large naval fleet and that country well under the dominion of United States interests, the eyes of Washington are now roving to Guatemala, where elections are to be held shortly.

While the two contestants for the Guatemalan presidency are both of a type to cause American fruit and banking interests no particular concern the fact that the country is bounded on the north and west by "bolshevik" Mexico is considered reason for watching events with great care.

Harmless Candidates.

The two candidates for the presidency are General Chocon and General Ubico. Both are susceptible to the power of the New York financiers whose money is a big factor in Guatemala, and neither is likely to take any steps that could be looked upon as hostile to the United States. Diplomacy has already seen to that.

But the Guatemalan labor movement is decidedly sympathetic to the anti imperialist declarations of Mexico The fact that a large portion of the population works directly or indirectly for American investors in the banana forests and mines of the country and that these workers are beginning, under the lead of the Mexican labor movement, to resent the presence of foreign exploiters is reason enough for Washington to be on the alert.

Fleet Ready.

At the state department it was said that Admiral Latimer's Carribean fleet was cruising in Central American waters and is prepared to "protect American interests" at any point required. One of these points is Guatemala.

Mexico's reply to the note of the United States with regard to the land and oil laws is said to be of a sharp nature and entirely upholds the previous stand of the Calles government that the laws are to be vigorously enforced and their retroactive clauses observed. There is some hint of an ultimatum being forwarded to Mexico on this question.

The state department is still working in Nicaragua with a view towards the building of a proposed new canal thru that country. No small part made of the fact that one of the reasons for the drive against Mexico over the question of the latter country's influence in Nicaragua hinges on the canal project. The United States many years ago bought complete rights to the canal. But official Washington is resentful of Mexico because it is desired to secure unrestrained United States control in Nicaragua as a protection for the important canal project.

U. S. Hypocrisy Assailed

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 23—The official government organ, Excelsior, takes occasion in its issue of Sunday to rap what it calls United States hypocrisy with regard to Nicaragua. The paper says:

"The present exhibition of dollar diplomacy is even more vulgar than previous amazing performances. The White House's recognition of the spurious Diaz government of Nicaragua is so inconsistent as morally to become an absurdity irritating farce. Secretary Kellogg's assumption of concern at imaginary Mexican interference in Nicaragua is a rabid exhibition of hypocrisy, because Diaz, the White House's Nicaraguan president, has been the puppet of American capital ism in Nicaragua."

This represents an increase of about $3,000,000 for the army.

The budget estimates are: War department, $364,346,000 of which $283,- 345,000 are strictly for military purposes, and $85,000,000 for "non-military," including the Panama canal.

Navy, $323,061,000.

Aviation, $89,000,000 (approximate).

Navy Men Clamor for Big Merchant Marine

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—The United States shipping board, having just completed a tour of the country to get "public opinion" on the subject, was fully informed recently by officers of the navy. Captain J. K. Robinson, retired, of the third naval district, was one of those who voiced his views, when he asserted that if America is to keep abreast of its competitors we "must build 400,000 tons of shipping a year." Other officers declared that an adequate merchant marine was necessary to protect our shores from a possible foreign invasion. As to what became of all the shipping we built at such tremendous expense during the war, to protect against an earlier mythical invasion, silence reigned. It seems we must do the thing all over again.

Captain Robinson doesn't "care who builds them—private enterprise or the government itself—but this country must have ships." The government itself, he probably feels, can be trusted to see that it falls to private enterprise.

New York Workers Endorse Plan for National Sacco-Vanzetti Conference

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 22—The great mass meeting that jammed Madison Square Garden, New York City, with 15,000 workers last Wednesday for the purpose of demanding a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti, unanimously passed the following two resolutions concerning the case:

Whereas, that the efforts of their outraged fellow-workers this sentence has so far been averted and a continuous fight has been waged to keep them from going to their graves as common felons; and

Whereas, there has recently been discovered evidence which proves conclusively the innocence of these workers, and yet the courts of Massachusetts maintain their stony-hearted indifference to the accumulated evidence of the base frame-up of these workers; be it therefore

Resolved, that we, workers of New York City, gathered in Madison Square Garden, November 17, 1926, to protest the recent denial of a new trial to Sacco and Vanzetti, pledge ourselves to carry on, without ceasing, the battle for the lives of our class-conscious brothers;

That we call on the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee to arrange, within one month, a mass delegation of trade unionists to wait upon Governor Fuller of Massachusetts to demand a new trial;

That we endorse the plan for a national congress in New York City within two months, to continue this demand for a new trial; and be it further

Resolved, that we hereby broadcast a call to all workers of the country to send representatives to this congress and by their support help to gain a new trial and freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti.

Whereas, from recent affidavits made by former agents of the United States department of justice, it appears that the department of justice took an active part in, and perhaps even instigated the frame-up of Sacco and Vanzetti; and

Whereas, Sacco and Vanzetti were charged with and were tried for an offense against the state of Massachusetts and legally the department of justice had no concern with this case; and

Whereas, the present officials of the department of justice have refused to open their files in order to furnish evidence in connection with the Sacco-Vanzetti case; be it further

Resolved, that we, demand a congressional investigation of the department of justice's activities in relation to the Sacco and Vanzetti case, and we urge the senators and congressmen from New York state to do all in their power to hasten the freeing of these two persecuted workers.

Vanzetti Is Calm in Prison Cell from Which He May Never Be Freed; the Law Hates Him Because of Innocence, He Says

By JOHN DOS PASSOS,
Federated Press.

BOSTON, Nov. 22. — (FP) — The Charlestown House of Correction is built like a church in the shape of a cross. Visitors wait in the chancel and are ushered into the crossing where the high altar would be in a catholic church. There, facing a warden at a desk, is a semicircle of benches. On all the benches are couples of people talking a little breathlessly.

Visitors Are Ashamed.

Of each of these couples one is a convict, the other is a friend, a brother, a wife. The visitors from the outside sit uneasily; they feel ashamed of the freshness of their cheeks, of the smell of freedom on their clothes; like visitors in a hospital they wish they were out again and feel ashamed of themselves for wishing it. The prisoners have only one wish; they keep glancing to the right and left over their shoulders as if there is for fear of something that they keep glancing over their shoulders as they talk to the people from the outside.

Vanzetti Is Calm.

Vanzetti sits on the bench, thick chested and calm. If you didn't know him you would not feel he was different. He has a look of broadbrowed calm about him. His lips don't tremble when he smiles under his thick moustache. But it is the calm of a man with his back to the wall. He too glances from time to time over his shoulders as if to make sure that there is nobody creeping up behind him.

"Well what do you think?" we ask each other. The case is something apparent, far away, like a principal heard over the radio, "Pretty bad," says Vanzetti, "I have to write a very hard now. There are many things I want to write and maybe I have not much time." He has about three hours a day to read the papers and write letters and articles. The rest of the time he works in the shop making automobile license plates. "But it is so difficult to write in jail. Before I could work hard nine hours, eleven hours a day, and then sit down and write. It poured out, straight from the heart. Often I would not have to make a single correction in an article. . . But now, word by word. It is so difficult to write in a cell."

Clergy Hate Him!.

Somehow we got talking about the clergy. Both the catholic priest and the protestant chaplain had written articles and made public statements against him. It was demoralizing to the other prisoners to have a convicted murderer escape the chair year after year like this. "They hate me because I am atheist," said Vanzetti. "If I went to them and made myself bumble and said 'Father I am sorry, please give me absolution,' they would help me." They feel as bitterly towards him as doctors towards a sick man who won't buy their medicine.

"At last I ask to see Father Murphy. He trembled like a leaf. I ask to see him to say to him, 'What have I done to him that he plot against me that way?' He trembled like a leaf and said nothing, only smooth words. If I would be a criminal he would want to save my soul. Maybe even the cardinal would intercede for me. They hate me because I am not a criminal." In jail, once you're caught in the trapnet of the law, the worst crime of all is to be innocent.

Doesn't Want Pardon.

Time was getting short. The hour would soon be up. And what about a compromise? What if as a result of the change of front of many respectable people in Boston, of the Boston Herald's advocacy of an impartial investigation of the case, he should be offered a commuted sentence or a pardon? Since the Mooney case, it's getting fashionable to imprison a man for life if you can't fasten any crime on him except that of being a radical.

"Tell them," said Vanzetti quietly, without a quiver in his voice, "that I shall refuse to accept a pardon or commutation or anything. Why should I when I am innocent?"

RELIEF WORK LAUNCHED FOR BOX STRIKERS

Kitchen to Feed Workers Is Opened

By GEORGE E. POWERS.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Relief work for the striking paper box workers has recently been started. With the advice and active assistance of members of the Council of Working Class Housewives, a well equipped kitchen and dining-room have been opened at the meeting hall, 2 Second Ave., where more than two thousand strikers and some of their families are fed daily. This is the union's answer to the bosses' despicable game of trying to starve the strikers into submission.

The results of a double Tag Day, Nov. 13-14, are encouraging, being well beyond expectations. Added to this, the Bakers' Local No. 149 are donating 200 pounds of bread daily to the kitchen, while the New York Joint Board of the Furriers' Union, despite their recent hard-fought strike, pledged $100 per week for the duration of the strike.

Much assistance is being received from other unions. But much more yet remains to be done, as thousands of strikers' dependants, women and children must be cared for.

A Thanksgiving dance will be given for paper box strikers' relief on Thursday evening, Nov. 25, at Harlem Casino, 110th St. and Lenox Ave. Tickets at 50 cents each can be secured at the union headquarters, 701 Broadway, New York City.

Police interference and brutality still continue unabated, girl pickets receiving rought treatment as well as the men. Nevertheless, picketing is also continuous with as much spirit as when the general strike first started, Oct. 5. The paper box workers are out to stay until their demands of a 44 hour week and a minimum wage scale are met.

Calumet Region Shows Great Shortage of Jobs

By a Worker Correspondent.

Editor DAILY WORKER:

Throughout the Calumet region there is a shortage of work in practically all industries. The steel workers have been the hardest hit by the slack period. The steel mills are operating at only 75 per cent of their capacity. In the Gary mills today after day hundreds of men are looking for work, but day after day they are sent away jobless from the employment offices. There is much suffering among the wives and children of these men.

The Studebaker Co., the largest automobile plant in South Bend, after making numerous were cuts during the summer months, has now made a grand slash by laying off many of their workers, and now this plant is operating on a four-day schedule.

The furniture plants of Evansville are operating with reduced forces also. Many factories in the Calumet region were visited and not a single one is looking for any kind of labor. Some of the plants have not been hiring any workers for months.

And Cal Coolidge says there is prosperity!

Class Collaboration Doesn't Work, the Shoe Workers Discover

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22—Combining workers and bosses in the interest of the bosses was demonstrated once more by Benson of Benson and Kimlers, a shoe manufacturing concern of 1 Carlton Ave., Brooklyn. This shop was organized in June, 1926, by P. P. Cosgrove, organizer of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union and signed by agreement to March, 1927. Benson engaged a loft in the same building and fitted it up for the manufacture of shoes. His first move was to persuade some of the workers from the firm of Benson and Kimler to put money into his business which he called the Arms Shoe Corporation, with the promise of steady work to all those investing.

District Council 2 of the Shoe Workers Protective Union conferred with Kimler regarding his relation with the new company, but he denied any connection. Since then, however, the dealings between the two firms have been of such a nature that the Council felt convinced that they were one and the same. Consequently a strike was declared and the shop is being picketed with strike headquarters at 132 Cumberland St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

P. P. Cosgrove, who is in charge, reports that strike meetings are held every morning at ten with a full attendance. The strikers are determined to win.

Denver Workers Hold Good Celebration of the 9th Anniversary

By a Worker Correspondent.

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 22 — Members of the Workers Party, Young Workers League, Young Pioneers and friends gathered at the New Denver Ludlow to celebrate the ninth anniversary of the Russian Revolution on Sunday evening, Nov. 14.

The program consisted of speeches, songs, recitation and music. Jas A. Ayres, secretary of Denver Local of the I. L. D. acted as chairman and gave a short outline of the work being done by the Russian workers and made it very interesting by showing a number of illustrated charts showing the comparison in production between the years of 1922-23 and 1925-26.

Wm. Dietrich, secretary of the Workers Party, made the principal speech of the evening. He presented a brief history of the movement which led up to the revolution and also told how the Russian workers sacrificed their very lives to put over the revolution and for nine long years have steadfastly worked to keep the fruits of their victory.

One of the women members of the Workers Party danced a cake which had nine burning candles on it and the proceeds from the cake and that taken in at the door will go to The DAILY WORKER.

PAPER BOX STRIKER GIVES PICTURE OF WORK CONDITIONS IN INDUSTR

By H. ZALKIN
(A Paper Box Worker Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—The present strike of the paper box workers brought to my mind the time when there was yet no union in that trade, the unhealthy, very unsanitary conditions in which we were compelled to work and how unhumanly we were exploited. I am told that in many places these conditions are still in existence.

Once I was quite for some time out of work and was looking hard for a job. I saw in a paper an ad of the Kovner Paper Box Co.—they wanted an experienced cutter of tops and bottoms. I immediately went over to the place, but had to wait until about 9 o'clock, when the boss at last came.

Describes Boss.

The boss was a stock, quite young and phlegmatic looking man. I squeesed myself in right after him into the tiny, untidy cage-like office, which was very crowded with rolls of paper and other stock, and told him I was a cutter. He eazed at me with his big eyes for a few moments, and then slowly commenced to ask where I previously worked, how long, and how much I wanted.

Shop Is Dirty.

While I was waiting for the boss I had a chance to have a glance at the place. It was a very small, crowded, dirty and dark shop. And, tho I was badly in need of a job, I was not too eager to work in such a place, altho I was already used to the unsanitary and filthy conditions of the paper box shops. I was almost sure the boss would not pay me the price and my conscience would not bother me for not getting the job.

As I expected, the boss said he couldn't pay for this particular job such a big sum, but he promised a better job later on, and meanwhile I should work for less. And he started to tell me how his workers liked to work for him, as his place has steady work and he pays them for holidays. But I was impatient and wanted to leave, so I told him that I would not work under the price I asked. He kept on for a little while more, telling me all kinds of stories and of indicements, but finally gravely said that I am a hard fellow to deal with, and took me downstairs where the cutting room was. It seems he needed a man badly.

Dirty Hole.

I disliked the place right from the beginning. Every evening after work I was glad the day was over, and in the morning I would hate to think of going back to the place. I could not get used to tha extremely dirty and dark hole we had to work in, and I developed the cruel system under which the work had to be done.

The work hours at that time in the paper box trade were 59 hours a week. Besides during the busy seasons, the workers were compelled to work all kinds of hours overtime, mostly without any pay at all. And they had to work Sundays, too.

In our shop we worked overtime during the week on four days, two hours each, and Sunday until 4 o'clock. At the end of the week I got my pay, but did not get even a cent for the extra eight hours. I right away, went over to the boss and told him that I worked eight hours overtime and demanded pay for those extra hours. He looked at me curiously and said with a sly smile, that he does not pay for overtime, as he pays for holidays. But I insisted on getting paid for the overtime, telling him that I would not leave the place without being paid. He got angry and said I should never mind him at the next pay, because he has not any cash as present.

Is Victim of Injury.

Monday I did not go to work. My right wrist got swollen during the night and was quite painful. Instead I went to a physician, who told me it was a strain of the joint and it must be rested, that's all. The next morning my wrist was quite well, so I went to work. But the foreman met me at the door and told me to wait for the boss. Of course I knew immediately that the rush was over already and I was not wanted any more. But the boss said he would keep me if I were willing to work for $10. I did not answer, but asked to be paid off for the overtime and the Sunday work, and was told to come for it at the end of the week.

Strange as it may be, no matter how I disliked to go around and look for a job, I was not a bit sorry I had so soon lost my job at the Kovner Paper Box Co.

ASS TO TAKE P PROBLEMS OF CHILD IN LABOR

portant Course at Workers' School

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—The weak- ss of the American labor movement ust be truly appreciated. If one con- ders how little influence it has on the coming generation, on the very ildren of the workers. The working ass children receive capitalist and ationalistic propaganda in the schools; ther physically because of the poor ture of their parents; are subjected the stunting effect of child labor; and the demoralizing effect of the reet corner—yet the American work- g class does nothing on the matter. he real fight has been put up against child labor. Either the working class does not realize what is being done to its children or it lacks leaders among the young workers who will be able to rally the children behind their working parents.

Class at Workers' School.

The course in "Problems of Work- ing Class Children" to be given at the New York Workers' School, 108-108 East 14th St., on Monday nights at 8 p. m. commencing Nov. 22, is the first attempt by the American labor move- ment to rasily tackle and solve the problem of the working class child. The course will be treated in a sym- posium manner with authorities on various phases of working class chil- d's problems leading the discussion their particular subjects. Among instructors will be Scott Nearing, ur C. Calhoun, Bertram D. Wolfe, enjamin, Slava Petrovska, Ernes- Evans, Clarence Miller, Miriam bert, Solon De Leon, Sarah Davis nd Eve Dorf.

M. C. A., children's ps, schools, etc. This will be fol- wed by a study of the nature of the ild, child psychology, the abnormal ild, physical and mental hygiene, etc. The course will then conclude ith the question of how to work with hildren and win them over to the working class struggle, how to teach hem the class struggle, the role of he Pioneers, what books working lass children should read, and what s being done in Soviet Russia for the hildren.

Weisbord Delivers Stirring Speech at Anniversary Affair

BOSTON, Nov. 22.—Boston celebrat- ed the Ninth Anniversary of the Rus- sian Revolution Sunday, November 14, at the Scenic Auditorium. The large hall was filled with members of the Workers Party and sympathizers of the cause of workers' emancipation.

Great excitement pervaded the au- dience, anxious to hear the main speaker and former Boston comrade, Albert Weisbord, who had su recently come from the great scene of battle in Passaic, where he led the fighting textile workers. He was greeted with long applause, and the singing of mili- tant songs sung by the Passaic strik- ers on their magnificent picket de- monstrations and in their strike Jails.

Comrade Weisbord's speech was a paen of praise to the Russian revolu- tion, which has accomplished in nine short years, what the czars in all their hundreds of years of domination, were not able to bring about.

New York Gives Talks to Aid Working Class

NEW YORK, Nov. 22. The Ameri can working class has yet to learn that Karl Marx not only made great theoretical contributions to the work- ing class movement but that in his own life he showed the concrete steps and actions that must be taken to build up a strong labor movement. Marx was not concerned with ab- stract ideas, but with fighting against and changing capitalism. He devoted a great part of his life to that end. A study of Marx's work in the First In- ternational would furnish a mine of material and understanding for an ap- proach to present-day labor problems. For this reason a study of the First International, Marx's fight against the Utopians, against Bakunin, his ar- gument toward the role of unions, his conception of the problem of oppress- ed people are a prerequisite with out which no working class leader can afford to be. William Weinstone, di- rector organizer of the Workers (Com- munist) Party and Instructor for sev- eral years in the Workers' School, will develop those points in his course "History of the Three Internationals" to be given every Wednesday night at the Workers School, 108 East 14th street, at 9:15.

This course will also take up the contribution of the Second Interna- tional to the working class movement as well as its weaknesses. This part of the course is very necessary today as millions of workers the world over still follow the Socialist (Second) In- ternational and do not understand the opportunism and chauvinism that per- vades that organization. Was the be- trayal of the Second International in 1914 a mistake, an accident, or was it inevitable and something that will occur when a similar crisis arises? This is a fundamental question that will be answered in the course.

Lastly, the Communist (Third) In- ternational—its principles, strategy and tactics will be studied. This in- ternational, which aims to carry out the work started by Marx and the First International, not only makes de- cisions for the world movement of the proletariat, but for the workers of the various countries, enabling them to meet their specific problems. The study, therefore, should be of double interest to the American working class students who aim to help lead the American workers.

This course starts on Wednesday, Nov. 24, at 9:15 p. m. Registration is open now at the office of the Work- ers' School, 108 East 14th street, New York City, room 35.

About 2,000 representatives will meet, equally divided between city and country, altho the ratio of representa- tion is one delegate to each 25,000 of the urban population and one to each 125,000 in the country districts.

I. L. D. Cabaret Best Thing Since Hec Was a Pup or Czar Kicked Off

"Where shall I be Wednesday night?" At the I. L. D. cabaret at Mir- ror Hall, it's for the class prisoners' benefit, for the Christmas relief fund—and besides I don't want to miss the features and jolly entertain- ment. Then, too, the next day's a holiday and the alarm clock will be on a sympathetic strike."

This is what a worker who helped to organize the I. L. D. demonstration against Queen Marie told a reporter of The DAILY WORKER, over a fif- teen-cent lunch—fifteen cents each, understand; it was a feast day.

The committee in charge has ar- ranged many interesting features. Be- sides those we have mentioned ear- lier, there will be folk dances, includ- ing a Spanish trio and the "Bohemian Dozen." A more than first-class chef is in charge of the food. In strict confidence, he refused an offer to be hash-slinger to Queen Marie, on class- conscious grounds. You can eat what the Mooching Queen is thereby de- prived of.

Only a thousand people can be ac- commodated, so buy tickets early for the blow-out. They will set you back but six bits, known in Wall Street as 75 cents, which includes wardrobe. Tables for all. Bald-headed row for the theoretikans of the party. And sandy ginger to pep you up, donated by the Sun Yet Sen branch.

The speaker is well known in Pitts- burgh where her meetings have al- ways attracted large audiences of workers.

Admission is free, and everyone is invited

Famous "Heretic" to Speak in Gary, Ind.

The famous "Heretic" Bishop Wil- liam M. Brown, who was thrown out of the church because he wants to banish gods from the skies and capi- talists from the earth, will be the guest of Gary workers Nov. 24 and 25.

This is the first time the bishop has been to Gary and it will be a treat to hear him speak at the Thanksgiving bazaar, which will be held at the Croa- tian Hall, 23rd avenue and Washing- ton street.

The affair is being run by the local international Labor Defense and five prizes will be given away, the first being a $200 Zenith radio. There will also be music, dancing and refresh- ments. All Gary workers are invited to attend. Admission 50 cents, good for both days of the bazaar.

Servants Invited to Join Bay State Union

BOSTON, Nov. 22.—Servants in Bay State homes of the wealthy are invited to join a domestic workers' union which George W. Palmer, a butler, has announced he is organizing. Palmer asserts that the union should seek the five-day week, beginning with changes in the 48-hour week, nine- hour day law for women. He has called a mass meeting of servants and hopes the 5,000 serving Massachusetts "codfish aristocracy" will join the union. He plans establishing a union employment depot to supplant private agencies, which charge workers so ex- orbitantly.

Count Karolyi Wins Duel.

BUDAPEST, Nov. 22. — Count Paul Teleki, former premier and foreign minister, has been wounded in the right hand in a sabre duel with Count Emmerich Karolyi, according to the newspaper Pastinapolo.

The newspaper states that Count Teleki challenged Count Karolyi, be- cause he accused him of being im- plicated in the recent franc forgery plot.

JUNIOR ATHEIST LEAGUE CAUSES SCHOOLS WORRY

Bible-Mongers Are Get- ting Scared

By L. P. RINDAL,
(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 22.—Commu- nist children, the Pioneers and the Young Workers' League, have caused school principals some worry in the past, and now the Junior Atheist League has invaded the high schools of the Holy City of Angels.

The grown-ups have also organized. The "Devil's Angels," 75 members, is a branch of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism.

William George Henry, 5933 Arroyo Drive, has been appointed the Los An- geles representative of the A. A. A. A. Henry is also president of the local branch. Queen Silver, publisher and editor of Queen Silver Magazine, is secretary-treasurer.

Lectures an atheism are held every second Friday in Lincoln Hall, and every other Friday in Cleveland Hall, both halls in Walkers' Andtorium, 729 S. Grand evenue.

School Students Interested.

Previous to the election a number of high school students paid the "Dev- il's Angels" a most welcome visit dur- ing a discussion of the bible-in-the- school issue. The youngsters got a kick out of it, as the bible question was before the student bodies at the time.

Parents of six sorority girls sus- pended from the Los Angeles high school, are threatening to take the case to court. The girls violated the school laws concerning secret sorori- ties, school authorities claim. This is very serious. Respect for laws of god, Moses and hypocritical christians is breaking down, and with it goes disrespect for laws made to glorify capitalism and enslave labor.

Officials Fight Atheism.

Well, a Billy Sunday Aimee McPher- son revival is about to be started at once and the Los Angeles Times will probably stage another oratorical con- test on the constitution. In the mean time school principals and officials are fighting to prevent atheist organiza- tions from being formed among Los Angeles students.

Significant Combination.

The Junior Atheist League and the "Devil's Angels" will probably also be fought with money derived from the "fight the devil fund" created by Aimee Semple McPherson. Altho not fundamentalists, Aimee and Rev. R. P. (Bob) Shuler, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, member of the ex- ecutive committee of the Church Fed- eration and author of "McPherson- ism," are deadly enemies, on the bible- in-the-school issue they are hanging together like Siamese twins—a union as binding as the "Ormie"-"Aimee" connections.

Aimee's Tricks Don't Compare with Those of Sunday, Says Mencken

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 22. Look- ing like an ambulating advertisement of what the well-dressed man should wear, H. L. Mencken, the sage of Bal- timore and editor of the American Mercury, was in San Francisco today for a short visit.

The best show in the world is at Aimee Semple McPherson's temple in Los Angeles, he said.

Her tricks, however, according to Mencken, do not compare with those of two fallow evangelists, Gypsy Smith and Billy Sunday.

"Her methods are old-fashioned," he declared, "and would not be accepted by anybody else except the citizens of Los Angeles, most of whom come from the Hinterlands."

Gags Press as Step to Throne of Poland

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WARSAW, Poland, Nov. 22.—Re- cently there assembled at the palace of Prince Junusz Radziwill leading members of the old Polish aristocracy, some of them relatives of the Hapsburgs and Hohenzollerns. While fear of radical criticism makes them secre- tive as to their purpose, all political Poland knows that they are united under the slogan, "The king of Po- land." It is said that Marshal Pil- sudski is the man they have picked to assume the crown.

As a possible preparation for this event, Pilsudski threatened to dissolve parliament if the radicals forced a vote to kill the present gag which the dictator has placed on the press. By dissolving the diet Pilsudski could gov- ern by decree until the next election.

Raids Blamed to MacSwiney Faction.

DUBLIN.—The authorities of the Irish Free State are disposed to view the recent raids on police barracks as an activity of the extreme section of the republicans under Mary Mac- Swiney. It is an easy way of annoying the government, as the civic guards are unarmed. The trouble is thought to be embarrassing to the faction of Da Valera, who has been agitating for a radnction of what he maintained was too large an army and police force.

Young Workers' League Plans Registration

It is almost a year now since the last registration of the Young Work ers League membership. The last registration was taken prior to the reorganization of the League. Since that time the League has undergone many changes. The doing away with the language units, concentrating up on factory work, participation in strikes has made us progress in the right direction.

It is for this reason that the na tional industrial committee of the League is taking a new nation-wide registration of the membership in or der that more than ever before they can be drawn into mass activity. Reg istration blanks are being sent to the district organizers. The blanks come in three colors. One for the unit, one for the district industrial organizer and one for the national office. # DROPS CAMPAIGN FOR ORGANIZING STEEL WORKERS

Minnesota Federation Head Back Down

By JOHN GABRIEL SOLTIS.

DULUTH, Minn., Nov. 22.—At the Minnesota State Federation of Labor convention held in Hibbing, September last, a resolution introduced to the convention by Delegate Walter Frank of the Lathers, Minneapolis, to the effect that the state federation commence an organization campaign among the miners of the Iron Range, was referred to the executive council of the federation for recommendation.

Sees No Encouragement.

Mr. Hall in his report given to the capitalist press declares that "he inquired at numerous points, including Boray, Hibbing, Chisholm, Buhl, Virginia, Ely and Tower, and found little encouragement at this time to inaugurate an organization campaign."

It is significant that Mr. Hall's report has received very favorable comment and display in the press of the steel trust here and on the Iron Range.

Gets "Ads" From Steel Trust.

It is recalled that during the last decade Mr. Hall has collected many thousands of dollars from the steel trust in the form of paid "ads" in the Green Book of the state federation. No one is aware of any serious attempt made on the part of Mr. Hall during the last 13 years to organize the thousands of steel trust workers on this way.

Chicago Teachers in Ring for Kids versus Illinois Corporations

The teachers are again fighting the battle of the school kiddies against the great corporations. And once again tax-dodging is the point of attack.

The Chicago Federation of Women High School Teachers and the Federation of Men Teachers have filed a petition at Springfield before the Illinois state tax commission, attacking the arbitrary rule known as "Number 11." The rule governs the manner in which the cash value of stocks is now arrived at for purposes of taxation. The petition demands abolishment of the rule under threat of mandamus proceedings.

In the opinion of some of the attorneys for the teachers' federations, there is little likelihood of the petition being granted by the commission, and a further fight will then be undertaken.

Keep the Veice Down.

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 22.—The secret of keeping one's temper is to prevent the voice from rising in anger, Joseph Jastrow, professor of psychology, University of Wisconsin, told Northwestern University students in an address here.

LEFT-WING MEMBERS OF THE A. C. W. WHO WERE PUT OFF THEIR JOBS BY UNION OFFICIALS WRITE OPEN LETTER

A group of New York left wing members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, thru the efforts of the right wing leadership of the union, were deprived of their jobs in the various union-controlled shops in which they were working.

The following open letter, which they address to the officials of the A. C. W., tells why they were put out of their jobs and explains the purposes of the left wing of which some of the signers are well known leaders:

A Few Words to the Leaders of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

You, who are parading before the public as radical leaders!

You, who are the first to join the Civil Liberties Union, the anti-fascist movement, and every other organization that fights for freedom of speech and press,

You, who have constantly agitated for industrial unionism, for amalgamation, and for a militant organization to serve the interests of the workers.

At present, heads of the Amalgamated, we find you engaged in the task of breaking up the finest traditions of the Amalgamated, denouncing every radical thought that you yourselves have propagated.

How do you justify, Brother Schlossberg, the fact that in the name of the Civil Liberties Union you demand freedom of speech of the ku klux klan at a time when in your own union the heads are split of those who dared voice their opinions?

By what right, Brother Hillman, do you come to a sister union urging the necessity of mutual assistance in time of struggle and promising them help when in your own union, President Hillman, you have deprived members of their daily bread for the mere fact that they collected funds for the cloakmakers' strikers or because they dared to differ with you, most worthy president?

By what right, Brothers Biancos, do you address a meeting of the anti-fascist organization demanding justice of Mussolini, freedom for Italy, condemning the castor oil methods of the fascisti—when in your own little sovereign, there is more than one Mussolini? Your methods toward defeating an ideological opponent are more dishonorable than those of the fascisti.

At one time you fought against the open shops for their insurgention of the blacklist system. And today, leaders of the Amalgamated have inaugurated their own blacklist system against the most active union members.

Leaders of the Amalgamated, do you think you are pursuing the proper policy? You have no doubt familiar with the history of the class struggle, you are well aware of the fact that terroristic methods will not suppress a revolutionary spirit. Such methods will only serve as fuel to the fire. These methods that you are employing are in themselves an admission of your powerlessness.

Worthy leaders, Hillman, Schlossberg, Beckerman and Harry Cohen, can you deny the fact that had not the left wing movement raised the issue last year against throwing workers from their shops, against the plot or plague of reductions and productions, you would find yourselves totally helpless?

Deep in your hearts you are aware of it and yet you seek vengeance against individual left wing workers. We have paid the price, yet hundreds of workers were spared because the bosses, as well as some union leaders, were compelled to head the demands of the masses that we represented. No sooner did we cease our agitation, accepting your promise at the general executive board meeting that you will do something for the tailors, than the lgnese reopened their offensive with more vigor then ever, to which you stood by indifferently.

And at present, in order to satisfy the greedy appetites of the bosses, you are conducting a campaign to inaugurate piece work in New York. We therefore ask you, worthy leaders of the Amalgamated, are we to be condemned because we want a good union for our members? Are we to be condemned because we want to help the striking cloakmakers? Are we to be condemned because we are against piece work? Are we to be condemned because we want a 40-hour labor week? Are we to be condemned because we differ from you ideologically? Are we to be condemned because we believe that amalgamation can strengthen the working-class movement?

Worthy leaders of the Amalgamated, consider carefully where your action may lead you. The recent destroyers of the garment workers are at present employing fascist methods against those that helped to build the Amalgamated.

Remember that the left wing movement was sponsored as a result of the indifference of the professional leaders to the sufferings and needs of the workers. You are making a mistake when you think that you can destroy the left wing movement by depriving the class-conscious workers of their bread.

Our program has implanted deep roots in the hearts of thousands of workers. Thru your committed methods you may succeed in driving a few into submission, but you will not be able to destroy the movement.

Remember, leaders of the Amalgamated, that the only means we have of supporting and maintaining our families is the shop. We will do everything at our command that our families should not be deprived of their piece of bread.

Fraternally,

The Workers Who Were Thrown Out of their Jobs.

(Signed) Ph. Aronberg, S. Liptzin, L. Nelson, S. Sentner, B. Lipshitz, A. Hurowitz, P. Carlio.

WORKER KILLED BY SUBWAY CAR IN LOS ANLELES

International Sung At Funeral

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 22.—Ferdinand Velarde, American-born Mexican, 52, is dead. The death was declared accidental by a coroner's jury. It occurred in a subway on Armistice Day, when Velarde was crushed beneath the wheels of a Pacific Electric train. Fellow-worker Velarde attempted to board the first car of the train, but slipped, falling beneath the wheels of the second, according to company witnesses. The other side has not yet been presented, however.

I. W. W. Funeral.

The funeral was a beautiful one. It was, in a way, a united front affair. The ceremonies took place at the Inglewood Cemetery. George Speed, the well-known former class-war prisoner at Leavenworth, delivered the main speech. Fellow-worker C. Erwin, a victim of the syndicalist law, also spoke. Other speeches were made in English and Spanish. Fellow-worker Sinclair, another war-time victim of Judge Landis, was seen in the sizable crowd. The Red Flag was sung, in Spanish and English at the same time, and lead by members of the Young Workers (Communist) League. Velarde was laid to rest while the strains of the International were sung.

Daughter Died "Mysteriously."

Velarde leaves a wife and five grown children, all rebels, they say. One daughter, married to a navy man (without the consent of her parents) died "mysteriously" a couple of years ago. But, according to a statement made by the father to some of his friends and myself at the time, this tragedy was not a mystery at all. The navy authorities blocked investigation, he said.

Robbed of Life By Corporation.

Velarde was not a migratory worker. Born in San Diego, he was a native son—but not of the Hoover or oily McAdoo variety. He had a blacksmith shop of his own, a large, nice family and, above all, ability to defend himself—a gift the C. of C., M. & M., B. A. F., K. K. K., the shipping and lumber trusts and cowardly stool pigeons are afraid of. So San Quentin did not rob Velarde of his freedom. But a master robber-corporation robbed him of his life.

Escaping Youths Pull Mean One on Reformer

RAHWAY, N. J., Nov. 22 — J. F. Geyer, a reformer of Plainfield, N. J. addressed the inmates of Rahway Reformatory last evening on citizenship and conduct, but four of the prisoners who probably needed the lecture most, didn't hear it.

While Geyer was delivering the lecture, the four youths sawed the bars of a window and rode off in the reformer's automobile, parked on the grounds. A search for them was under way today.

Chicago Case Shows Co-operation Between Press and Employers

By CARL HAESSLER, Fed. Press.

How labor men suffer from the close alliance between the big corporations and the big newspapers is demonstrated once more in the case of Louis J. Smith of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who piloted the Chicago & Northwestern passenger train that crashed into a Labor Day excursion train at an uptown Chicago station. The railroad immediately blamed him for the seven deaths and many injuries to passengers and the papers tried him in their columns, playing up the news to make it appear that he and not the road's greed for excursion profits was to blame.

That the brakes did not work properly, that the line was overcrowded with excursion traffic and that the flimsiest wooden coaches had been pressed into use was not emphasized in the newspaper accounts. But here the grand jury has dropped all the charges of manslaughter against Engineer Smith, holding that the evidence did not warrant prosecution. This opens the way to damage suits against the road by injured passengers and relatives of the dead. The news of the grand jury action was quietly pocketed by the press into an inside page surrounded by advertising shrubbery. The newspaper cherges against the worker had previously been spread thick on page one.

Miners' Union Board Orders Special Tax for Whole Membership

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 22.—(FP)—Every dues-paying member of the United Mine Workers of America will pay an extra $1 assessment for December and another for January, by decision of the international executive board.

Free Speech Wins in Massachusetts Court

SALEM, Mass.—The right of free speech and free assemblage in the streets of Lawrence, Mass., was upheld when the conviction of Fred Beal, secretary of the United Front Committee, for alleged violation of a city ordinance by holding a street meeting, was reversed. Beal was fined $20 in July, when he was arrested for making a speech at an open air meeting in Lawrence under the auspices of the Civil Liberties Union, to test the ban placed on radical meetings by City Marshall O'Brien and Director of Safety Fred Cook. The attorney for the union states that althou prosecutions have occurred under his ordinance for 14 years, he anticipates that the decision of the highier court will put a stop to them.

Transfer Chicago Gangster.

GARY, Ind., Nov. 22. — Frank McErlane, Chicago gangster awaiting trial for the murder of Theddeus Fanning, was transferred to the Porter county jail at Crown Point from Indiana state prison at Michigan City today.

Oil! A NEW NOVEL by Upton Sinclair

VIII

Gregor Nikolaeff was back from his trip to Alaska, with more troubles for the conscience of a young idealist. Gregor was gaunt and hollow-eyed, like Paul returned from Siberia. Poor unsuspecting foreign youth—he had shipped on what the sailors call "the hell fleet of the Pacific," and had found himself trapped in a desolate bay, walled in by mountains on one side and ocean on the other, housed in barracks whose floors were wet by the tides, sleeping in vermin-ridden hunks, and eating food like that fed to the inmates of county jails. No way of escape, save on ships that would not take you! While Bunny had been romping in the Pacific with Vee and the seals, Gregor had been near to drowning himself in the same ocean.

Also Rachel Menzies had come home, with more troubles; there was a strike of the clothing workers! Quite unforeseen and spontaneous—hundreds of workers, driven beyond endurance by petty oppressions, had walked out in the middle of a job; the movement had spread all over this Angel City, paradise of the "open shop." The workers were crowding into the union offices and signing up, and a regular mass-struggle was under way! But Papa Menzies, one of the intellectuals among the strikers, a man of force and insight—Papa Menzies was sitting at home, with his frantic Hebrew wife clinging to his coat-tails, and wailing that if he went out and took part in the strike, the police would get him and ship him off to Poland to be shot, and never to see his family again!

As a result of this, Rachel was not going to be able to come to college. Bunny, elegant young gentleman of leisure, who had never known what it was to need money in his life, could not understand this, and had to be told in plain words that Rachel's family had been making sacrifices to get her an education, and all these plans were knocked out. Then of course Bunny wanted to get Dad to help; what was the use of having a rich father if you couldn't serve your friends in a pinch? But Rachel answered, no, they had always been independent, and she would not think of such a thing; she would have to skip a term in the university.

"Until then you won't be in my class!" exclaimed Bunny—realizing suddenly how much he needed an antidote for the dullness of Southern Pacific culture!

"It's very kind of you, Mr. Ross," she answered, sedately. "But perhaps you will come to the meetings of the Socialist local."

"But see here, really, I can get the money without the least trouble; and you don't have to consider it a gift, you can pay it back when you want to. Won't it be easier to earn money if you have a college degree?"

Rachel admitted that; she had meant to get a position as social worker—she had come to this university because there were special courses which would make such a career possible. Bunny pleaded, why not take Dad's money, with no strings to it whatever, and pay him back ten or twenty dollars a month out of her future salary. But Rachel was stubborn—some strange impulse born of her "class-consciousness," which Bunny was powerless to fathom.

He felt so keenly about it that without saying anything to her he got into his car and drove to the home of the Menzies family. He had the address in his note-book, and it did not occur to him that she or her family might be embarrassed to have him see the way they lived—in a wretched little cottage, converted into a little three-room house on the back of a lot, without a shred of a green thing in sight. It was a rented place, Papa Menzies having put his money into Socialism, instead of into real estate and shrubbery. Bunny found him in a crowded front room, with furniture and books, and a job of sewing, and the remains of a meal—of bread and herring, and the proofs of an article which he was getting ready for a striken district, and a fat old Jewish lady rushing about in a panic, trying to put things away from the sight of this alarmingly fashionable visitor.

The Trade Union Educational League Receivership - By Ben Gitlow

THE ADVANCE, the official organ of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, in its editorial, "Let Us Call a Spade—a Spade," charges that the T. U. E. L. dislikes the Amalgamated and that the T. U. E. L. would see the Amalgamated out of business if it cannot force it to do business in the T. U. E. L.

Fael a Conspiracy.

The Advance would like the workers to look upon the left wing sentiment that is so strong in the Amalgamated as the work of a few men organized in the T. U. E. L. who dislike the Amalgamated and want to impose their will upon the organization. In other words, that the T. U. E. L. is conspiring against the Amelgamated. It is the same argument the capitalists use against the labor movement. That the labor leaders here formed a conspiracy to stir up discontent among the workers, and thus for selfish motives foment strikes.

If Brother Hillman would be confronted with such an argument he would declare that the labor leaders are not responsible for the discontent. That at the bottom of the discontent and directly responsible for the strikes are the bad conditions prevailing for the workers and their mistreatment in the shops.

Reasons for Left Wing.

The existence of a left wing movement cannot be brushed aside by such arguments. There are basic reasons for the existence of the left wing. They are the following:

1. That conditions for the members of the Amalgamated in the shops in recent years, instead of improving, have continually become worse.

2. That the administration pursues a policy that is opposed to militant struggles on the part of the workers to improve conditions.

3. That the administration supports a bureaucracy that disregards the will of the rank and file and uses its position to make agreements with the bosses at the expense of the workers.

4. That instead of pursuing a policy of class struggle, the administration pursues a policy of co-operating with and assisting the bosses.

Has No Better Friend.

The charge that the T. U. E. L. dislikes the Amalgamated is unworthy of any serious labor journal that is expected to give serious consideration to real problems that arise in the organization. The T. U. E. L. doesn't dislike the Amalgamated, it by the Amalgamated is meant the rank and file, the members of the organization.

The Amalgamated has no better and more loyal friend than the T. U. E. L. But The Advance cannot expect the T. U. E. L. to fall upon its knees and worship the reactionary officials who dominate the organization and who pursue policies that are wrong and very harmful to the interests of the workers and the organization as such.

Officials Responsible.

THE revolt of the rank and file against the Amalgamated bureaucracy is due to the realization on their part that the policies of their officials and the methods used by them in the organization are responsible for the prevailing bad conditions. The revolt is the left wing: Organizing it and giving it constructive direction, so that it shall not go up a blind alley and result in disarm or the complete destruction of the union, is the T. U. E. L.—the decisive force for all the militant and progressive workers in the unions.

Against Bureaucrats.

The T. U. E. L. in the Amalgamated is composed of the best and most loyal members of that organization. It is too much concerned about the welfare and reputation of that organization to desire its destruction. Its activities are directed against the bureaucrats whose destructive and treacherous policies are threatening the ruination of the union. The T. U. E. L. has never declared war upon the Amalgamated, who have changed the Amelgamated from the most progressive union in the United States to one of the most reactionary.

Fire Class-Conscious Workers.

Says The Advance: "The officers of the cloakmakers' union of New York, who are the political dummies of the T. U. E. L., do not want the Amalgamated to raise money for the striking cloakmakers." A very poor argument by which The Advance tries to excuse the unwillingness on the part of the Amalgamated administration to give as generously as they can and should to the relief of the striking cloakmakers. A very poor struggle against the actions of Manager Beckerman of the New York Joint Board in ordering the firing of six workers from their jobs because they insisted upon taking shop collections for the striking cloakmakers. In the most reactionary union a deed of equal dastardliness cannot be recorded. Six workers and their families deprived of a livelihood because in the eyes of the arch-reactionary dictator, Beckerman, they dared to collect funds to help feed the starving striking cloakmakers.

Approve Beckerman.

HAS Hillman ordered Beckerman to have these workers reinstated? Has the general office condemned Beckerman for his dastardly act? Did The Advance, which can print pages of denunciation on a left wing, print a word in condamnation of Beckerman? The whole administrative machine is quiet. Such silence and inaction must be interpreted as full endorsement of Beckerman's act. The members of the officers of the cloakmakers' union being political dummies of the T. U. E. L. will be dealt with later in the article.

Corkscrew Brains.

Listen to the window of a Mossel It takes a man with a corkscrew brain to make such a twisted argument. Says The Advance: "Patiently, they (the officials of the cloakmakers' union) are interested in negative results of what they profess to wish to achieve." Suppose they were, is that any reason why the Amalgamated should have given them the argument they desired by withholding the necessary aid and expected relief? Nonsense, however, knows that its argument is sheer sophistry. The Advance knows that the leaders of the cloak makers' union are friendly to the Amalgamated for relief. Had the Amalgamated given, as it should, the relief in time and in the amounts it really could, there would have been no occasion for the officials of the cloakmakers protesting against the Amalgamated.

Vicious Demagogy.

The following paragraph is taken from the editorial:

"There is a possibility of a favorable season ahead in the men's clothing industry. With the union in good shape and the likelihood of a favorable industrial situation the chances of that 'opposition' are mightily slim. So what is Mr. Gitlow to do if he has a desire to run the Amalgamated? He cannot undo a favorable outlook, but by 'proper' tactics he thinks he may put the union out of working condition and thus supply the desired thrust in the coming encounter. So the W. P. and the T. U. E. L. puppets in the cloakmakers' and furriers' unions are put to the job of wrecking the Amalgamated in New York."

THIS paragraph is a very vicious piece of demagogy. It contains an attack upon the writer of this article, Mr. Gitlow, as he is termed. Mr. Gitlow, in his desire to run the Amalgamated, has put on the job to wreck the union the Workers' Party, the T. U. E. L. and the puppets in the cloakmakers' and furriers' unions.

How They Justify Action.

Let us examine this piece of demagogy carefully. By so doing we will be able to discover the treacherous role played by the Amalgamated administration. The paragraph states but it has declared war upon the reactionary officials.

The Advance charges that the cloakmakers' and furriers' union went into a T. U. E. L. receivership.

That these two unions new under left wing control have not fared so well.

It is better to be in the receivership of the T. U. E. L. than in the receivership of the bosses. But why examine facts. Facts, facts, facts is what has to be impressed upon The Advance. It would also benefit all the workers in the Amalgamated that the facts that will be here stated be given fullest publicity in The Advance.

What Furriers Won.

THE furriers' union, under the leadership of the left wing, with the Communist Ben Gold leader of the strike, did win a 17 weeks general strike, and won the following main demands:

Forty-hour, five-day week.
Increase in wages.
Elimination of overtime work as such as possible.
No subcontracting.

Cleakmakers' Gains.

THE cloakmakers, in spite of the sabotage of the right wing, their criminal attempts to bring about a defeat, in spite of an injunction, accomplished the following in their settlement with the industrial council.

Forty-hour, five-day week.
Materially increased wages.
Limitation of contractors.
Thirty-two weeks' work guarantee for your established principle of time guaranteed employment.

Defeated with mass picketing the injunction issued against them.

Defeated Governor Smith's compulsory arbitration.

Defeated governor's commission award inverting the lockout.

Should Get Facts.

I challenge the Beckerman-Hillman administration to show a record equally as good as the record of the workers in the left wing and the Advance charges that the cloakmakers and furriers union are dummies, who are called puppets and political dummies by The Advance.

Facts, Brother Hillman and Brother Beckerman, is what The Advance should demand from both of you.

When and where has Beckerman-Hillman administration established the forty-hour, five-day week.

When and where has the Amalgamated ever conducted a general struggle to materially better the conditions of the workers?

Why did the Beckerman-Hillman administration fail to present demands for better conditions to the New York clothing manufacturers, at the time the furriers had won better conditions and the cloakmakers and shoemakers were fighting a bitter war for improved conditions?

Workers Stabbed in Back.

BROTHER HILLMAN and Brother Beckerman should be condemned for the failure to back up the needle trades workers. The statement that no shamefully and speedy guarantees no increased labor cost to the manufacturers and increased production, that they concluded with the manufacturers at a time when other workers in the needle trades were out on strike for 40 hours and other progressive demands, was a treacherous stabbing in the back of these fighting militant workers. It is no wonder that Mr. Finder, leader of the cloak bosses, arch enemy of organized labor, congratulated the Amalgamated leaders and expressed himself that if the cloakmakers had such constructive and good leaders as Beckerman and Hillman the bosses would be no labor difficulty in the dress industry.

Call a Spade a Spade.

I agree with The Advance. Let us call a spade a spade. Let us expose the real role of the Beckerman and Hillman administration. By so doing the T. U. E. L. is vindicated. It becomes clear why there is discontent among the Amalgamated members. By examining the facts one must come to the conclusion that for the benefit of the workers the left wing and the

Thanksgiving in Jail

The president of the United States of Morgan and company, the governors of the various states and the mayors of all American cities are exuding hymns of joy over the prosperity of the country and urging the alleged beneficiaries of this prosperity to thank "providence" for it. Needless to say the lion's share of this country's prosperity goes to capitalism and the workers who comprise the overwhelming majority of the population get very little.

Now, it has come to pass that in the town of Belleville, Illinois, twenty nine employes of the Belleville Enamelling & Stamping company and the Roesch Enamel Range company will drink their sugar-less coffee in jail on Thanksgiving Day, because they refused to recognize a court skase against legal picketing. So the company's judge put the workers in jail while the bosses are free to gobble their gobblers and perhaps wash down the delicacy with the cup that cheers.

Another instance of class government.

By the way, do you remember a case of an employer being sent to jail during a strike? If you do, send in the fakie and we will publish it.

A tale without a moral would be moral so we call our readers' attention to the folly of the working class electing capitalist officials, whether they be judges, mayors, governors or presidents, while they refuse to organize a labor party, under their control whose elected representatives would be pledged to serve the interests of labor and not those of the capitalists?

Why not make a start?

Patriotism and Religion

All the well to do and respectable religions walk arm in arm with patriotism. God and government are synonymous terms with organized superstitution. But some of the lesser and weaker cults do not seem to be able to conform to the requirements of the capitalist state and get into trouble. This was the case with a group of Jehovites in Denver, Colorado.

Fifty Jehovite children in the public schools of Denver refused to salute the American flag. It was against their religion, they said. The school board, while believing that religion is one of the bulwarks of society, nevertheless has little use for any brand that does not serve the purpose of American capitalism. So it made things tough for the Jehovites.

The Jehovites stressed their patriotism, but insisted they could not recognize a symbol of temporal power. Because their children could not recognize the flag the young Jehovites were barred from school by the school board.

Then the Civil Liberties Union decided to make a test case of the school board ruling. And the board gracefully surrendered. So far the fight is a draw. But if the Jehovites refused to salute the flag on the ground that it was a symbol of imperialism, we hate to think what would happen to them.

Religion is a splendid institution so long as it serves capitalism but when a few freaks take it seriously and owe allegiance only to some heavenly spook, there is trouble and sometimes jail for the divine worshippers.

Paper Box Workers Fight Valiantly

The valiant struggle of the paper box workers in New York City offers a lesson in unionism. For years, the New York workers were bound to an organization that paraded as a union and was in fact, thru the instrument of officials who were bought off, a mere appendage of the paper box manufacturers' associations. Tiring of Brindellism, the members of the union threw out the officials who were in the pay of the companies and reorganized as a genuine union prepared to ask for and demand concessions from the bosses.

After the change in leadership, the bosses suddenly decided that they could get along without a union. They declared war because they could no longer dictate the policies of the workers' organization thru the medium of tools within.

When the workers fought back, thugs were employed against them, police violence was the order of the day and scabs were imported in large numbers. The battle is still on. The paper box workers are putting up a stiff fight not only for better conditions but for their union.

Karl Marx on Fordism

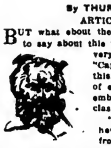
Marx Proves with Cold Logic How the Worker Is Robbed—The Mere Fact of OWNERSHIP Permits Henry Ford and Other Capitalists to Control the Destinies of Millions—There Is Only One Answer the Workers Can Give to Henry and His Pals.

By THURBER LEWIS

ARTICLE FOUR



KARL MARX

BUT what about the worker? Has he nothing to say about this robbery of his vitality, his very life? In his great work, "Capital," Karl Marx refers to this. Speaking thru the words of a worker who he means to embody the entire working-class, Marx says:

"The commodity that I have sold to you differs from the crowd of other commodities in that its use creates value and a value greater than its own. That is why you bought it. That which, on your side appears spontaneous expansion of capital, is on mine, extra expenditure of labor power. You and I knew on the market only one law, that of the exchange of commodities. And the consumption of the commodity belongs not to the seller who parts with it but to the buyer who acquires it. To you therefore belongs the use of my daily labor power. But by means of the price you pay for it each day I must be able to reproduce it daily and sell it again.

"Apart from natural exhaustion thru age, etc., I must on the morrow, be able to work with the same normal amount of force, health and freshness as today. You preach to me constantly the gospel of "Saving" and "Abstinence," Good! I will, like a sensible saving owner, husband my sole wealth, labor power, and abstain from all foolish waste of it. I will each day spend, set in motion, put into action, only as much of it as is compatible with its normal duration and healthy development . . .

What you gain in labor, I lose in substance.

"The use of my labor power and spoliation of it are quite different things. If the average time that (doing a reasonable amount of work) an average laborer can live is thirty years, the value of my labor power which you pay me from day to day is one 365 times 30 or one 10950 thousandths of its total value. But if you consume it in ten years, you pay me daily one 10950 thousandths instead of one 3650 thousandths of its total value, that is, only one-third of its daily value and you rob me, therefore, every day of two-thirds of the value of my commodity. You pay me for one day's labor whilst you use that of three days. That is against our contract and the law of exchanges. You may be a model citizen, perhaps a member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and in the order of sanctity to boot; but the thing that you represent before me face to face with me has no heart in its breast. That which seems to throb there, is my own heart beating. I demand the normal working day because I, like every other seller, demand the value of my commodity."

This Applies to Ford Only Too Well.

SO might the Ford worker speak to Henry Ford, insofar as Ford extracts as much and more in five days as other employers do in six. the above accusation applies equally well. The mist in which it does to the "hard-boiled" boss who makes his surplus value, his profits, by working his slaves longer hours. When Marx made his worker speak the above lines to the capitalist he visualized this worker as, not a slave, but a man, who, banded together with other workers, puts the case up to the capitalist in cold logic and enforces his logic by the power of organization, by reason of being a member of a union which is strong enough to protect and conserve the lives and happiness of its workers.

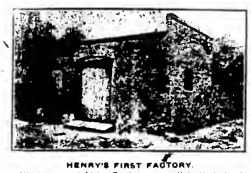
Robbing Value of the Workers.

THATS the way that Karl Marx figured it out in 1873 and earlier. It is the way that not only Ford, but, to an increasing extent, other big employers of labor are getting richer and more powerful every day. It is the only logical way in which the amassing of the huge Ford fortune can be explained. It is the only basis upon which the ROBBERY of the working class can be explained.

For what else is it by ROBBERY? All Ford and his family have done is to START the industry and, by virtue of the nature of our society and the laws governing it, TO OWN IT and all the huge ramifications of it that have developed as the result of the growth and development of society at large.

THE thousands of workers in the Ford plant own little more than the labor power they bring with them to work every morning and leave work without every evening. The mere fact that they get six instead of four dollars is of no very great consequences in view of the terrific strain they work under and in view of the fact that six dollars is hismed little anyhow, compared with the cost of living. They are automatons. Ford does with them as he pleases.

Why should a single individual, and that one not a very great individual, rule the destinies of the thousands of workers slaving indirectly or dependent on the Ford industries? The Ford industries, like other great industries, have ceased long since to become Ford's. They have become part of society. Their management is only in a small way directed by Henry Ford or his son, the two owners. It is far too large and complicated. The Ford plants are run by a system administered by a huge body of bosses and functionaries that are but cogs in a machine like the six dollar a day worker. Every one of the thousands of workers in the Ford plant are indispensable to the machine. Henry and his son could die or be gone for many years and the plants would go on just the same. But if a plague struck Detroit and decimated the workers, there would be a different story to tell.



HENRY'S FIRST FACTORY

Workers are told by Ford propagandists that it was due to Henry's unusual ability and his great foresight that made this tumbled down shack grow into the great auto plants at Highland Park and Fordson. For them the important thing is that Ford is the OWNER of these great industrial institutions. They entirely overlook the fact that billions of hours of exhaustive labor has gone into the building of the huge Ford machine. But workers who think about it easily see that from those billions of hours of labor time that they put into production coms not only the gigantic auto industry but the millions of dollars of profit that Henry now is sole master of. By what right?

The Same With All Industry.

IT is the same with all the great industries of this land and other lands in which this system works. The mere OWNERSHIP and the outland ish RIGHT to extract surplus value, both absolute and relative gives these few industrial barons and the bankers that control their finances, the privilege to amass fortunes of untold wealth while the thousands and millions of wealth producing workers have to be satisfied with the mere necessities of life or little better, with no word in the direction of their destinies.

They are pawns that are pushed here and there as the capitalist wills it. Henry can make them work a six day week and produce a certain amount of surplus value for Henry, or he can, if his interests require it, make the workers toil a five-day week and produce as much, or more, as they did in six.

The Essence of Marxism.

NOW that we have drawn with special reference to the Ford industries and their operation, some of the lessons that Marx taught, we can conclude in no better way than by repeating the very essence of all Marx's teachings:

"Workers of the world unite, you have nothing to lose but your chains—you have a world to gain."

Which, in the case of the workers in the Ford industries means, unite with your fellow slaves in all the other industries in this and every other capitalist land and relieve the Fords of the burden of building up great fortune and achieve for themselves their destinies. The Ford plants belong not to Ford but to society, the workers. For a start they should therefore make it their business to take their own destinies, set the work the and work week time for themselves, turn the rewards of surplus value to the common good and direct their own destinies on the path of progress.

Du Bois Visits the Soviet Union

The following editorial by Dr. W. E. B. DuBois appeared in "The Crisis," November, 1926. Dr. DuBois is head of the research department of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and editor of the Crisis, its official organ.

Moscow, U. S. S. R., 1926.
By Dr. W. E. D. DuBois.

I AM writing this in Russia. I am sitting in Revolution Square opposite the Second House of the Moscow Soviets, and in a hotel run by the Soviet Government. Yonder the sun pours into my window over the domes and eagles and pointed towers of the Kremlin. Here is the old Chinese wall of the inner city; there is the gilded glory of the Cathedral of Christ, the Savior. Thru yonder gate on the vast Red Square, Lenin sleeps his last sleep, with long lines of people peering each day into his dead and speaking face. Around me roars a city of two millions—Holy Moscow.

* * * * *

I HAVE been in Russia something less than two months. I did not see the Russia of war and blood and rapine. I know nothing of political prisoners, secret police and underground propaganda. My knowledge of the Russian language is sketchy and of this vast land, the largest single country on earth, I have traveled over two thousand miles and visited four of its largest cities, many of its towns, the Neva, the Dnieper, Moscow and Volga of its rivers, and stretches of land and village. I have looked into the faces of its races—Jews, Tartars, Gypsies, Caucasians, Armenians and Chinese. To help my lack of language I have had personal friends, whom I knew before I came to Russia, as interpreters. They were born in Russia and speak English, French and German. This, with my English, German and French, has helped the language difficulty, but did not, of course, solve it.

* * * * *

I HAVE not done my eight seeing and investigation in gangs and crowds nor according to the program of the official Foreign Bureau; but have in nearly all cases gone alone with one Russian-speaking friend. In this way I have seen schools, universities, factories, stores, printing establishments, government offices, palaces, museums, summer colonies of children, libraries, churches, monasteries, boyar houses, theaters, moving-picture houses, day nurseries and co-operatives. I have seen some celebrations—self-governing children in a school house of an evening and 200,000 children and youths marching on Youth Day. I have talked with peasants and laborers, Commissars of the Republic, teachers and children.

* * * * *

ALONE and unaccompanied I have walked the miles of streets in Leningrad, Moscow, Nijni Novgorod and Kiev at morning, noon and night. I have trafficked on the curb and in the stores. I have watched crowds and audiences and groups. I have gathered some documents and figures, piled officials and teachers with questions, sat and gazed at this Russia, that the spirit of its life and people might enter my veins.

I STAND in astonishment and wonder at the revolution of Russia that has come to me. I may be partially deceived and half-informed. But if what I have seen with my eyes and heard with my ears in Russia is Bolshevism, I am a Bolshevik.

THE returns for the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund must be increased thru intensified work if we are to reach the $25,000 mark—the first half of the $50,000 fund—by November 30.

Tuesday's contribution, in place of showing an increase, represents a falling off of nearly $200 as against Monday. There remain only Wednesday, Friday, Saturday, Monday and Tuesday in this month in which The DAILY WORKER will receive contributions.

To reach the $25,000 mark by next Tuesday means that we must raise $1,000 each day during these five days.

Based upon the present percentage of their quota for the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund the districts of the party should raise the following amounts during the next five days in order to complete the first half of the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund:

|---|---|
| New York | $1,000 |
| Chicago | 500 |
| Boston | 500 |
| New Haven | 250 |
| Philadelphia | 250 |
| Buffalo | 150 |
| Pittsburgh | 300 |
| Cleveland | 400 |
| Detroit | 200 |
| Minneapolis | 300 |
| Kansas City | 100 |
| Seattle | 250 |
| San Francisco | 250 |
| | $4,500 |

The completion of the $25,000 half way goal of the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund is not only necessary in order that November make a good showing in the campaign but it is essential to meet the maturing obligations of The DAILY WORKER.

On Monday The DAILY WORKER must meet a bill for $2,000 to cover a portion of paper without which The DAILY WORKER cannot appear. Other obligations of the same character make the raising of the $4,500 which will raise the fund to $25,000, a matter of urgent necessity to Keep The DAILY WORKER.

We call upon the party organizations in the various districts to mobilize all their forces for the drive for The DAILY WORKER during the next few days and to raise as a minimum the amounts assigned to them in the above tables.

These amounts can be raised if the work is taken up in earnest—in spirit that this is work which must be done in order to Keep The DAILY WORKER. This issue of The DAILY WORKER will reach every section of the country by Friday. The DAILY WORKER Committees should be called into session on Friday and Saturday and organize to make Sunday a DAILY WORKER Day, on which thru organizing as many party members as possible for systematic collection of funds, the total assigned to the district is raised.

An organized push forward of this character will result in the collection of the $4,500 needed to reach the $25,000 mark.

We call upon every party committee and every party unit for immediate action to raise this $4,500 and the $25,000 goal.

THIS mad dog Mussolini is drawing perilously near the rocks. The ludicrous figure he cuts as the originator of plots against his own life has made him the laughing stock of Europe. They seem to think that but for Mussolini fascism would fall to the ground. It cannot be denied that Mussolini's personality is an important factor. ## 50,000 TROOPS DESERT WU FOR CANTON CAUSE

Gen. Yang-Sen Deserts War Lord to Cantonese

HANKOW, China, Nov. 24.—Reports from Ichang in the upper Yangtze valley state that General Yang-sen, former ally of General Wu Pei-fu, who controls the eastern part of Szechwan province and the western portion of Hupeh province, has gone over to the Cantonese forces with his 50,000 troops. He is also reported to have 12,000 more men stationed in the south of Shansi province, a Wu strongheld.

This new defection is of great strategic importance to the southern armies now driving north and east against the combined forces of General Chao Tse Lin and Marshal Sun. It adds one more province, that of Szechwan, to the territory now under the control of Canton and gives freedom of military movement for the Cantonese in the eastward drive into Hunan province against Wu Pei Fu.

The consolidation of the Cantonese control in the central Yangtze valley began with the capture of the important industrial centers of Wuchang and Hankow by the forces under the youthful general Chiang Kai Shek. With the acquisition of General Yang-Sen's province of Szechwan, the march of the Cantonese armies north towards Shanghai has been greatly facilitate. The moving of the seat of the revolutionary government from Canton to Wuchang puts the base of operations further north to make easier the objective of controlling the whole of China and conquering the militarists still in control of the large northern end eastern provinces.

Lenin and Krassin

THE following statement made by Leonid Krassin concerning the difficulties of Soviet trade abroad at the time the Soviet Union was deprived of the guiding hand of Lenin, gives an idea, in his own words, of the obstacles that confronted Krassin himself when he was sent first to Paris and then to London as the outposts of the workers' and peasants' government in the uphill struggle for economic reconstruction of the New Russia:

LEONID KRASSIN

"It is a great misfortune for all of us that Lenin had to cease active leadership of the state just when our foreign trade was beginning to get going. At the outset, in 1920, Lenin was somewhat skeptical of the possibility of developing foreign trade. After the blockade of Soviet Russia was nominally lifted by the order of the Allied Supreme Council in 1920, it was still maintained in fact, and Lenin half-jokingly questioned whether it was even possible to use our gold reserve to obtain indispensable goods from abroad. And, as a matter of fact, our first attempts at foreign purchases were met by a "gold blockade," for, at the instigation of their governments, not a single bank or firm would accept our gold in payment for goods. This blockade only came to an end with the conclusion of the trade agreement with Great Britain in March, 1921."

Altho in ill health for many months, Krassin carried on in London, applying Lenin's policies in his dealings with British imperialism and being constantly victimized by the enmity and intrigues of the British Foreign Office, headed by the lamented Austan Chamberlain.

CALLES IS FIRM FOR ENFORCING OIL, LAND LAWS

Anti-Wall Street Act to Apply in January

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The state department is preparing the way to break off relations with Mexico. The publication of the exchange of notes dealing with the Mexican oil and land laws is itself a move in this direction. Secretary of States Kellogg is assuming an ever sharper tone towards Mexico City. It is in anticipation of January 1 when the first of Mexico's laws affecting the property rights of foreigners will go into effect.

At the same time word from Mexico has it that the congress will support the stand of the Calles government to the limit and will enact no legislation according to the American demands.

The Real Stake.

While principals of international law and fundamental problems of ownership are discussed in Kellogg's notes with much harmlessness, the stakes about which the game is being played by the state department can be tangibly put in the following figures showing the value of American interests in Mexico:

|---|---|
| Mining and smelting | $300,000,000 |
| Oil lands and refineries | $478,000,000 |
| Agricultural and timber | $700,000,000 |

Including this total of American investments in Mexico also embracing railroad, mercantile and bank capital, is estimated at $1,500,000,000.

The best part of these investments is controlled by New York financiers, for whom Kellogg is speaking when he assumes the ultimatum tone towards the Mexican government that his notes signify.

Laws 9 Years Old.

The Mexican land and oil laws were passed in 1917. They provide for the dissolution of alien ownership of productive oil, mineral and agricultural

American Imperialism Shows Its Teeth

Workers Must Support Mexico Against Attacks of Government in Interest of Wall Street

Statement by the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party.

THE government, acting for the imperialist American, capitalist exploiters of Latin America, is preparing for a new attack upon Mexico.

The workers of this country face the danger of being called upon to fight a war for the investments and profits of the American capitalists in Mexico, Central and South America.

Last week the capitalist press floodad the country with propaganda against Mexico because of alleged interference with the imperialist schemes of the American capitalist and government to maintain Central America as the backyard for imperialist adventures and profits of Wall Street. Yesterday Secretary of State Kellogg, under orders from Wall Street's president, Coolidge, threatens Mexico because it dares to assert its right to control the natural resources within its territory.

From threats of withdrawal of recognition of Mexico to armed intervention to protect the investments and profits of the American imperialists is only a step, but a step which will involve the sacrifice of the lives of thousands of American workers. Thus it is becoming clear where the imperialist exploitation and domination is leading this country and the dangers which lay ahead for the workers.

American imperialism—Wall Street—backed by the American government and its marines has for a decade or more been engaged in the business of overthrowing governments opposed to its schemes of exploitation in the West Indies and Central America. Haiti, Santo Domingo, Nicaragua have all felt the weight of the iron fist of American imperialism, when resistance developed against the unchecked exploitation of these countries by the Wall Street bankers. The governments of these countries set up by the will of the people were ruthlessly driven out with the help of American marines and puppet governments, ready to do the will of Wall Street set up in their place and upheld with the support of American bayonets.

The Nicaraguan affair is a striking example of how Wall Street and the Washington government, maintain spheres of exploitation and make of the Latin American countries colonies dominated by American imperialism. Adolfo Diaz, the president elected for Nicaragua thru machinary rigged by Wall Street and the representative of the American governments, is a puppet president representing the American capitalists. The effort of the Nicaraguan people to throw out this agent of Wall Street and establish a government of their own which will protect their interests, is met by the beyonets of the marines from the American warships.

WHAT has happened in Nicaragua has happened and will happen in all of the Central and South American countries in which the American imperialists are investing the billions wrung from the exploitation of the American workers. Under one form or another these countries are being brought under the sway of American imperialism, backed by American warships and American marines. The status which the American imperialists have decided upon for Latin America is that of a vast colony whose people must submit to bitter exploitation and swell the profits of the American capitalists. In this work of subjugating Latin America the American capitalists have the unlimited support of the American government and all its military and naval power.

Mexico stands in the way of this great scheme of imperialist agrandizement. Mexico has shown resistance to the American imperialist and their Washington government. It has declared that the resources of that country belong to the Mexican people and not to the Wall Street bankers. It has adopted provisions in its constitution which seek to return to the Mexican people the natural resources which previous Mexican governments, amenable to the influence of the American imperialists have turned over to these freebooters.

It is because Mexico insists upon enforcing these provisions of its constitution and laws that Secretary of State Kellogg is threatening the Mexican government. Kellogg, who issued a warning intended for Mexico that it must not interfere in Nicaragua in support of the effort of the people of Nicaragua to gain control of their own government, brazenly interferes in Mexico to compel Mexico to revise its laws to suit the American imperialist exploiters of Mexico.

Kellogg declares in his note against the effort of the Mexican government to enforce the provisions of the constitution of Mexico.

"It strikes at the very root of the system of property rights which lies at the basis of all civilized society."

HERE we have the same reason given for American imperialist intervention in Mexico that Kellogg has given for the refusal to recognize the Soviet Union—the property rights of the capitalists are endangered.

It is to protect these property rights of the American capitalists that the American workers will be called upon to fight, to give their lives, to sacrifice upon the bloody battlefields if American imperialism goes its way unchacked by the power of the workers.

Mexico, because of its resistance to American imperialism, is today the rallying point for the struggle of all Latin America in the fight against American imperialist domination. The countries of Central and South America see ahead of them the same fate which has befallen Haiti, Santo Domingo and Nicaragua unless they unite in the struggle against American imperialism.

The American workers must ally themselves with the peoples of these countries in the fight against American imperialism and its Washington government. They must show the people of Mexico and Latin America that they have an ally in the United States in the fight against imperialist subjugation. They must show now that the American workers will not pay in blood and suffering to make Latin America an American colony. They must unite with the Latin American people to fight the exploiters who wrung profits from their labor and use those profits of the labor of the American workers for imperialist exploitation of Latin America.

HANDS OFF MEXICO MUST BE THE SLOGAN OF AMERICAN LABOR.

These slogans must be raised in the entire American labor movement now if American labor is not to have a blood bath in a fight for "vested rights" of the American imperialists to exploit Latin America and backed by the organized force of American labor.

LEONID KRASSIN, SOVIET LEADER, DIES IN LONDON

Ambassador to Britain Succumbs to Illness

one of the leaders of the new school of diplomacy that came into existence with the revolution of the Russian workers and peasants and that was founded by Lenin.

Chicherin, Rakowsky, Krassin, these three names were pronounced in all capitalist chancelleries with misgiving. The plain-speaking foreign policy of the Soviet state was put into practice in London by Krassin who was hated and feared by the labor-baiting officials of the British Foreign Office. As ambassador to the Court of St. James, Krassin's conduct was marked by the firm convictions of a member of a revolutionary state whose faith in the power of the great liberated Russian masses more than overcame the obstacles placed in his path by the cunning diplomats of British imperialism.

But his actions were also tempered by the realization of the needs of Soviet reconstruction. Firm in all matters of principle, standing always on the solid ground of the revolutionary future of the workers' and peasants' state, Krassin met the intrigues of foreign capital with the skillfulness of strategy that was Lenin's heritage to proletarian state leaders.

Concessions he made. His haste to recognize was the wonder and amazement of the French bourgeoisie when first he went to Paris to take over the quarters of the old czarist representatives. But British gentlemen of diplomacy were likewise disappointed to find a representative of the Russian workers able to meet their precision of procedure with an intelligence far surpassing their own.

Victimized by Tories.

Since he exchanged places with Christian Rakovsky, who went to Paris while Krassin came to London, he has been constantly beset by Chamberlain and his aids who charged the Soviet Union with "subversive propaganda" in England. The great working-class fermentation that has been going on in England and the set-backs that British imperialism has received in the far east, caused the venom of the British Foreign Office to be unloaded on the Russian embassy and Krassin. That short-sighted and rabid tories blamed all their troubles on the quiet Krassin who was doing about the business of looking after the economic interests of the Soviet Union in the imperial capital.

Leonid Krassin was born in the Ural region of Russia in 1870. His father was a commercial man. He was educated at the university. He graduated as a technical engineer. He joined the Social Democratic Party of Russia in 1891 and was a follower of Lenin when the Bolsheviks split from the Mensheviks in 1903. In 1907 he was a delegate to the congress held in London. He played an important part in the revolution of 1917 and accompanied Trotsky to Brest-Litovsk during the peace negotiations. He was food commissar for the Red Army during the days of the counter-revolution and later became commissar of foreign trade. He was a member of the Central Committee of the Union of Soviet Republics. During 1925 he was Soviet ambassador to France. Early in 1926 he was transferred to London lands and for these lands to pass into the hands of Mexican nationals by means of compensation determined by laws.

Ever since their passage, they have been a source of constant protest by the United States government.

Recognition was entirely withdrawn by the United States for some years before it was resumed with the Obregon government in 1923. The Calles administration has been preparing to administer the laws for the past two years and the decrees are to go into effect on Jan. 1. The Kellogg notes now made public forecast the withdrawal of recognition again at that time.

Kellogg Threat.

Briefly, the Kellogg notes warn the Mexican government that a crisis will exist between the two countries if the latter does not put its position of freeing Americans to give up the property they acquired prior to 1917 under the retroactive clauses of the legislation. The laws provide that alien holders of titles shall be required to sell them to Mexicans over a period of ten years at which time no aliens are to hold land in Mexico.

The correspondence between the two countries on this question has extended over a period of two years. The state department has made varied and sundry threats during this time and the Calles government has stood firm in its position.

All Latin America Involved.

But the controversy over the land laws is only one of the contributing factors to the dispute between the two countries. United States marines are in control of Nicaragua. The American fleet is cruising in Central American waters with a sharp eye on Guatemala. Foreign Minister Saenz declared from Mexico City that his country will not recognize the puppet Diaz regime just given recognition by Kellogg. The Mexican government has declared that it is giving aid to the Nicaraguan liberals who are in rebellion against the Wall Street tool, Diaz.

So that the question assumes a much larger importance due to these complications. It really embraces the whole question of the imperialist attitude of the United States, not only to Mexico, but to all of Latin America. There are indications to the southward that sentiment is piling up throout the Latin republics against the domination of the United States in Central America and the Caribbean.

Mexico's Answer.

The wordy and high toned protestations of Secretary Kellogg to Mexico, in which he speaks of certain violations of international law involved in the land laws is answered by Foreign Minister Saenz with a curt reply: "My government on its part will expect your excellency to indicate the concrete cases in which recognized principles of international law may have been violated or may be violated in disregard of legitimate interests of United States citizens, since, in such cases, it will be disposed to repair such violations."

The position of the Mexican government is that the United States has no cause to make complaint, according to the best practices of international law, until the violations charged by Kellogg have actually taken place. The laws will not be operative until January, at which time Mexico anticipates that the United States will interest itself in the status of its nationals and their property. But until that time, Calles thinks Kellogg should hold his peace.

Dollar Diplomacy.

But Kellogg is playing the dollar diplomatic game. It is his intention, if possible, to bring enough pressure to bear before the laws become operative, to have the teeth taken out of them so that Wall Street will not suffer in January. Failing this, no secret is made of the fact that the government will resort to stern measures at that time to try to force Mexico to abandon its plan of turning over alien wealth to Mexicans.

What forms the dispute will take when the crisis comes during January cannot be predicted. But with the Calles administration unshakable in its determination to enforce Mexico's laws and Kellogg assuming a more belligerent attitude, serious consequences can easily result.

LAUNCH DRIVE FOR FOREIGN-BORN WORKERS

National Organization Opens Headquarters

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—In order to organize public sentiment thruout the country and focus attention upon the various congressional bills which propose to register, fingerprint, jail or deport foreign-born residents of the United States, the National Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers has opened headquarters at 41 Union Square, New York, under the direction of Nina Semorodin, the national secretary-treasurer.

Three years ago, when the first of the series of bills calling for registration of the foreign-born was introduced in Washington, gropps in a number of the large cities banded together in the interest of foreign-born workers to oppose these bills. Some of these organisations have continued to exist inactively, and they are now being amalgamated to form the nucleus of a nation-wide organization to begin active work against all such proposed legislation.

Dean is President.

The president of the national council is Joseph Ducca, of the Motion Picture Operators' union; vice-presidents, Max Orlowsky of the local council in Chicago, and P. Pascal Cosgrove of the Shoe Workers' Protective union. Henry T. Hunt is legal adviser and the executive committee consists of Timothy Healy, international president of the Stationary Firemen and Oilers' union; Max S. Hayes of the typographical union; James Maurer, president Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor; William Cowan, international president of the upholsterers' union; Fred Suiter, international secretary Quarry workers' union; Percy Thomas of the commercial telegraphers' union; J. L. Spidler of the United Mine Workers; M. Ullman of the upholsterers' union, Carl Appel of the Boston council, Rebecca Grecht of the New York council; A. W. Bourman of the United Mine Workers, John Brahtin of the Cleveland council, J. R. Brodsky of the United Workers' Cooperative, Anagen Berkowitz of the Amalgamated Food Workers, E. G. Hallock of the western Pennsylvania council, J. Lewandowsky of the Polish Roman Catholic Union of America, J. Peda of the New Haven council; John Lecesky of the Connelsville coke region council, Anna Lewcik of the Association of Benevolent Sisters, Morris Sugar of the Detroit council, Paul J. Zoretich of the Holy Heart of Jesus N. 194, N. H. IZ

Immediate Danger.

In announcing today the plans of the newly-created National Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers, Miss Nina Semorodin, secretary-treasurer, said:

"In view of the fact that the Holaday bill, H. R. 12444 has already been passed by the house and is to be taken up by the senate at the next session, we feel that there is immediate need of bringing this matter of discrimination against the foreign-born directly before the people of the United States.

Threatens Refugees.

"The Holaday bill permits the deportation of any foreign-born resident of the country, whether or not he is a naturalized citizen, if during the past eight years he has served a year's sentence for any cause whatsoever. It also would allow the deportation of any foreign-born resident if he had knowledge of the illegal entrance of anyone into the United States. The special injustice of this latter clause can be appreciated when you realize that in order to escape persecution and death thousands of political exiles have fled to this country during the past few years from Italy and Spain. Of course no guarantees that the United States shall give refuge to political exiles, but the Holaday bill intends to nullify this.

Will Fight Such Bills.

"The Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers intends to fight all such legislation, including the five or six other bills now in congressional committees which would have us fingerprint, register, tax, conscript for industrial service, or deport foreign-born workers at our pleasure—even when they have complied with all our requirements and become naturalized citizens.

Naturalization Bureau.

"In addition to fighting such legislation and giving it the widest possible publicity, we shall establish naturalization bureaus in hundreds of smaller cities thruout the country so that those who are unacquainted with the demands for citizenship may be informed just as soon as they reach this country, and may be protected when they gain the rights of citizenship."

Ford as Dry Enforcer.

DETROIT, Nov. 24.—Henry Ford today was to direct personally an invasion into aerial bootlegging at his Dearborn airport. State police last night seized an airplane, loaded with 11 cases of whisky, in the airport's hangars. Henry Ford arrived at the airport about the time of the raid.

APOSTACY OF AGUINALDO IS NOW COMPLETE

Organizes Fake Party in Support of Wood

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA, P. I., Nov. 24. — Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, at one time revolutionary leader against the United States for a Philippine Republic, and in fact first president of such a provisional republic, has so far fallen from the first principles for which he struggled, gun in hand, in the Island hills, that he has completed his sell-out to U. S. imperialism by forming a political party whose object is support to the Wall Street satrapy represented by the Governor-General Wood

Sold Out Long Ago.

Aguinaldo's fall began many years ago. Not long after the occupation of the Philippines by American troops, after a secret conference with American officials, decided to recant and pledged allegiance to American control of the Islands.

Since that time, Aguinaldo, by reason of his revolutionary past, something of an idol, has been used by various governor-generals as a tool to use against the Filipino nationalistic movement. When the break between the Philippine legislature and General Wood came three years ago, Aguinaldo supported Wood as against the stand of his countrymen.

Deadlock.

The Philippines legislature, under the leadership of Manuel Quezon and Manuel Roxas, is deadlocked with the office of the Governor-General. This is a veteran's organization composed of old fighters for the Philippines. To stay with Aguinaldo because he left their hero, the general attempted to create the impression that all the Philippine people was not with Roxas and Quezon exalnst Wood.

Now, with the secret connivance of the governor-general's staff, Aguinaldo has announced the formation of a new political party, the object of which will be to support General Wood in the legislature.

But Aguinaldo has but a small following. Quezon and his supporters have already won large numbers of Aguinaldo's veterans' organization. The creation of the party is recognized throut the Islands as a deal maneuvered by Governor-General Wood to create dissension in the ranks of the nationalist movement

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

IMPERIALIST diplomacy is losing no touch sleep over the situation in China, with the Cantonese armies bringing new sections of the republic almost daily under the standards of the revolution.

The definition issued by General Chang Kai Shek forces the next move upon the diplomats of Washington, London and Paris.

The New York Times tries to discuss what that move shall be. It indicates that it ought to be very conciliatory. That is, of course, to be expected of imperialist diplomacy when it is on the defensive. But the Chinese, under the leadership of Canton, will not be fooled by imperialism's soft words that always have a spiked club in reserve.

The moving of the revolutionary capital from Canton to Wuchang isn't considered so bad, by The Times. It admits the political and geographical reasons for the change saying "Wuchang is the heart of China," but it is rather skeptical about how "the outside world" will accept it. This doesn't seem to be troubling the Chinese. Peking has been the capital of the nation in name only. It remains in the eyes of the imperialist diplomats the symbol of "the imperial splendor of China" that passed with the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty 15 years ago. It is in Peking that the geographical reasons for the change saying "Wuchang is the heart of China," but it is rather skeptical about how "the outside world" will accept it. This doesn't seem to be troubling the Chinese. Peking has been the capital of the nation in name only. It remains in the eyes of the imperialist diplomats the symbol of "the imperial splendor of China" that passed with the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty 15 years ago. It is in Peking that the unpatriotic invaders maintain their hostile establishments, for which millions of Chinese labor has been forced to pay, over and over.

It is better indeed for the bandit armies of foreign greed to give up all its show of power and move to Wuchang, railroad center, heshive of young Chinese industry, where the rising and clenched fist of New China battles its way forward in counter-intention to the dead hand of things past loosening its grip forever on progress in Pekin.

Foreign diplomats were compelled to forget the glories, as they viewed them, of the czars in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) and Constantinople (now Istanbul) to workers' and peasants' rule in Red Moscow, capital city of the Soviet Union.

But that does not mean that the imperialists quit their attack on the Chinese National Revolution any more than that they have given up hope that they will be able in time to achieve the crushing of the Workers' Republic.

It is to their interests, therefore, to mislead the world before the world, as they are able thru their own press, the actual situation in China.

It is here that The New York Times is at its best. It now raises the question:

"Has the government of Canton the right to move the capital from one city to another without assume the international obligations imposed by gun and bayonet upon the Chinese people by the financial responsibilities to world imperialism. The Chinese might instead demand the return of the Boxer indemnity from us to our imperialism to dictate its terms. That time is gone. General Chiang has clearly stated the intention to denounce all existing treaties with the imperialist powers, that extra-territorial privileges will be abolished and that the struggle against imperialism will be continued everywhere, because the Chinese national revolution is part of the world revolution, in the words of the Chinese spokesman at the opening of the Seventh Enlarged Plenum of the executive committee of the Communist International at Moscow, on Monday.

The New York Times is trying to "laugh that off." It says that General Chiang's "pronunciamentos need not be taken too seriously, as these are somewhat on a par with our own party convention platform resolutions. They are useful for home consumption."

The big point is that the Chinese people take the program seriously, whether Wall Street openly professes to or not. They are rallying in support of it. All are being educated to understand it. A revolutionary army, continually growing in strength, has been built in support of it. It is said that old party programs are built for capitalist politicians to ride into office on. The program of the Chinese revolution is similar in this respect; it is built as a unifying instrument for the Chinese masses to go into power.

Whereas the American capitalist party programs are constituted of a flood of words, the Chinese revolutionary program calls for a flood of deeds that moves ever onward engulfing all its enemies. No comfort here for the enemies of the people.

The Times whistles another tune on the question of Bolshevik influence in China. It now declares that the Cantonese movement is neither "Red" nor "pro-Bolshevik," stating that:

"As a matter of fact it suited the interests of the Cantonese to accept the Russians for a time. Later they gave the Russian leader their walking papers."

It was quite unfortunate for The New York Times that on the same day this editorial appeared, Shau Li Tze, representative of the Kuomintang party of China, was addressing the gathering of the Communist International in Moscow declaring that the Kuomintang is acting unitedly with the Communist Party of China in the struggle for the emancipation of the Chinese people.

With some of the other confessions of The Times it is easier to agree, especially that, "of all the warring groups in China today the Cantonese have what most nearly approximates a constructive program." The only other groups of any consequence are those headed by Wu Pei Fu and Chang Tso Lin, and they have no program except to play the role of satrapas for native and alien profiteers. The forces of the former are especially strong thru a process of rapid disintegration. One of his most powerful allies, General Yang Sen, has just deserted to the Canton cause, taking with him 30,000 troops in a most important sector.

The Times is wrong again. The Chinese Nationalist Revolution is now commanding the attention of the world. It is the duty of every American worker and farmer to study and understand it, for therein they may soon be drawn into the very center of the vortex of struggle at any moment.

BLUENOSE reformers had better not get too fresh with Chicago politicians. The law must be enforced, but with discretion. This is what we gather from the little speech delivered a few days ago by a federal judge when instructing a grand jury. The judge advised the jurors to be careful and not bring in indictments indiscriminately. Only last week several policemen, one municipal judge and the chief of police's secretary were indicted on charges of violating the dry law. This was a terrible wallop to the democrats so they got busy.

THE federal district attorney secured the assistence of an attorney who is alleged to be connected with the Anti-Saloon League, in his war against "grafting officials." His assistant in turn hired a professional snooper by the name of Williams to assist him. The Rev. Williams is in jumped on city hall with both feet and produced a fina collection of catholics and foreigners who are alleged to have violated the prohibition law. It would not be so bad if the snoopers confined their activities to having humble saloon keepers indicted. But they reached up to the church as well as behind the bar. Hence the judge's little speech. The moral is that laws are made to be enforced against those who do not make them.

SAYS U. S. COURT WILL KNOCK OUT RADIO DECISION

Tribune Case Cannot Stand, Lesh Asserts

Claims to prior rights in radio wavelengths, made by the Chicago Tribune station WGN, will be knocked out by the federal courts in spite of a decision by an Illinois state court in the Tribune's favor, it is confidently predicted by L. J. Lesh, radio engineer of the Chicago Federation of Labor. Lesh is the man who built WCFL, the labor broadcast station on the municipal pier, and developed the commercial radio telegraph business of the federation to a profitable basis. He has had wide experience in many cities on the engineering side of radio and is deeply read on its legal and social aspects.

Is Federal Power.

"The entire question of radio rights and radio regulation belongs to the federal government," Lesh says. "The Tribune in its suit against the Commercial school station WGES claimed that the WGES wave-length interfered with the WGN wave length and therefore infringed on it. The property right to the air based on prior use efficient service and established good will among radio listeners.

A state and not a federal court on Nov. 17 ordered the interfering station to adopt a different wave-length, thus seeming to acknowledge the Tribune's property claim.

No Basis for Decision.

"There is nothing whatever in radio law to confirm such alleged ownership. The broadcast licenses are issued for three months only by the federal department of commerce and renewal must be made regularly at their expiration. The licenses are not patents but temporary permits, although certain radio interests have tried recently to set up vested rights over them."

The question is vital to the labor station as it is operating on a wave length to which a New York station has prior claim. The license was granted automatically by the Department of Commerce after its arbitrary assignment by the Supreme court had been declared a federal decision in the Zenith case.

From the summit of High Mountain can be seen the skyline of New York City together with a view of the surrounding country for a distance of 15 miles. Meeting place for the hike is easier to Ambers St. and Hudson river; time 8 a. m. More than 40 miles to be covered by automobiles and buses provided they are patronizing proletarian lines.

GEORGE IS NOW KING OF SEVEN SEPARATE STATES

But Actually He Has No More Power

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 24.—Politicians and constitutional authorities in Britain are debating just what the implications of the new empire charter passed by the imperial conference just concluded in London mean. It is agreed that the sovereign status of the various commonwealths is recognised. The colonies are now bound together on an equal basis with the home government, thru the sole instrument of the king, who finds himself the sovereign head of seven separate state entities.

Contradictions.

Aside from the fact that his "state duties" become much larger, there are some obvious contradictions in the arrangement that are now coming under discussion. The expenses of the king's household are now borne by Britain only. They amount to several million dollars a year. It is the opinion of many that the colonies, now that the king is directly their own, should bear some of this expense.

There is also the question of defense. The only considerable military and naval force in the empire is that of Britain. Save for small contingents and a few ships of war, the six colonies depend entirely upon the British armed forces.

King Against Himself.

The king may have cause for embarrassment as the workings of the new arrangement comes to be tried. For example, as king of Canada, he may be called to sign a treaty with, say Washington, that is in disagreement with the government of England, of which he is also king.

The governor-generals of the colonies now have the status only of personal representatives of his majesty. In effect, it is the king that performs the duties of a sovereign in the colonies thru his representatives. A movement in England for the abolition of the monarchy would automatically dissolve the empire, since it is thru the king alone that the colonies are bound together.

The Real Bond.

But all these conundrums propounded by brilliant London lawyers entirely leave out of account the real forces that keep the empire, however loosely, still together.

The economic ties between the dominions and the home government are not to be left out of account. Nor is the necessity for united action on the part of the capitalists in all parts of the empire to be ignored. While the tendency towards dissolving the empire is without question growing because of the rapid development of the economics and special interests of the dominions, at the same time, and with particular reference to international action, the ruling classes of all parts of the empire still have enough interests in common to hold them together.

The new empire arrangement with regard to the king has no more significance than is implied by the well-known powerlessness of the king in home affairs. He is a mere titular head in the United Kingdom and remains so under the new colonial system.

The Queen Is Gone—But Not Forgotten

GREETINGS TO OUR PIONEERS

ONE of the greatest and most difficult tasks of our movement is the organization of the proletarian youth, and especially the proletarian children. Capitalism is controling all instruments of public education. It uses it as instruments to estrange the children of the workers from their class. Instead of knowledge, the schools convey illusions and prejudices. Even the teaching of the elementaries of the so-called three R's, altho seemingly unadeptable to class education, is exploited by the examples and subjects used for the creation of a pro-capitalist ideology. Indeed, if we workers want to retain our own children as ideological parts of our class, if we want them to become militant fighters for the interests of our class, we must struggle with capitalist educational institutions for our children.

The accomplishment of this tremendous task is impossible without organising the children themselves. It is not only necessary to convey to the children an understanding of their position in society, their duties, their prospects, but we must also teach them to fight and how to fight. It is in struggle that the rebellious spirit grows. We have learns to study the enemy, that one develops his strength and that one establishes class loyalty and self-confidence. The problem of winning the proletarian children for the proletariat in spite of the efforts of capitalism to ideologically kidnap them is, therefore, not only a problem of patient educational endeavors of proletarian parents, but it is also and primarily a problem of organizing the proletarian children.

They must be organized to systematize educational endeavors; they must be organized to be able to fight for their rights in the educational concentrate institutions of capitalism; they must be organised to be kept away from the capitalist children's movement, which the they may not estrange them physically from their proletarian parents but surely lead into an ideological world which makes them enemies to the concepts and aspirations of their parents.

The organization of proletarian children, which fulfills the tasks outlined above, are the Pioneers. The Pioneers are made up of proletarian children, for their education and for their entertainment. The building up of the Pioneers must get much more aid from our party members and from our party than they have gotten heretofore.

Friday, November 26, there takes place two district conventions of Pioneers; one in Berkeley, for the California district, and one in Chicago, for the Illinois district. These conferences aim to establish a centralized organization and direction of the Pioneer groups and their work in these district. The conferences will make possible systematic work in the field of proletarian children's organization. But these conferences also put up to the party and its members the duty of more energetic and more substantial support of this movement. The ideological growth of our party will guarantee this support.

We welcome these conferences of our Pioneers. We see in them another step forward for the revolutionary proletarian movement in the United States. We greet our Pioneers as comrades in arms.

Long live the Pioneers.

Agitprop Department,
Workers (Communist) Party.

Ulster Worried Over Change in Status of British Dominions

BELFAST, Nov. 24.—The Ulster government will raise objections to the proposed reorganization of the British empire, as suggested by the imperial conference. It was decided at a meeting of the Ulster cabinet.

The Ulster government fears that the change of the title of the king, which would mention Ireland as a unit, may prejudice the status of Ulster, which still considers itself as a part of the United Kingdom.

Fascists Say Y. M. C. A. Is an Pernicious Bunch

ROME—The fascist party is now directing an attack on the Y. M. C. A., which it brands as a mask for internationalism. A party organ, Il Tevere says of it: "This pernicious organization is an opponent of the view of fascism." It charges that the people are being politically corrupted by accepting charity of cheap hospitals, cheap meals, and free recreation facilities, in regard to the "the beastly error of the armistice period, when the people of the liberated regions had only the Americans of the Y. M. C. A., with their quantities of Star Spangled Banners, to thank, because of the scandalous lack of Italian organizations for assistance." It urges that fascism build houses to take the place of the Y. M. C. A. buildings, like the "House of Fascism," in Bologna.

State Attorney Asks Hanging for Inmates Who Tried Jail Break

JOLIET, Ill., Nov. 24.—Hanging was demanded for all six convicts accused of slaying Deputy Warden Peter Klein during a jail break from the penitentiary last May.

State's Attorney James Burke of Will county told the jury at the conclusion of the trial that all were equally guilty and should be hanged.

Burke accused the defense of calling Nathan F. Leopold, Jr., slayer of Bobby Franks, to the stand "merely to gain notoriety." He said Leopold had "nothing to do with the case."

Russian Artist of Silent Stage Gets In

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The Soviet Union has sent to this country not only a notable artist in the motion picture field but its most beautiful woman, in the opinion of a committee of artists, writers and film producers, in the person of Natalia Barrache. She comes under a contract with the First National Pictures and was accompanied by Richard A. Bowland, general manager of the organization.

Being a screen artist and not an actress of the speaking stage, the state department evidently felt that she would be silent enough on Russian affairs to make her entry to this country not an alarming threat to constituted government and established institutions. Anyway, she is in.

CHINA NATURALLY ACCEPTS RUSSIAN IDEAS ON WORLD

Educator Says People Look to Friend

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SEATTLE, Nov. 24.—That the Soviet principles are making headway in China to an extent way beyond the influence of Soviet persons or Soviet money was the statement made by Bishop Albert A. Gilman, president of Boone University at Wuchang, China in an address at the St. Nicholas school here.

Make Arrests.

This, he declared, was because the Chinese intelligentsia and student are atheistically inclined and the atheism of the Bolsheviks corresponds with their own point of view. Besides, with all the other nations of the world bent on the exploitation of China the friendly and sympathetic attitude of Soviet Russia stands out so prominently that it is but natural that awakening China should look to her.

Bishop Gilman said that if the leaders of the Cantonese army carry out their ideals there may be a stable government in China but the forseeing of them would simply prolong the chaotic condition.

Feng is Proletarian.

The Christian general Feng, he described as a proletarian in his philosophy with something of the attitude of Tolstoy toward poverty. In his eyes no one has any right to wealth while there are others who have nothing.

Dr. Gilman has spent 25 years in China and is not unfriendly to the rising nationalist movement there He might be classified as a pro-war democrat with liberal tendencies.

Now Orthodox Russian Incense, Like Czars, Will Go Up in Smoke

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—That the old Russian nobility and upper classes are having a hard time of it spiritually as well as materially is shown by the fact that members of the Russian Orthodox church in this city will hereafter worship in one-half of the old St Augustine's chapel on East Houston street in the heart of the East Side. The property belongs to old Trinity parish, the wealth trustees of which have come to the aid of the spiritually homeless Russians by building a sound-proof wall to divide the chapel into two portions, on one side of which the orthodox services will be maintained, while on the other the Episcopal ritual will be observed. The Russians will pay the pauperizing rental of $1 a year, which Trinity can well afford to accept, in view of the fact that it nets for decades such rentals from slum property, until the legislature at Albany threatened to investigate the parish in its capacity as landlord.

The Russians are without other place of worship, since the court turned over the cathedral fashionably located just off Fifth Avenue to John Kedrovsky, archbishop under appointment of the schismatic Living Church of Russia which is favorable to the Soviet. This left Metropolitan Platon, like his master, without a place to lay his head or his mitre. This was too realistic a form of christianity for the metropolitan, who has accepted the charity of Trinity in behalf of his congregation, which includes Prince Gegerin and the pianist Rachmaninoff.

New Marriage Law Is Passed in Russia to Protect Dependents

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 24.—Legal distinction between registered and non-registered marriages has been abolished by a law passed by the All-Russian Soviet executive committee.

The law means that non-registered marriages are on the same footing as registered marriages, and that the duties and responsibilities of man and wife are the same, the object being to protect the women and children.

Legal and material responsibilities are now not lessened by the fact that the marriages are not registered.

Spain Hits at Labor and Tends to Fascism

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 24.—President Kalinin of the Soviet Republic has informed the colonization committee of the Jewish people that the government will facilitate the formation of a Jewish territorial unit. He announced the formation of the Agrokustbank, with an initial capital of $75,000. It will finance the agricultural operations and industries of the colonists. The bank will not be a state concern, but a majority of its shares will be held by the State Bank, the Industrial Bank and Peasants Cooperative Bank, while minority shares may go to private investors and even to foreigners.

AMERICAN TRADE UNIONISTS URGED TO AID BRITISH COAL MINERS IN AN APPEAL FROM WORKERS OF RUSSIA

The following appeal, addressed to all left wing trade unionists in America, for aid for the British mine strikers is sent by the Woodworkers' section of the Red International of Labor Unions, Moscow:

Dear Comrades: You are all aware of the distress among the miners and their wives and children. All the forces of the government, of the army, justice and of the employers, are being directed towards smashing this epic strike and bringing the miners to their knees. The employers refuse to hear of negotiations; they demand a full surrender. In contact with the employers, the government is going to introduce the eight-hour day for the miners and is taking steps to separate strike funds from unemployment funds, etc., in order to have some chance of smashing strike funds.

I. F. T. U. Wants Interest.

With such difficult conditions to contend with, the British miners cannot even count on the support of their own International. Amsterdam and its affiliated bodies. These bodies have demanded high rates of interest for a loan to the General Council, 4½ per cent on the deficits of the miners' strike. But the revolutionary proletariat the world over must not allow any such thing, for the British mine strike is one of the most tremendous international significance.

Is General Struggle.

The miners' struggle represents the general class struggle not only of the British, but also of the international proletariat, and if their strike closes with defeat it will be the signal for a fresh and more furious attack of capitalism in all countries, without exception. The workers' class enemies are impatiently waiting the shattering of the British strike.

The miners of Britain are isolated. Defeat awaits them if the revolutionary proletariat everywhere does not strain every effort to prevent any such disaster from happening.

Thruout the strike the trade unions of the U. S. S. R. have given all the assistance they could to the British workers. Up to date the miners have received £740,000, of that sum nearly a fourth has been sent by the Russian unions. In face of the great threat to the strike the workers of Russia have readily declared themselves 1 per cent on their wages right to the close of the strike. On September 5th 3,000,000 rubles were sent on account of levies and contributions to come in.

Urges Action.

Comrades, we are confident that as before the revolutionary proletariat of Russia, you will follow the example of the Russian workers and take every measure to carry out the vital slogan of the moment: "One per cent levy for the miners". We ask you to have this matter discussed at general meetings, in the workshop and factory, and to inform us of the results of the campaign you have undertaken.

With comradely greetings.

KABANOV,
Woodworkers' Union, Moscow.

Dry Agents Apologize for Seizing Steamship Belonging to Germany

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The German steamer Carmen, seized 140 miles at sea by a prohibition destroyer and towed into New York, has been officially released and the coast guard cutter at New York who seized her have apologized for it as "all a mistake."

According to a message to the German embassy here the Carman carried a cargo of Scotch whiskey, bound from Bremen to Halifax, worth $5,000,000.

Soviet Republic Aids Jewish Colonization

MADRID, Nov. 24.—Spain's trend to fascism is shown by the government's action in setting up legal machinery to prevent strikes in the country. Under the department of labor there will be created joint committees of workers and employers, which will be held responsible for avoiding conflicts and empowered to impose penalties to enforce peace in the industries. The autocratic nature of this move is shown by the fact that the minister of labor not only appoints the committees but can at any time reverse their action. Radicals and liberals are looking for state labor unions as the government's next move in this direction.

SUPREME COURT SHEARS POWER OF COMMISSION

Decisions Make Trade Body More Useless

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The supreme court today extracted some more of the teeth of the federal trade commission.

The commission has not the power to require industrial concerns to divest themselves of the property of other companies acquired by them thru purchase where stifled competition is asserted by the commission, the court held in deciding the appeal of the Thatcher Manufacturing company of Philadelphia.

Commission's Order Squelched.

The Thatcher company acquired in 1920 the property of three rival companies. The third circuit court of appeals sustained an order of the commission requiring the company to divest itself and ceaso from the ownership of the assets, properties, rights and privileges of the rival concerns.

The decision applies also to another case, in which the Eastman Kodak company purchased other concerns.

Upholds Most Combine.

In another decision the commission was reversed by the court in its order directing complete separation of the Western Meat company and the Nevada Packing company, formerly competitors in the California and Nevada meat market.

The trade commission declared this control was in violation of the Clayton anti-trust law prohibiting monopolies and restraints of interstate commerce, but the court held otherwise.

International Economic Conference Is to Meet Only for Consultations

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GENEVA, Nov. 24.—The International Economic conference will amount to nothing more than a discussion of world economic problems and will have no power to either plan tentative agreement between nations, or to make recommendations.

This is revealed by the draft of the agenda just released and approved by the preparatory committee. The agenda provides only for "consultation" among the delegates and prevents any definite action.

After this conference is held, it is hoped by leaders that another one will be arranged, possibly on May 4 which will have more power.

Want Russia Represented.

The place of meeting has not been decided, but it was definitely indicated it would be in some other place other than Geneva, in order that the Soviet Union can be represented. Delegates fully realise that a conference to discuss economic problems cannot be successful without Russian participation.

That each "economically important" nation send five delegates to the conference was recommended by the report to the league council. It further stated that the delegates should be chosen for their personal qualifications, rather than for any official capacity.

Three Divisions.

The program of the conference is divided into three divisions: consideration of present economic problems, consideration of economic factors and conditions that affect the peace of the world, and factors dealing with commerce, industry, and agriculture.

In the original agenda the matter of "inequalities in treatment of foreign nationals" was included, but fear that the United States would not participate because of its attitude on immigration caused the wording to be changed to "economic treatment," instead of "inequalities of treatment."

Four hundred soldiers took part in the attack.

Federal troops in the town of Bage are also reported to have revolted.

MARCHING MEN—
A Review

By V. F. Calverton

Sherwood Anderson is the author of "Marching Men." Calverton's review makes us anxious to read it. But the review is more than an evaluation of the book. It takes us back into history and proves that authors have marched as well as men. Calverton claims that many of the American writers are marching days, and names stand out in the ranks of literature were in the front of Bunkerhill. Anderson is the latest lord or baron made good for the mass tickets. This article by Calverton will hold your attention.

Left Winger Reinstated by Int'l Committee

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 24. — It has been ascertained here that the committee representing the International Executive Board of the United Mine Workers of America, composed of John J. Mates, District 9, John Ghizzoni, District No. 2 and Dennis Brislin, District No. 1, appointed at a recent meeting of the International Executive Board to investigate the expulsion and conduct a hearing on the appeal of Pat Toohey, expelled militant miner, has handed down a decision in the case recommending reinstatement of Toohey with all former rights and privileges enjoyed prior to his expulsion.

First Time.

The decision has far-reaching political implications, inasmuch as the International has never yet reinstated a member expelled for political reasons.

This expulsion case is a result of the activities of the left wing during the anthracite strike. Cappellini, president of district No. 1, had Toohey and August Valentine, expelled from membership while they were serving sentences in the Lackawanna county prison for strike activities.

No Compensation.

The decision of the international committee also specifies that Toohey be not accorded or permitted any compensation for the thirteen months loss of employment and membership in the union, due to his former local union defying the district executive board when the board commanded the local to expel Toohey which the local refused to do.

'MUSTN'T CONTAMINATE LIBERTY CRADLE WITH 'RADICAL', PLEADS MIKE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Nov. 24.—"The cradle of liberty should not be contaminated by radicals," said Councilman Michael J. Ward of Roxbury in the first and only protest to be received by the mayor against permitting Anthony Bimba, Lithuanian editor, to speak at Fanauil hall, where the Declaration of Independence was signed.

"This man Bimba prides himself on being a Communist," said the outraged Mr. Ward, "and he comes to Boston to preach that doctrine. I protest against his speaking there on the ground that it is a dangerous doctrine."

BALTIMORE AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS SCABBED ON CLOAKMAKERS BECAUSE OF CORRUPT OFFICIALDOM

BALTIMORE, Nov. 24.—Labor conditions here for the members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union are so miserable that most of them, instead of working at their own trade, are working on cloaks, scabbing on the striking New York cloakmakers. The deplorable situation in the A. C. W. under the corrupt Hillman bureaucracy was described here today by H. Sazor of New York, representative of the national needle trades section of the Trade Union Educational League, who is making a tour of needle trades centers.

Don't Work at Trade.

"In the A. C. W. there are about 3,000 members, with at least 10,000 of the trade unorganized," Sazor said. "Most of the 3,000, however, don't work at the trade. They work on cloaks at present. The run to cloaks was so great after the New York strike began that when it was decided to tax the A. C. W. meners with one dollar a week to help the strikers, the workers refused to pay.

"'Take the tailors out of the cloak shops, instead of collecting the money from us,' they argued."

Cohen Is Responsible.

Sazor said that Sam Cohen, representative of the A. C. W. joint board, was largely responsible for sending the Baltimore tailors into scabbery. Cohen made the excuse that it was a correct policy to send union men into unorganized shops in order to help unionize the shops. But instead of sending them into the unorganized men's garment shops, he sent them to work on women's cloaks.

"Of course, it wasn't organization work that the A. C. W. did, but scabbing," continued Sazor. "However, it wasn't necessary even for Cohen to send the tailors. Reductions in wages in the A. C. W. organized shops have been so drastic that the tailors rushed into the cloak-making work as soon as the New York strike brought the opportunity. They will go to work most anywhere in order to make a living!"

Presents T. U. E. L. Task.

Sazor emphasized the fact that the wage reductions and general demoralized conditions prevailing in the Amalgamated shops gave the left wing of the union a real opportunity to fight the Hillman-Beckerman-Levine machine. It is the task of the T. U. E. L. to create a big movement against wage reductions. To clear the way, a strong opposition is being built up nationally against the rotten union leaders, who are responsible for the debacle into which the A. C. W. have fallen.

Organize the Women for Class Struggle

By VERA BUCH.

THE need for the organized participation of the women folks in strikes is forcing itself more and more upon labor leaders. The unorganized woman is a millstone. Isolated from her husband's struggle, not understanding, seeing only that the pay envelope does not come in as usual, she sends her husband, with nagging and complaints, back to work. Give her, on the other hand, a chance to know what the fight is all about, show her her role in the struggle in the working class struggle, and you have an ally that will fight to the death to win the union's demands.

All economic and social forces are pushing women more and more to an awakened class-consciousness. The world war started an influx of women into the industries. Low wages of the men are driving them constantly in the same direction. This double exploitation of the shop and of the home forces this most backward section of the working class to rebel. But this smouldering discontent and rebellion must be utilized by explaining the issues at stake and by organizing the women for action.

Passaic Shows the Way.

The Passaic strike set a splendid example of what can be done on this field. The cloakmakers, inspired by Passaic, have organized their wives. Now the paper box makers on strike are awakened to the need of drawing in the women.

The fight of the women in Passaic merits earnest consideration. Labor leaders may well study the marvel of a strike that is still strong after ten months. The organized participation of the women had much to do with the remarkable vitality of this strike. There, from the beginning, the left wing leadership made special efforts to draw in the women.

They had their own mass meetings, where the issues of the strike and the problems of their own lives were explained to them. Then the Working Women's Councils were organized, which drew in not only the striking women but the wives of strikers and sympathizers. The United Council of Workingclass Housewives opened kitchens for the children, which the women themselves conducted. The Women's Councils went in for strike work with senks and on the picket line. They raised money for relief. The housewives for the strikers' children at Victory Playground. An organization of women has been built up which is not only been a powerful support of the strike, but which the women will maintain after the strike is settled.

Cloakmakers Follow.

In the fourteenth week of the cloakmakers' strike, the union called the wives of the men to battle. It organized them into committees and set them to work at visiting scabs and generally stirring up the strike. The women responded eagerly: they knew that they were a power in a great struggle; their confused, half-conscious yearnings and rebellions were crystallized into a conscious fight to win their husbands' demands. With the strike settled the women will keep their committees. The United Council of Workingclass Housewives is helping everywhere to organize the workers' wives for the workers' struggles.

Movements spread quickly, as the battles of the workers come thick and fast. The 3,000 paper box makers of New York City have been on strike for eight weeks against low wages and conditions of miserable exploitation. Women, most of them young girls, constitute 70 per cent of this union. Shoulder to shoulder with the men they have marched on the picket line, taken the blows of policemen's clubs and gone to jail.

Housewives Open Kitchen.

Pinched by the continuation of them strike, the union leaders, Calle, Markowitz, George Powers and Henrietta Ray, called in the help of the United Council of Workingclass Housewives. Nov. 12 they came to the office of Kate Gitlow, the secretary of the organization, and asked her to help them in establishing a strikers' kitchen. She spoke at a mass meeting the following Saturday afternoon and immediately organized a committee of ten women and five men to conduct the kitchen. That was Saturday afternoon. On Monday the kitchen opened, with three women as managing committee. The strikers flocked into the Church of All Nations on Second avenue, New York, where it was housed. They were fed plentifully and well. They enjoyed the satisfaction of eating in their own union kitchen, the funds for which came from organized labor. In keeping up this kitchen, as well as in the other work of the strike, the women will be drawn in more and more.

Yes, the backward sleeves, crushed by the century-long exploitation of the home and the new burdens of industry, are at last awakening. The women are learning that only by throwing themselves into the struggle for power which the working class is waging can they free themselves from those bonds which hamper their awakening thirst for freedom, for knowledge, for life.

GENERAL TRIES TO GET LIBERAL TEACHER FIRED

Is Inflamed at Expose of Society

By LAURENCE TODD,
Federated Press.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.— Fascist bullying of modern-minded teachers in the high schools of the national capital, attempted by Amos A. Fries, major-general in the army, chief of the chemical warfare service and commandar of the American Legion in the District of Columbia, has met a setback.

The board of education, in executive session, has refused to act on a demand by Fries, couched in terms worthy of Mussolini, that Harry Flury, teacher of biology in the Eastern High School, be dismissed. The offense alleged against Flury is his authorship of a definition of socialism printed in the Forum by October

Protested Article.

Superintendent of Schools Ballou received a letter from Fries, signed "Major General, Commander of the American Legion," etc., calling attention to this definition and protesting against Flury's being retained as a teacher. Fries denied the truth of the indictment drawn by the teacher against American industrial society, which read:

"Socialism is a big question mark. It asks why, with all the wonderfully productive machinery and improved methods of organization, the workers are still slaves. It asks why civilization is so cruel and ugly. It asks why little children still toil in factories. It asks why those who create do not enjoy the advantages of what is created, why those who build automobiles walk, those who build Pullmans ride in boxcars, those who build palaces live in hovels. It asks is not the industrial civilization we have created a Frankenstein that has made itself our master?"

"Un-American Radical."

Fries wrote Superintendent Ballou that these sentiments were "in only slightly disguised form the statement of the Communists that our government is bad and should be overthrown, if necessary by force and violence. This is just the type of un-American radical that the American Legion and other patriotic organizations are bitterly opposed to."

He pompously demanded word from Ballou as to what he proposed to do about Flury, and said he would "await your reply before taking it up" with his patriotic crowd.

Called On the Carpet.

Ballou tried to serve the fascist cause, but lacked nerve. He called in Flury and asked him to explain his own opinions as to American industrial society. Flury asked Ballou whether he was being questioned by a plain citizen or by the superintendent of schools. When Ballou said he spoke in his official capacity, Flury amiliingly replied that he never discussed his political, religious or economic views in his capacity as a public school teacher, since that was clearly improper for a biology teacher. Ballou then told him to write the board of education on the question, since the Fries letter would be sent to the board for action in executive session. Ballou remarked that Flury was confronted by a "serious situation," and asked whether he had read Scott Nearing's book, "What Happens to Teachers Who Think." He was astonished when Flury replied that he had; in fact Nearing had been his instructor in economics at the University of Pennsylvania.

A month passed. No word from Ballou to Flury that he was safe. No word from anyone. Finally a group of press correspondents heard of the fascist antics of Fries, and smoked out the fact that the board in secret session had decided to do nothing—at least for the present. Flury comes the next spring for salary increase; he may hear from the thought-controllers then.

Fries Notorious.

Some years ago Fries became notorious, and was reprimanded informally by Secretary Weeks for putting clerks to work at making the "Spiderweb Chart," a libellous document pretending to show that most of the liberal and humane organizations in America were connected with the Third International. Some weeks ago Secretary of State Kellogg denounced Fries for his insubordinate attempts to kill the pending treaty for abolition of the use of poison chemicals and bacteria in war.

They were not written in a code which she had arranged with her husband to test whether dead people tell tales.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

Young Pioneers Find Work in Calumet Region

By PAUL A. BUCHA.

The Calumet steel district is located in the Calumet region at the head of Lake Michigan. As the name suggests, this region is a steel center. This is where Judge Gary and his like have many of their plants located. And as there are many steel plants many workers are employed, and all of them are unorganized.

Howavar, during the great steel strike in 1919 this region was one that was most affected by it. Many Pioneers saw how the strikers were beat up by the police and militia. Four strikers were killed in this district during the strike, two of them ex-soldiers who fought in the "war for democracy." At the burial of those who were killed the strikers had a large parade. This shows that at that time there was some kind of organization among the strikers or steel workers. Since the strike the steel magnates have got the best of the workers and now the steel workers are unorganized and have no union.

The conditions of the steel workers in the Calumet district are very bad. This was shown by the explosion of one of the large mills in Gary, Ind. Many workers were killed just because the company was too lazy to repair a steam pipe which was leaky. This is only one incident where many workers are killed, but all over the Calumet region workers are being killed or injured not only by explosions, but by the machines where they work. These machines haven't any safety devices.

Child Labor in Mills.

In many of the mills there is child labor, where the children work in the same rotten conditions as the older workers. These children should really be at school, but it is impossible for their parents to send them there, because their parents, who are mostly steel workers, are unorganized and they get very low wages.

Even tho the child laborer produces just as much as the adult, he is not in the same place as the older workers, he is given less wages, just because of his size. Many of these children are killed like their parents are.

All these children need to be organized; the Pioneers are here to do it. It is not easy to organize these children because the steel magnates have worked hard trying to stop the organization of the older workers and children and they have succeeded so far. The methods they used were those that made workers use the church and, the schools for the children.

Many big bosses use the company unions to fool the older workers, while here Judge Gary is even afraid to organize a company union, because a company union would at least give the workers some idea of the need and meaning of organization. So Gary won't even organize a company union.

With all these rotten conditions in the Calumet region great labor struggles are bound to take place here in the future. The Young Pioneers will then be ready to take their places in the struggle. The great steel strike is an example for us. We are striving to better organize them during the strike, and we will do it.

Labor Leader and Royalty Welcomed By Bankers

At the recent banquet of the chamber of commerce of New York state there were present 700 of the leading big capitalists of this country, such names as John D. Rockefeller, Jr., heading the list. Besides that there was present the head of the labor agents of these gentlemen, Mr. William Green.

For the rest of the story we present our readers with two quotations from the pen of B. C. Forbes, financial writer of the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

1—"Time was when the New York chamber of commerce banquets were not addressed by any labor leader—or, for that matter, by any representative of our farmers. The chamber used to be fonder of honoring royalty than of honoring trade unionists. It still entertains royalty. But the reception accorded trade unionism's representative was no less cordial than that accorded Queen Marie a few weeks ago."

2—"Mr. Green, by the way, made an address which resounded with virtuous common sense, enlightened tolerance, ringing patriotism."

Children Help Passaic Strike; See Free Movie

DENVER, Colo. The Colorado Labor Advocate is lining up the Denver children to collect money for Passaic strike relief. In response to a call issued by the paper Mr. B. Hooton manager of the American Theater has arranged a contest in which the child that turns in the largest number of "25c meals" before Dec 15 will secure a pass good for two people, which will admit the holder to American Theater shows for a whole year.

Big Crowd Sees Picture.

Death of 100,000 Babes Traced to Low Wages.

Poverty is an important factor in the annual deaths of 100,000 infants in this country less than one year of age, says Dr. Robert Morse Woodbury in a report issued by the United States children's bureau.

PITTSBURGH CO. EVICTS WORKERS OUT OF HOUSES

Will Reopen Mine With Imported Scabs

By a Worker Correspondent.

BROWNSVILLE, Pa., Nov. 24.—It is widely known that the Crescent mine property of the reputable Pittsburgh Coal company in western Pennsylvania will reamme work on a non-union basis. This mine has been idle for 18 months.

Order Families Out.

Superintendent Hajkers has ordered all families out of the company-owned houses on Red Hill. There are 30 families living in these houses. He has given them 10 days' notice to move. The reason for the order is that the Pittsburgh company will use the huts to house imported scabs and gunmen.

Police Picket Mine.

A picket of a dozen coal-iron police is already on duty at the Crescent mine, and has already carried on the instructions of the Pittsburgh company to terrorize the residents of Red Hill by patrolling the roads leading to the mine.

It is very likely that the United Mine Workers of America will take steps to fight the evicion of the miners and their families.

SPEED-UP SYSTEM IN KODAK PLANT MEANS DEATH AND INJURY, COMPANY FORCES WORKERS TO BE CARELESS

By a Worker Correspondent.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 24. — In a previous article on working conditions in the plants of the Eastman Kodak Co. assertion was made that the institution of the Dedaux point system was in a large part responsible for the tremendous increase in the number of accidents in which workers were injured, crippled and killed. That this is so in spite of the continuous accident prevention campaigns which are carried on by the company and the installation of the best in the line of safety appliances by them is proved by concrete evidence.

Forced Carelessness.

While on the one hand the workers are urged to exercise care at all times in their work the very nature of the speed up system under which they are compelled to work forbids their being careful. Their weekly base wage is sufficiently low to induce them to work carelessly under the most hazardous conditions in order to make some extra money in the shape of a bonus.

Cut Down Times.

The yard department, for example, of the plant at which I work, in which department the work is heavy and hazardous, requires of its employes that they do the jobs in half and even less than half the time that it formerly took them. For instance formerly five men were expected to load a freight car load of paper which weights up to seven hundred pounds per bale, within three hours. Since the insauguration of the bonus system a twin brother to the Bedaux system, four men are expected to do the same amount of work in one and one half hours. If they do it in less time than this they are rewarded (or should I say insulted) with a miserably small bonus. If they don't do it within the allotted time, well . . . "We're terribly sorry, but we can't use you any longer." On other jobs done by this department the time has been reduced proportionately.

Crushed By Beams.

Thus, some time ago, one of the workers of this department, while leading some 12 inch I-beams about 15 feet in length upon an auto truck, being in a great hurry, failed to fasten the beams securely with the result that when the truck started to move the beams tipped over, pinning him beneath the load and crushing the bones in both legs. He is now a watchman on one of the company's railroad crossings, being unfit for any other kind of labor.

Another worker, employed in the cotton nitrating department also as a result of the hurry up system caught his hand in one of the wringers with the result that his hand is about 75% useless now.

Three Workers Killed.

Recently, three workers were killed within six weeks of one another. One of them, a youth about 18, who had contemplated leaving the employ of the company about two or three days later, was killed while dismantling rigging which had been used to hoist heavy materials. It seems that he too was in a great hurry, so much so that he failed to provide himself with a firm footing with the result that the weight of the chain hoist, which he was unhooking overbalanced him, causing him to fall some twenty feet to instant death. The other two workers lost their lives in building construction work.

Lose Fingers.

Any number of cases could be cited where, owing to the Bedaux system, workers become impatient with the slow motion of the punch press or cutting machine upon which they happen to work, try to rush it along with the result that they lose from one to four fingers. Only within the past two weeks a girl had the best part of three fingers cut off.

Adding insult to injury, the company, in it's monthly accident reports, which are posted thruout the plant, places the responsibility for 90 per cent or more of these accidents upon the injured workers.

The writer sincerely hopes to see the day, before he too gets killed, when the workers of the Kodak plants become organized into a union where by they will be enabled to demand a decent living wage without the necessity of risking the loss of life or limb in the acquisition of it.

S. P. TAKES UP RELIGION WHEN LEADER PASSES

So It Seems at Meeting in Los Angeles

By L. P. RINDAL.
(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 24.—Friday evening, Nov. 12, the International Labor Defense held a successful Debs memorial meeting at Music-Art Hall. This event, at which 600 workers were present, was a noteworthy one. Comrades "Mother" Bloor and Fishar, both able, forceful speakers, described wonderfully well the importance of Debs as a leader in the ranks of labor. Debs is not really dead, his spirit in behalf of the working class will live forever, it was pointed out.

S. P. Sprung on Religion.

The socialist party Debs memorial at Trinity Auditorium Nov. 14 was a religious affair. The godly expressions connected with it all suddenly caused Eugene to turn in his grave. Wright, socialist party ex-candidate for congress, was chairman. His speech, read from a book, dealt with leaders—from Abraham to Jerusalem Slim. Tha Nazarena also figured prominantly in a recitation given by a female soloist engal.

Back to Earth.

Rev. Clinten J. Taft, director of A. C. L. U., also spoke. Altho not a radical of any sort, he seemed to have more fighting spirit in him than the socialists themselves.

Upton Sinclair, author of "Profits of Religion," etc., did not seem to like the holy atmosphere in the auditorium very much. He cut his speech short. "Los Angeles is like Russia," he bexan, "the way it was during the regime of the czar," he continued. At this point he stopped and looked around.

S. P. Suppress Literature Sale.

When Sinclair regained his breath he spoke for the press and against the proposed Debs monument—"the stone," as he termed it. "Increase the power of the press," he shouted. The socialists themselves had no literature for sale, and they stopped everybody else from selling closer than 100 feet from the building. In other words, they tried to drive the Communists, I. W. W., anarchists, etc., into the clutches of the police. The Jewish Daily Forward likes that kind of "freedom of the press," but the author of the "Brass Check" does not.

Collection Sheet.

The chairman, Wright, interfered with Sinclair's collection speech. Result, $200 short of expenses. Sinclair, seemingly disgusted, left the speakers stand. At this point Rev. Taft took charge of a second collection. Being a preacher, he ought to know how to keep the "dear people" went into their pockets the second time, as well known. It is reasonable to believe, however, that the socialists are forced to follow Sinclair's advice: "Let the stone wait . . ."

Russian Tractor Fund Enriched.

On the same evening as the Debs memorial took place the "Icor" held its meeting, as scheduled previous to the break with the socialist party. The collection for tractors to be sent to a Jewish colony in Soviet Russia was $348.

INMATES IN SOVIET PRISONS DO NOT LOSE IDENTITY AS MEN; AN AMERICAN COMRADE TELLS OF LIFE

By JACK HARDY,

MOSCOW, Nov. 6 (By Mail).—While in Russia it was my desire to observe at first hand the workings of the Russian prison system, which has been described in such terrible terms by American capitalistic liberals and anarchists. Comrade Anna Rothman, another America, and myself, therefore, went to one of the largest of the prisons in the vicinity of Moscow. The "Isolator" prison, which we visited, is known to be one of the severest institutions in central Russia. To it are sent only those convicted of murder, armed robbery or other severe crimes. There are also confined in it a few counter-revolutionists whose actions were of a particularly vicious nature.

The exterior of this institution was not beautiful to behold. Russia is still poor and cannot devote her scant resources upon the decoration of exteriors. The inside, however, presented a different picture entirely.

Learn Trades.

The institution contains 360 inmates. All who so desire may learn a trade. No compulsion is used in the matter of work, but all, save the old and feable, choose to be gainfully employed. The bulk of them work in either the textile factory attached to the prison, the clothing shop where the textiles are made into garments, and a few work in the small prison machine shop. Those who work receive wages ranging from 20 to 75 rubles per month, the average wage being between 55 and 60 rubles. One-third of this wage is given to the prisoner; the other two-thirds go to his family. Those having no families receive the balance when their terms expire. Many of those men were never before gainfully employed. Many of them told us that they were glad to be thus confined and to learn a useful occupation for the first time in their lives. Several of the instructors who taught them their trades had been confined in the prison and, having become attached to the institution, expressed a desire to remain as employes of the institution. The director told us that they were among his best men.

Have Freedom.

At work the prisoners are allowed to talk, smoke and leave their places without asking permission. Within the grounds of the institution they are allowed to go about at will and without any guards. Their work is on a piecework basis and they might leave at will. In such operations as require the co-operation of several men other arrangements are made.

We were allowed to visit any portion of the buildings that we chose, as the director was anxious not to give us the impressiolof that we were being led about by him. Comrade Rothman speaks Russian and we were able to talk with any of the prisoners that we wished. We did not encounter one expression of resentment among the fifteen or twenty with whom we conversed.

Good Meals.

We visited the kitchen, where dinner was being prepared. They asked us if we would like to sample their prison fare, and as we answered in the affirmative they gave us a sample of a prison dinner. It consisted of first-rate cabbage soup and good meat and vegetables.

Solitary confinement and binding have been abolished in the Soviet Union. The director showed us the dungeon where men had been confined in solitary confinement during the regime of the czar. It is now the drug department of the prison, where medicine is prepared for those in the prison who become sick.

tures of the institution with which we were greatly impressed. The outstanding of these were a prison theater (in the former prison church) under the direction of a special cultural director who devotes full time to cultural work; an orchestra of 25 pieces, all prisoners; a prison library of 2,500 volumes, which the inmates may take to their rooms; a wall newspaper written entirely by those confined in the institution. The prisoners may write and receive as many letters as they please, altho their mail is taken out only twice each week. Other features were the co-operative bookstore and general store, where the men may make purchases with the money they earn, at stated hours.

Members Punished.

We asked one man what he had done. He was under a ten-year sentence. We expressed astonishment to the director that for a crime of his nature so severa a sentence should have been imposed. The director informed us that the man had been a Communist. Sentences as a rule are not severe in the Soviet Union. But when a Communist commits a crime punishment is many times greater than for other individuals.

Preserve Identity.

Talking in the office after our survey, the director attempted to impress upon us that this was one of the most strict prisons in the Soviet Union. He also impressed upon us that in Russia reform, not punishment, is the aim of the prison system. And after what we had seen we could very well believe it. The man confined within this institution preserved their identity as men. They did not have a number; they wore their own clothes, not a prison garb. All of them were happy. They talked to us without hesitation, and we did not encounter one bitter note in more than half a day that we spent there.

Joliet Pen Guard Tells How Warden Was Made to Hand Over the Keys

JOLIET, Ill., Nov. 24.—How six convicts now on trial for the murder of Deputy Warden Peter M. Klein forced him to hand over the keys to solitary confinement cells was told in court by Leon Judnich, a guard at the Illinois state prison.

"Sam Odan, a trusty, and I were in the solitary row outside Klein's office," Judnich told the court, "when we heard a noise and went to investigate. We saw Klein lying on the floor, blood streaming down his face, and several of the convicts in the room.

"Sam Odan ordered me to give him the keys. When I refused he struck me with an iron bar, while another prisoner stabbed Oden. I managed to escape but Oden was tied and locked myself in the solitary row."

The witness then told how Klein was dragged from his office and shaken until he semi-consciously nodded to him as a sign that it was all right to hand over the keys.

Hall-Mills Witness Is Offered Bribe for "Keeping Mouth Shut"

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 24.—Mrs. Maria Demarest testified on the witness stand in the Hall-Mills murder case that shortly after the murder of Rev. Dr. W. Hall and Eleanor Mills Detective Felix Dimartini came to her home and offered her $2,500 if she would "keep her mouth shut."

Di Martini is the private detective who was employed by Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, one of the defendants, shortly after the murder.

The offer was made to Mrs. Demarest, she said, if she would forget about seeing Henry Stevens and Ralph Gordon and Minnie Clark.

As Mrs. Demarest spoke of being offered $2,500 by Felix De Martini to "keep her mouth shut," Mrs. Hall's face turned crimson and she clenched nervously. Her face, however, remained expressionless. Henry Stevens squirmed in his seat. Willie twiddled his mustache nervously.

A NEW NOVEL

By Upton Sinclair

(Copyright, 1926, by Upton Sinclair.)

The next afternoon, coming out from his classes, Bunny saw on a news-stand the familiar green color of the "Evening Booster," and his eye was caught—as it was meant to be caught—by flaring headlines:

POLICE RAID RED CENTER

So Bunny purchased a paper—as it was meant that he should do—and read how that morning a squad from police headquarters had invaded the rooms of the clothing workers' union, and taken off nearly a truck-load of documents which were expected to prove that the disturbance in the city's industry was being directed and financed by the red revolutionists of Moscow. The officials of the union were under arrest, one of those apprehended being Chaim Menzies, "self-confessed socialistic agitator."

X

So there was another job for Bunny. He didn't know quite how to set about it, and Dad was on the way to Paradise, and could not be consulted. Bunny went to see Dad's lawyer, Mr. Dolliver, a keen-witted, soft-spoken gentleman who had no sympathy with reds, but, like all lawyers, was prepared for any weird trouble his wealthy clients might bring along. He called up police headquarters and ascertained that the self-confessed socialistic agitator was to be arraigned the following day; bail would be set at that time, and it would be up to Bunny to have the cash on hand, or real estate to twice the amount. Bunny said he wanted to see the prisoner, and Mr. Dolliver said he knew the chief of police, and might be able to arrange it.

He wrote a note, and Bunny went over to the dingy old building which had been erected to serve a city of fifty thousand, and was now serving one of a million. The chief proved to be a burly person in civilian clothing, smelling strongly of civilian whiskey; he requested Bunny to sit down, and summoned a couple of detectives, and began an obvious effort to find out all that Bunny knew about Chaim Menzies, and Bunny's ideas, and Chaim's ideas. And Bunny, who was growing up fast in an ugly world, gave a carefully phrased exposition of the difference between the right and left wings of the Socialist movement. Finding that he could not be trapped into indiscretions and knowing that he was a millionaire's son, and could not be thrown into a cell, the chief gave him up, and told one of the detectives to take him in to see the prisoner.

So Bunny got a glimpse of his city's jail. The old building was cracked, and had been condemned as a menace to life by half a dozen successive commissions; nevertheless, here it was, a monument to the greed of real estate speculators, who cared nothing about a city's good name, provided only its tax-rate were low. The mouldy old place stank, and if you looked carefully, you might see vermin crawling on the walls. The prisoners were confined in a number of "tanks," which were steel barred cages holding thirty or forty men each, with no ray of daylight, and not enough artificial light to enable anyone to read. This city, so oddly named "Angel," appeared anxious to cultivate all possible vices in its victims, for it provided them no reading matter, and no exercises or recreation, but permitted them to have cards, dice and cigarettes—and the jailers secretly smuggled in whiskey and cocaine to such as had money for bribes.

In one of these tanks sat Papa Menzies on the floor, since there was no other place to sit. He appeared quite contented, having gathered round him the entire company of prisoners to hear about the struggle of the clothing workers, and how it was up to the toilers of the world to organize and abolish the capitalist system. When Bunny appeared, the old man jumped up and grabbed him by the hand, and Bunny said quickly, "Mr. Menzies, you should know that this gentleman with me is a detective."

Papa Menzies grinned. "Sure, I got nothing to hide. I been a member of de Socialist party for twenty years. I believe in de ballot box—dey vill find nothing to de contrary, unless dey make it. I have been telling dese boys vat Socialism is, and I will tell dis gentleman, if he vants to listen. I have been helping de cloding vorkers stand together for decent conditions, and I am going on vid it de day I git out again." So that was that!

And in the evening Bunny phoned to his father and told him the situation. Bunny had been accustomed to such little father's game to checks of any size, and had been careful not to abuse the privilege; but now he was proposing to draw fifteen thousand dollars, because they would probably fix the bail very high, in the hope of keeping the old man in jail until the strike had been broken. There was no risk involved, Bunny declared, for Menzies was the soul of honor, and would not run away.

Dad made a wry face over the telephone, but what could he do? His dearly beloved son was ablaze with indignation, and insisted that he knew all about it, there was no possibility whatever that this old clothing-worker might be a secret agent of the Soviet government, deliberately planted in Angel City to destroy American institutions. How Bunny could know such things Dad couldn't imagine, but he had never known his boy to be all wrought up, and finally he said all right, but to have Mr. Dolliver send somebody to court with the money so that Bunny would not get his name into the newspapers again.

A New Threat Against Mexico

"Nervous Nell" Kellogg, our unlettered secretary of state, in the language of a bar-room bully, serves notice on Mexico that relations between that republic and the United States will be severed unless Mexico refrains from putting into effect the laws relating to oil and landed property passed by the Mexican congress.

Mexico refuses to be bullied and emphatically states that the government will not modify its laws to suit the interests of American exploiters. It is reported that Mexico's firm stand has rallied most of the Latin American republics behind the Calles government with the exception of a few puppet governments like that of Nicaragua which is on Wall Street's payroll.

While Kellogg is penning hinstering notes to Mexico, American marines are protecting the Diaz dictatorship in Nicaragua and United States warships are patrolling the Mexican coast ostensibly looking for Mexican filibustering expeditions in aid of the Nicaraguan revolutionists, but more likely looking for an excuse that would give Kellogg the pretext to break relations with our southern neighbor.

It is not necessary to stress the fact that Mexico is entirely right in her decision not to surrender her sovereignty to the Wall Street government of the United States. The stand taken by the Mexican government is a brave one and cannot fail but call forth the admiration of every worker, and indeed every American who has yet escaped the contaminating influence of imperialism.

No doubt the catholic church will take advantage of the fresh attack on Mexico to open its mad guns and to arouse popular opinion in behalf of military intervention. That the church is secretly working hand in hand with the government is almost a certainty.

If, as reported, the Latin American countries back up Mexico in this crisis our Wall Street statesmen might think twice before they risk the loss of their American markets by buckling on the sword for a war in behalf of the oil and land robbers of this country.

The voice of the American working class must be heard in Washington in protest against the threatened war against a friendly nation. And it must say to Wall Street: "Hands Off Mexico!"

Why Thompson Did Not Speak

Colonel Carmi Thompson, presidential investigator in the Philippines was scheduled to deliver a speech on the situation in America's potential rubber Klondyke, before the reactionary members of the Hamilton Club of Chicago, last Tuesday night.

Thompson did not talk about the Philippines. The subject was too warm. Why?

The reason can be found in Thompson's undiplomatic utterances on his arrival in Seattle. Thompson went to the islands with the conclusion already formed that the United States must stay in the Philippines, for the benefit of the Filipinos, of course. What imperialist power ever admitted having any ulterior motive in stealing something?

Despite this inelastic conclusion, however, Thompson found so many flaws in the regime of General (Ivory Soap) Wood, the governor-general, that he could not refrain from commenting unfavorably on his administration. Wood's rule must be bad indeed when such a loyal servant of imperialism as Colonel Thompson is forced to speak out in public and condemn it.

Thompson gave the impression that Wood is administering the affairs of the islands with a gatling gun. The general has surrounded himself with a "cavalry cabinet." The resentment of the Filipinos was brought home forcibly more than once to Thompson. The president's investigator thinks that the best interests of American imperialism will be served by a more diplomatic tool than Wood.

The expression of those ideas accounts for Thompson's failure to mention the Philippine question at the Hamilton Club. Thompson claimed that American imperialism is a good thing for the Filipinos. But the administration of the same imperialism is bad! This is just the end of the imperialist stick that touches the Filipino head. How can this contradiction be reconciled? It would never do for the Hamilton Club to sponsor such a presentation of the Philippine problem.

Thompson's recommendation to the president will undoubtedly suggest that General Wood be advised to develop malaria and that some college professor who is not accustomed to drinking brandy for breakfast should replace him. But whether the Filipinos get tickled under the chin by a saccharine professor or prodded by the bayonet of a swashbuckling militarist, Firestone will squeeze his rubber out of them and that is the object of imperialism.

Reaching the Youth

The capitalists, thru numerous organizations, social, athletic and religious, are assiduously poisoning the minds of the youth of the country with capitalist dope. Boy scouts and girl scouts, camp fire girls and similar organizations have for their object the creation of an ideology in the minds of the youth that will turn them into convinced supporters of capitalism.

Hundreds of capitalist papers cater to the youth. Every capitalist daily has its children's page. In comic strip, in poetry and in story, the ruling classes cleverly turn the youthful mind into the channel that will be most conducive to the interests of capitalism, whether it be in the factory during times of peace or on the battle field in time of war.

Against this barrage of propaganda the working class have been able to present only a feeble opposition. But feeble as it is at present, it contains the germ of a mighty educational weapon in the future.

The foremost expression of the working class youth in this country is the Young Worker, organ of the Young Workers League. Every adult worker should see that a copy of this live weekly comes into his home. Workers who do not want to see their sons brought up only to be mowed down by machine guns in a capitalist war should subscribe to the Young Worker.

Signs of Crisis in Italian Fascism

Fascism Carries Out the Work of Italian Finance—The Petit-Bourgeois Founders of the Party Are Kept Alive Only by Nationalist Phrases—The Workers Are Enslaved and Face an Economic Crisis of Serious Proportions—The Fascist Party Is Breaking Up from Conflicting Class Interests.

By ERCOLI (Rome).

THE introduction of the death penalty in Italy is an act of fear which is determined by the constant succession of attempts on Mussolini's life. In the course of nine months three attempts have been made to assassinate the "Duce." The first attempt has not yet been explained and there still exists some doubt as to whether it was not a case of provocation. On the second and third occasions Mussolini had an extremely narrow escape. Since the attempts are beginning to show one another in such regular succession it is difficult to say that any one of them will be the last. On the contrary, we may assume with considerable certainty that the first three attempts will be followed by others. Anyone who knows what fascism in Italy has been and what it has on its conscience, can easily understand the grounds for this certainty. Fascism has sown so much abhorrence and hatred that it is quite natural if "avengers" arise from the masses of the embittered people. Italian people anyhow tend to act individually. The introduction of the death penalty is thus a kind of "legal terror" with the purpose of counteracting this danger. It is, however, extremely doubtful whether these measures will have the desired effect.

After the third attempt on his life Mussolini spoke for the first time, in addresses to the black shirts, on dangers threatening the fascist regime. Never before had he made use of such words. Always, and especially after the attempts on his life, he had made a point of proclaiming loudly that the regime was "secure," "firmly established," "most firmly established," "indestructible," etc. As a matter of fact, however, there are today unmistakable signs that the situation, not only in Italy in general, but also in fascism, is becoming more and more acute.

Sarves Finanziara.

SINCE fascism came into power, but especially in the last two years, it has carried on a policy exclusively in the interest of a block which financial capital, the great industrialists and the agrarians, have formed round fascism. The policy of fascism has been not only a policy of class but a policy in the service of the most greedy and parasitic strata of the bourgeoisie. The consequence of this policy seemed at first to be a development of production. Capital, freed from all fetters, threw itself into industrial undertakings, hoping to achieve profits far beyond the usual rate. The investment of capital increased in an extraordinary measure.

It was, however, only a case of deceitful bloom and of a purely external growth. As a matter of fact, there were to a certain extent a consequence of the progressive depreciation of the currency, and moreover, if they had to be effective, demanded large markets. The home market of Italy, however, has been brought to the brink of ruin by the action of fascism itself—which, in order to stabilize state finances and to achieve a redistribution of wealth in favor of the plutocratic groups, has brought distress on the middle classes and thrust the poorer classes into a condition of despair by giving the industrialists a free hand to reduce wages and lengthen hours of work. Foreign markets, on the other hand, have yet to be won by Italy.

THE chief branches of industry are forced by a crisis. It is anticipated that within a few months enormous masses of workers will be turned on to the streets. Bankruptcies are multiplying at a catastrophic rate. The process of expropriating the middle classes for the benefit of the plutocracy is continuing systematically. The masses of the people are forced to restrict their consumption more and more and have to eat black bread as in war time. What is left of the reconstruction which fascism has tried to effect?

Two things remain on the one hand the system of blackmail and terrorism which was introduced in order to suppress all freedom of movement among the working class and, on the other hand, the phrases and plans of imperialist expansion. Both of these are indispensable to fascism.

A MATTER of absolute necessity is the enslavement of the working class and the peasants by suppressing their organizations by prohibiting strikes, by abolishing the independence of the municipalities, the freedom of the press, the right of assembly, etc. Methods but the enslavement of the working class enables the large industrialists and the large agrarians to develop their policy of stabilization. But this is not all proceeding smoothly. The pressure which is exercised on the masses calls forth a reaction from them, a very perceptible trend towards the left. For the moment there is certainly no immediate prospect of movements on a large scale, but nevertheless the outlook for fascism is anything but promising.

It need necessitly is that of making use of pompous nationalist phraseology and of proclaiming great plans of expansion. Imperialistic bragging is necessary, which has been forced on fascism by its petty bourgeois origin and by the precarious situation in which it finds itself at present, when carrying on activities which are entirely for the benefit of the large bourgeoisie it must keep the social strata from which it originated attached to itself by duping them with high-sounding phrases. How long will the nationalist intoxication be able to prevent the petty bourgeoisie realizing a policy which deprives it at the same time of comfort and of the illusion of power?

Fascist Party Divided.

THUS brings us to one of the most delicate questions, the crisis in the fascist party itself, a crisis which continues incessantly in spite of Mussolini's efforts. Fascism, having made it impossible for any opposition group to express itself, and having made itself the only political organization in the country, is now experiencing the revival of opposition within its own bosom. On the one side is the large bourgeoisie, on the other the petty bourgeoisie. On the one side are the fascist bands in the service of the agrarians and the plutocracy, on the other side are the old fascist programs and the old fascist groups with their old fascist tendencies. On the one side are the industrialists and on the other side the so-called corporations of workers. On the one side is a group of bankers, on the other side the group of their opponents.

The crisis has developed so far that within the fascist party itself all system of democracy has had to be abolished. Even in its local bodies the party is directed by functionaries who are nominated by the government. The meetings of members have been deprived of all right of action. The party has ceased, in assuming various forms. At the time of the last attempt on Mussolini's life the two branches of fascism came to an armed conflict with one another in Genoa, which lasted for two whole days and made it necessary to proclaim martial law. In Rome the fascist bands of opposition made an attack on the premises of the police administration.

THERE are in brief outline, some of the factors in the Italian situation, which undoubtedly prompted Mussolini to announce that the fascist regime is threatened by dangers. Has Mussolini any plan for removing these dangers. There can be no doubt that he has one, and this plan is being carried out. It consists in embittered intensification of the regime of terror, of oppression, of the systematic application of force against the masses in order to prevent them taking active action for the purpose of altering the situation. The reintroduction of capital punishment is part of this plan. It is characterized the terror which is assuming legal forms.

The proletariat and the peasants of Italy are becoming more and more convinced of the fact that the death penalty must be executed on the present regime and that they have received a call to execute it. The vanguard of the working class, the Communist Party of Italy, is steeled and working class front, then it need never hope to get into the international the Amsterdamers have set up, since at bottom such a front will be contrary to the tasks of the said international.

Boring from Within.

Cautious voices speaking at the conferences (which was, it ought to be noted, attended by Amsterdam's "own folks"), thought that some danger might attend the setting up of the new international: the Communists might charge them with splitting the movement, and perhaps it might be better to join the Paris E. W. I., where they again might have the majority with them.

It was suggested that the Belgians and Luxemburgers should not meantime leave the E. W. I., it being recognized as permissible for a union to belong to two internationals. Observing the hesitancy of the delegates and anxious to mask this plainly disruptive step, Sassenbach moved an elastic formula to the effect that "the conference recognized the necessity for establishing international connections between workers organized un affiliated to the E. W. I. F.," the form these connections are to take to be decided on in the autumn when the conference meets again.

Little consideration of this criminal plan being hatched by Sassenbach is enough to make one realize what fatal calculable harm it is likely to cause the work of establishing unity and of welding the ranks of the men and women engaged in the teaching profession, who, to an even greater extent than is the case among the workers in capitalist countries, are divided into different crafts and corporations. This fresh affort on the part of the Amstadam International Federation of Trade Unions to smash the already existing international teachers' body constitutes a direct attack on the united proletarian front. This small but clear example demonstrates fully the true nature of the Amsterdam International with its limited outlook and fanatical attitude towards any display of real working class solidarity

Amsterdam Splitters at Work Among the Teachers

Information was given in the press that Amsterdam was to convene a conference of teachers' organisations in Paris on August 1, for the purpose of creating a new international to cater for educational workers. Later the press stated that the conference had met, but what it had decided on remained in the dark. Only quite recently have we obtained the minutes of the conference proceedings which throw some light on this fresh dismpitive plan of Amsterdam directed immediately against the existing educational workers' international with headquarters in Paris

At present the teaching profession is organized as follows, internationally:

Trade Union Internats.

To the first group belong various pedagogic internationals of a pacifist and clerical nature, closely linked up in one way or another with the league of nations and in dependence on the ruling classes of the bourgeois states (such as the San Francisco International subsidized by American millionaires). These internationals do not aim at defending the trade union interests of the teaching profession, nor do they in any way fight to better their members' material position and status. They are mere tools in the hands of the ruling classes, deprived of any chances of conducting an independent policy.

The only genuine international trade union body standing on the class proletarian viewpoint and, effectively working for the improvement of the position of the teaching profession is the Educational Workers' International. The E. W. I. is affiliated to neither Amsterdam nor the Red International of Labor Unions, altho it contains in its ranks teachers' organisations belonging to both internationals as well as organisations without other international affiliation.

Establishing Unity.

The E. W. I. has, during the course of some years, demonstrated the practical possibility of establishing trade union unity among the various teachers' organizations, and it would seem that it has fully justified itself as a real and growing force.

The Amsterdam regards the present state of the international as far as the teachers are concerned, somewhat differently. The Education-al Workers' International's success in obtaining the practical realization of the unified front among the teachers it regards not as a virtue, but as a vice, and is trying to fight the E. W. I. by setting up its own teachers' international.

Amsterdam's present attempt to split international organisation among the teachers is by no means the first, as far back as 1922 it floodoned a special commission to call together a teachers' international, a step that was put off again and again.

Ms. Teachers' Organization.

Finally, two years ago, the Amsterdamlies set up a civil servants' and teachers' international to which, as the same Sessenbach admits, not a single teachers' organization is affiliated.

It can thus be seen that this last Amsterdam plan is merely a continuation of its old policy of sabotaging the united front the teachers may throw up.

The Paris conference of August 1, presided over by Sassenbach, was attended by the Nationale Syndicat of France, the Vienna Teachers' Alliance, the Austrian Teachers' Alliance and the Elementary Teachers' Union of Germany.

Both the British and Garman teachers' unions declined to participate.

Adoptad Resolution.

The conference adopted a draft constitution of the future international, the clauses of which places obstacles in the way of entry for bodies not sharing like views, reading: "The International may be joined by all educational workers' organisations from all branches of educational activities, providing they recognize the principles and methods of the educational workers' international federation." Of course, the international is prepared to cooperate with other organizations. . . . If and provided they do not adhere to principles contrary to those held by the E. W. I. F.

If, for instance, any teachers' organization does not share the principles of collaboration with the bourgeoisie and is in favor of a genuine united

Mexican Trouble Not Religious, Involves Politics and Schools

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The present struggle in Mexico is not religious, but political and educational, declared Carlos Barres, Mexican author and dramatist, speaking in Town Hall here, under the auspices of the League for Political Education. The constitution of Mexico, he said, merely did the same thing that the constitution of the United States does—providing for separation of church and state.

"In 1910 90 per cent of the population was illiterate. Today the percentage is only 62 per cent—surely a good record of progress in 16 years. Before the revolution public education was in the hands of the catholic church, which in 800 years failed in its task," he said.

OUR MEXICAN LETTER

(Special to The Daily Worker)

THE religious question is a thing of the past so far as the Mexican people is concerned. It was only a good many years under which Wall Street could arouse the anger of the Knights of Columbus, the catholic church representatives in the United States, against the oil and land laws enacted by the Calles government.

No one that knows Mexico, its inhabitants' religious feelings, doubted that the so-called regulation of the 130 constitutional article would bring some trouble, but at the same time it was understood that the trouble would be more likely to come from across the Rio Grande than from the Mexican clergy.

ALSO that it would be a fine mess for the government, which was preparing almost at the same time to fill out the national chamber of deputies with a large majority of the "socialist alliance" allied with the Morones "labor party," while the true representatives of labor and agrarian parties, considered more radical, were left out, in spite of the fact that some of the new congressional representatives allowed to get in had not even presented themselves as candidates and a good many of them neither knew the places or districts for which they were "elected" in Mexico City.

Otherwise it was a good stunt to be displayed as the achievements catholic church had failed miserably, got but the strength enough to obstruct the labor movement from its activities for betterment as a class.

THUS the action of the government to enforce the church regulation could not bring difficulties from inside, from the Mexican people, for it is well known that religion is strong only in Central Mexico, being so on the coasts, north and south border states, and the government is powerful enough, as proven in the limited few cases of fanatics stirred up against the law by the priests in Puebla, Jalisco, Colima, Michoacan and Mexico City, to "placate" them one way or another.

THE political situation as outlined above is completely in the hands of the government. Calles is planning wisely with the political forces at present. The so-called alliance of socialist regional parties is an hybrid amalgamation of reactionaries and social reformers a la U. S. fashion in core is made up of the former Obregon and co-operatista parties that essplace to the delahuertista lost counterrevolutionary party and uprising of 1923-1924.

And these gentlemen have close understanding with the laborista party —Morones party—the political expression of the C. R. O. M., the biggest organized labor party in Mexico, but a mere government department and nothing else.

NOW, with more than two years from this date to election time for president of Mexico, these political forces are moving fast already in order to get ahead on the political field, to fight successfully against the array of Obregonista forces which everybody knows in Mexico by this time.

The incoming new national bourgeoisie, big and small, the thousands of army officers and government employes discharged by the Calles regime following his plan of economy to pay the foreign national debts, the bigger part of the army, the peasant masses and the defeated Partidos Confiagdos Reclonales in the last electoral campaign

THERE is a third party which will play the villain role in the whole Mexican political film. That is the fully reactionary party with its forces already in line—the catholic church, the big old national land and industrial capitalism and foreign oil, mines and transportation, part of the mercenary officers of the army, at whose head will be General Arnulfo R. Gomaz, the fascist militarist candidate of all these powerful reactionary forces for presidency of Mexico, now commander in chief of the federal army in the state of Vera Cruz.

The most dangerous part of the camp would be the case of an alliance of the fascist party with the socialist alliance—combination against the clerical party—this very doubtful and will not have the support of the masses. More likely the fascists would be left to fight it out between themselves.

The conservatives who are in Mexico now relate that they are ready for a revolution against Calles if Gomaz is not president. They have already as candidate of the conservative party Ing. Francisco R. Serrano, secretary of the federal department of communications.

It is doubtful that Gomaz can count on a serious following through the army. Calles has many friends among the officers, and the government has been careful to see that the garrisons are composed in the most democratic way possible, so that the army will not be used against the people.

The conservatives' "alliance" will have a tough time to select one candidate to get support from both fascists and Calles people. Campillo, leader of Morones, are out of the question.

It is also doubtful if the fascists will be able to get support from both the Calles interests and the conservatives' interests combined in the Obregon government, with a Mexican presidential candidate on their ticket.

THEN there is the candidate of the whole conservative forces in Mexico for president, General Arnulfo R. Gomez, and what will lead the revolt against Calles under the assumption that he, Calles, will try to impose another candidate to succeed him against the wishes of the Mexican people.

It is too early as I said before that all this is playing at a game.

But if the worst does not be the whole conservative and farmers' political organization proposed to the ones described above, a clerical beginning of such a ten dency is to be noted in some parts of the country, but not without any definite relation among them.

The stronger local parties in some states as Yucatan (Gomalla, Puebla, Mexico and others are under the rule of one of the named national politica movement.

THE old national agrarian party is dead. Its chief leader, Soto y Lama, had to compromise to enter as a congress representative with the victorious socialist laborites, and yet he entered as the substitute of a laborite representative, that is Soto y Lama did not enter as an agrarian leader.

It is to be hoped that the stirring events that will take place within the next two years will be fully taken advantage of by creating a real strong workers' and peasants' political party under the guidance of the Mexican Communist Party.

A Mexican Communist.

Will Block Returning of Alien Property to Expose Custodian Deal

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—No German property will be returned to its owners until a report is had on the investigation into the conduct of the alien property custodian's office, Representative Wm. A. Oldfield, democrath whip of the house, told the ways and means committee at a hearing to determine legislation on the project.

Oldfield declared Comptroller McCarl has made an exhaustive investigation of the office, which, it has been hinted, might contain sensational disclosures. He said that report is available Oldfield indicated the clamor-ers will not permit the property to be returned.

| TOTAL | $20,577.70 |

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, General Secretary, Workers (Communist) Party

THE returns for the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund must be increased thru intensified work if we are to reach the $25,000 mark—the first half of the $50,000 fund—by November 30.

Tuesday's contribution, in place of showing an increase, represents a falling off of nearly $200 as against Monday. There remain only Wednesday, Friday, Saturday, Monday and Tuesday in this month in which The DAILY WORKER will receive contributions.

To reach the $25,000 mark by next Tuesday means that we must raise $1,000 each day during these five days.

Based upon the present percentage of their quota for the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund the districts of the party should raise the following amounts during the next five days in order to complete the first half of the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund:

|---|---|
| New York | $1,000 |
| Chicago | 500 |
| Boston | 500 |
| New Haven | 250 |
| Philadelphia | 250 |

| Detroit | 200 |
| Minneapolis | 100 |
| Kansas City | 100 |
| Seattle | 250 |
| | $4,500 |

The compilation of the $25,000 half way goal of the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund is not only necessary in order that November make a good showing in the campaign but it is essential to meet the maturing obligations of The DAILY WORKER.

On Monday The DAILY WORKER must mail a bill for $2,000 to cover a supply of paper without which The DAILY WORKER cannot appear. Other obligations of the same character make the raising of the $4,000 which will raise the fund to $25,000, a matter of urgent necessity to Keep The DAILY WORKER.

We call upon the party organizations in the various districts to mobilize all their forces for the drive for The DAILY WORKER during the next few days and to raise as a minimum the amounts assigned to them in the above tables.

These amounts can be raised if the work is taken up in earnest—in spirit that this is work which must be done in order to Keep The DAILY WORKER. This issue of The DAILY WORKER will reach every section of the country by Friday. The DAILY WORKER Committees should be called into session on Friday and Saturday and organize to make Sunday a DAILY WORKER Day, on which thru organizing as many party members as possible for systematic collection of funds, the total assigned to the district is raised.

An organized push forward of this character will result in the collection of the $4,500 needed to reach the $25,000 mark.

We call upon every party committee and every party unit for immediate action to raise this $4,500 and the $25,000 goal.

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THAT there is danger of war between France and Italy is indicated by the presence of a section of the French naval forces on the coast of Morocco withing striking distance of Italy. Mussolini's brigands are threatening to grab off the French Riviera. The fascist government openly boasts of the increase in the Italian population and justifies a demand for colonies on the ground of extraordinary fecundity.

THERE is plenty of idle land to take care of the surplus Italian population, and under a sane system of society there would be no difficulty about making the necessary arrangements to find the needed space. But as long as capitalism exists, waste will be the rule and the first consideration will be profit and not utility. So we have France and Italy making warlike gestures at each other with the possibility that thousands of French and Italian workers will be killed before the imperialists of both countries settle their differences.

THIS mad dog Mussolini is drawing perilously near the rocks. The ludicrous figure he cuts as the originator of plots against his own life has made him the laughing stock of Europe. And when people begin to laugh at a bully, his end is near. People are inclined to attach too much importance to Mussolini's personality. They seem to think that but for Mussolini fascism would fall to the ground. It cannot be denied that Mussolini's personality is an important factor. But the real power behind fascism is composed of the industrial capitalists, the bankers and big land-owners of Italy, supported by

50,000 TROOPS DESERT WU FOR CANTON CAUSE

Gen. Yang-Sen Deserts War Lord to Cantonese

HANKOW, China, Nov. 24.—Reports from Ichang in the upper Yangtze valley state that General Yang-sen, former ally of General Wu Pei-fu, who controls the eastern part of Szechwan provinces and the western portion of Hupeh province, has gone over to the Cantonese forces with his 50,000 troops. He is also reported to have 12,000 more man stationed in the south of Shansi province, a Wu stronghold.

This new defection is of great strategic importance to the southern armies now driving north and east against the combined forces of General Chan Tso Lin and Marshal Sun It adds one more province, that of Szechwan, to the territory now under the control of Canton and gives free dom of military movement for the Cantonese in the eastward drive into Honan province against Wu Pei Fu.

The consolidation of the Cantonese control in the central Yangtze valley began with the capture of the important industrial centers of Wuchang and Hankow by the forces under the youthful General Chiang Kai Shek. With the acquisition of General Yang-Sen's province of Szechwan, the march of the Cantonese armies north towards Shanghai has been greatly facilitate. The moving of the seat of the revolutionary government from Canton to Wuchang puts the base of operations farther north to make easier the objective of controlling the whole of China and conquering the militarists still in control of the far northern and eastern provinces.

Lenin and Krassin

THE following statement made by Leonid Krassin concerning the difficulties of Soviet trade abroad at the time the Soviet Union was deprived of the guiding hand of Lenin, gives an idea, in his own words, of the obstacles that confronted Krassin himself when he was sent first to Paris and then to London as the outposts of the workers' and peasants' government in the uphill struggle for economic reconstruction of the New Russia:

"It is a great misfortune for all of us that Lenin had to cease active leadership of the state just when our foreign trade was beginning to get going. At the outset, in 1920, Lenin was somewhat skeptical of the possibility of developing foreign trade. Although the blockade of Soviet Russia was nominally lifted by the order of the Allied Supreme Council in 1920, it was still maintained in fact, and Lenin half-jokingly questioned whether it was even possible to use our gold reserve to obtain indispensable goods from abroad. And, as a matter of fact, our first attempts at foreign purchases were met by a "gold blockade," for, at the instigation of their governments, not a single bank or firm would accept our gold in payment for goods. This blockade only came to an end with the conclusion of the trade agreement with Great Britain in March, 1921."

LEONID KRASSIN

Altho in ill health for many months, Krassin carried on in London, applying Lenin's policies in his dealings with British imperialism and being constantly victimized by the enmity and intrigues of the British Foreign Office, headed by the labor-hating Austen Chamberlain.

CALLES IS FIRM FOR ENFORCING OIL, LAND LAWS

Anti-Wall Street Act to Apply in January

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The state department is preparing the way to break off relations with Mexico. The publication of the exchange of notes dealing with the Mexican oil and land laws is itself a move in this direction. Secretary of States Kellogg is assuming an ever sharper tone towards Mexico City. It is in anticipation of January 1 when the first of Mexico's laws affecting the property rights of foreigners will go into effect.

At the same time word from Mexico has it that the congress will support the stand of the Calles government to the limit and will enact no legislation according to the American demands

The Real Stake.

While principals of international law and of fundamental problems of ownership are discussed in Kellogg's notes with much learnedness, the stakes about which the game is being played by the state department can be tangibly put in the following figures showing the value of American interests in Mexico:

|---|---|
| Mining and smelting | $300,000,000 |
| Oil lands and refineries | $478,000,000 |
| Agricultural and timber | $200,000,000 |

Including this the total of American investments in Mexico also embracing railroad, mercantile and bank capital, is estimated at $1,500,000,000.

The best part of these investments is controlled by New York financiers, for whom Kellogg is speaking when he assumes the ultimatum tone towards the Mexican government that his notes signify.

The Mexican land and oil laws were passed in 1917. They provide for the dissolution of alien ownership of productive oil, mineral and agricultural

American Imperialism Shows Its Teeth

Workers Must Support Mexico Against Attacks of Government in Interest of Wall Street

Statement by the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party.

THE government, acting for the imperialist American, capitalist exploiters of Latin America, is preparing for a new attack upon Mexico.

The workers of this country face the danger of being called upon to fight a war for the investments and profits of the American capitalists in Mexico, Central and South America.

Last week the capitalist press flooded the country with propoganda against Mexico because of alleged interference with the imperialist schemes of the American capitalist and government to maintain Central America as the backyard for imperialist adventures and profits of Wall Street. Yesterday Secretary of State Kellogg, under orders from Wall Street's president, Coolidge, threatens Mexico because it dares to assert its right to control the natural resources within its territory.

From threats of withdrawal of recognition of Mexico to armed intervention to protect the investments and profits of the American imperialists is only a step, but a step which will involve the sacrifice of the lives of thousands of American workers. Thus it is becoming clear where the imperialist exploitation and domination is leading this country and the dangers which ley ahead for the workers.

American imperialism—Wall Street—backed by the American government and its marines has for a decade or more been engaged in the business of overthrowing governments opposed to its schemes of exploitation in the West Indies and Central America. Haiti, Santo Domingo, Nicaragua have all felt the weight of the iron fist of American imperialism, when resistance developed against the unchecked exploitation of these countries by the Wall Street bankers. The governments of these countries set up by the will of the people were ruthlessly driven out with the help of American marines and puppet governments, ready to do the will of Wall Street set up in their place and upheld with the support of American bayonets.

The Nicaraguan affair is a striking example of how Wall Street and the Washington government, maintain spheres of exploitation and make of the Latin American countries colonies dominated by American imperialism. Adolfo Diaz, the president elected for Nicaragua thru machinery rigged by Wall Street and the representative of the American government, is a puppet president representing the American capitalists. The effort of the Nicaraguan people to throw out this agent of Wall Street and establish a government of their own which will protect their interests, is met by the bayonets of the marines from the American warships.

WHAT has happened in Nicaragua has happened and will happen in all of the Central and South American countries in which the American imperialists are investing the billions wrung from the exploitation of the American workers. Under one form or another these countries are being brought under the sway of American imperialism, backed by American warships and American marines. The status which the American imperialists have decided upon for Latin America is that of a vast colony whose people must submit to bitter exploitation and swell the profits of the American capitalists. In the work of subjugating Latin America the American capitalists have the unlimited support of the American government and all its military

Mexico stands in the way of this great scheme of imperialist agrandizement. Mexico has shown resistance to the American imperialist and their Washington government. It has declared that the resources of that country belong to the Mexican people and not to the Wall Street bankers. It has adopted provisions in its constitution which seek to return to the Mexican people the natural resources which previous Mexican governments, amenable to the influence of the American imperialists have turned over to these freebooters.

It is because Mexico insists upon enforcing these provisions of its constitution and laws that Secretary of State Kellogg is threatening the Mexican government. Kellogg, who issued a warning intended for Mexico that it must not interfere in Nicaragua in support of the effort of the people of Nicaragua to gain control of their own government, brazenly interferes in Mexico to compel Mexico to revise its laws to suit the American imperialist exploiters of Mexico.

Kellogg declares in his note against the effort of the Mexican government to enforce the provisions of the constitution of Mexico:

"It strikes at the very root of the system of property rights which lies at the basis of all civilized society."

HERE we have the same reason given for American imperialist intervention in Mexico that Kellogg has given for the refusal to recognize the Soviet Union—the property rights of the capitalists are endangered.

It is to protect these property rights of the American capitalists that the American workers will be called upon to fight, to give their lives, to sacrifice upon the bloody battlefields if American imperialism goes its way unchecked by the power of the workers.

Mexico, because of its resistance to American imperialism, is today the rallying point for the struggle of all Latin America in the fight against American imperialist domination. The countries of Central and South America see ahead of them the same fate which has befallen Haiti, Santo Domingo and Nicaragua unless they unite in the struggle against American imperialism.

The American workers must ally themselves with the peoples of these countries in the fight against American imperialism and its Washington government. They must show the people of Mexico and Latin America that they have an ally in the United States in the fight against imperialist subjugation. They must show now that the American workers will not pay in blood and suffering to make Latin America an American colony. They must unite with the Latin American people to fight the exploiters who wrung profits from their labor and use these profits of the labor of the American workers for imperialist exploitation of Latin America.

HANDS OFF MEXICO MUST BE THE SLOGAN OF AMERICAN LABOR.

These slogans must be raised in the entire American labor movement now if American labor is not to have a blood bath in a fight for "vested rights" of the American imperialists to exploit Latin America and backed by the organized force of American labor.

LEONID KRASSIN, SOVIET LEADER, DIES IN LONDON

Ambassador to Britain Succumbs to Illness

one of the leaders of the new school of diplomacy that came into existence with the revolution of the Russian workers and peasants and that was created by Lenin.

Chicherin, Rakowsky, Krassin, these three names were pronounced in all capitalist chancelleries with misgiving. The plain-speaking foreign policy of the Soviet state was put into practice in London by Krassin who was hated and feared by the lobby-hating officials of the British Foreign Office. As ambassador to the Court of St. James, Krassin's conduct was marked by the firm conviction of a member of a revolutionary state whose faith in the power of the great liberated Russian masses more than overcame the obstacles placed in his path by the astounding diplomats of British imperialism.

But his actions were also tempered by the realization of the needs of peaceful reconstruction. Firm in all questions of principle, standing always on the solid ground of the revolutionary future of the workers and peasants of Russia, Lenin put the initiative of foreign capital with the skillful system of strategy that was Lenin's heritage to proletarian state leaders.

Concessions to be made. His innate reasonableness was the wonder and amazement of the French bourgeoisie when first he went to Paris to take over the quarters of the old czarist embassy. The British gentlemen of diplomacy were likewise disappointed to find a representative of the Russian workers able to meet their pretensions of culture with an intelligence far surpassing their own.

Victimized by Tories.

Since he exchanged places with Christian Rakowsky, Krassin went to Paris while Krassin came to London, he has been constantly beset by Chamberlain and his aids who charged the Soviet Union with "subversive propaganda" in England. The great working-class fermentation that has been going on in England and the set-back to that British gentleman has received in the far east, caused the venom of the British Foreign Office to be unloaded on the Russian embassy in London. The short-sighted and rabid tories blamed all their troubles on the great Krassin who was going about the business of looking after the economic interests of the Soviet Union in the imperial capital.

Leonid Krassin was born in the Ural region of Russia in 1870. His father was a conductor and he was educated at the university. He graduated as a technical engineer. He joined the Social Democratic Party of Russia in 1894 and was a follower of Lenin when the Bolshevik split from the Mensheviks in 1903. In 1905 he was a delegate to the congress held in London. He played an important part in the revolution of 1917 and accompanied Trotsky to Brest-Litovsk during the peace negotiations. He was food commissar for the Red Army during the days of the counter-revolution and later became commissar of foreign trade. He was a member of the Central Committee of the Union of Soviet Republics. During 1925 he was Soviet ambassador to France. Early in 1926 he was transferred to London.

CALLES IS FIRM FOR ENFORCING OIL, LAND LAWS

lands and for these lands to pass into the hands of Mexican nationals by means of compensation determined by laws.

Ever since their passage, they have been a source of constant protest by the United States government.

Recognition was entirely withdrawn by the United States for some years before it was resumed with the Obregon government in 1923. The Calles administration has been preparing to administer the laws for the past two years and the decrees are to go into effect on Jan. 1. The Kellogg notes now made public forecast the withdrawal of recognition again at that time.

Kellogg Threat.

Briefly, the Kellogg notes warn the Mexican government that a crisis will exist between the two countries if the latter follows out the intention of forcing Americans to give up the property they acquired prior to 1917 under the retroactive clauses of the legislation. The laws provide that alien holders of titles shall be required to sell them to Mexicans over a period of ten years at which time no aliens are to hold land in Mexico.

The correspondence between the two countries on this question has extended over a period of two years. The state department has made varied and sundry threats during that time and the Calles government has stood firm in its position.

All Latin America Involved.

But the controversy over the land laws is only one of the constituting factors to the dispute between the two countries. United States marines are in control of Nicaragua. The American fleet is cruising in Central American waters with a show of force. Mexican Foreign Minister Saenz declared from Mexico City that his country will not recognize the puppet Diaz regime just given recognition by Kellogg. The United States is charging that Mexico is giving aid to the Nicaraguan liberals who are in rebellion against the Wall Street tool, Diaz.

So that the question assumes a much larger importance due to these complications. It really embraces the whole question of the imperialist attitude of the United States, not only to Mexico, but to all of Latin America. There are indications to the southward that sentiment is piling up thruout the Latin republics against the domination of the United States in Central America and the Caribbean.

Mexico's Answer.

The wordy and hihi toned protestations of Secretary Kellogg to Mexico, in which he speaks of certain violations of international law involved in the land laws is answered by Foreign Minister Saenz with a curt reply: "My government on its part will expect your excellency to indicate the concrete cases in which recognized principles of international law may have been violated or may be violated in disregard of legitimate interests of United States citizens, since, in such cases, it will be disposed to repair such violations."

The position of the Mexican government is that the United States has no cause to make complaint, according to the best practices of international law, until the violations charged by Kellogg have actually taken place. The laws will not be operative until January, at which time Mexico anticipates that the United States will interest itself in the status of its nationals and their property. Until that time, Calles thinks Kellogg should hold his peace.

Dollar Diplomacy.

But Kellogg is playing the dollar diplomatic game. It is his intention, if possible, to bring enough pressure to bear before the laws become operative, to have the teeth taken out of them so that Wall Street will not suffer in January. Failing this, no secret is made of the fact that the government will resort to stern measures at that time to try to force Mexico to abandon its plan of turning over alien wealth to Mexicans.

What forms the dispute will take when the crisis comes during January cannot be predicted. But with the Calles administration unshakable in its determination to enforce Mexico's laws and Kellogg assuming a more belligerent attitude, serious consequences can easily result.

LAUNCH DRIVE FOR FOREIGN-BORN WORKERS

National Organization Opens Headquarters

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—In order to organize public sentiment thruout the country and focus attention upon the various congressional investigations proposed to register, fingerprint, tax or deport foreign-born residents of the United States, the National Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers has opened headquarters at 41 Union Square, New York, under the direction of Nina Samorodin, the national secretary-treasurer.

Three years ago, when the first of the series of bills calling for registration of the foreign-born was introduced in Washington, groups in a number of the large cities banded together in the interest of foreign-born workers to oppose these bills. Some of these organizations have continued to exist inactively and they are now being amalgamated to form the nucleus of a nation-wide organization to begin active work against all such proposed legislation.

Death to President.

The president of the national council is Joseph Dean of the Motion Picture Operators' union; vice-presidents, Max Orlowsky of the local council in Chicago, and P. Pascal Cosgrove of the Shoe Workers' Protective union. Henry T. Hunt is legal adviser and the executive committee consists of Timothy Healy, international president of the Firemen and Oilers' union; Max S. Hayes of the typographical union; James Maurer, president Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor; William Cohen, international president of the upholsterers' union, Fred Suiter, international secretary quarry workers' union, Percy Thomas of the commercial telegraphers' union; J. L. Studder of the United Mine Workers; M. Tillman of the upholsterers' union, Carl Appel of the Boston council, Rebecca Grecht of the New York council; A. C. Boorman of the United Mine Workers, John Brahtin of the Cleveland council, J. B. Brodie of the United Mine Workers, Cooperative; August Burkhardt of the Amalgamated Food Workers, R. G. Horacek of the western Pennsylvania council; J. J. Zwandowsky of the Polish Roman Catholic union; Max Pede of the Y. M. Haven council; John Lesesky of the Comelia Polke Region council; Anna Levchk of the Connecticut Conference council; Morris Sugar of the Detroit council; Paul J. Zorelich of the Holy Heart Jesus N. 194, N. H. Z.

Immediate Danger.

In announcing the plans of the newly-created National Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers, Miss Nina Samorodin, secretary-treasurer, said:

"In view of the fact that the Holiday bill, H. R. 12444, has already been passed by the house and is to be taken up by the senate at the next session, we feel that there is immediate need of bringing this matter of discrimination against the foreign-born directly before the people of the United States.

Threatens Refugees.

"The Holiday bill permits the deportation of any foreign-born resident of the country, whether or not he is a naturalized citizen, if during the past eight years he has served a year's sentence for any cause whatsoever. It also would allow the deportation of any foreign-born citizen if he had knowledge of the illegal entrance of anyone into the United States. The special injustice of this latter clause is also appreciated when we realize that in order to escape persecution and death thousands of political exiles have fled to this country during the last few years from the fascisti of Spain. Of course the constitution guarantees that the United States shall give refuge to political exiles, but the Holiday bill intends to nullify this.

Will Fight Such Bills.

"The Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers intends to fight all such legislation, including the five or six other bills now in congressional committees which would have us fingerprint, register, tax, conscript for industrial service, or deport foreign-born workers at our pleasure—even when they have complied with all our requirements and become naturalized citizens.

Naturalization Bureau.

"In addition to fighting such legislation and giving it the widest possible publicity, we shall establish naturalization bureaus in hundreds of smaller cities thruout the country so that those who are unacquainted with the demands for citizenship may be informed just as soon as they reach this country, and may be protected even before they gain the rights of citizenship."

APOSTACY OF AGUINALDO IS NOW COMPLETE

Organizes Fake Party in Support of Wood

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA, P. I., Nov. 24. — Gen Emilio Aguinaldo, at one time revolutionary leader against the United States for a Philippine Republic, and in fact first president of such a provisional republic, has so far fallen from the first pedestal for which he fought, gun in hand, in the island hills, that he has completed his sellout to U. S. imperialism by forming a political party whose object is support to the Wall Street satrapy represented by Governor-General Wood.

Sold Out Long Ago.

Aguinaldo's fall began many years ago, when long after the occupation of the Philippines by American troops he, after a secret conference with American officials, decided to accept and pledged allegiance to American control of the Islands.

Since that time, Aguinaldo, by reason of his revolutionary past, something of an idol, has been used by various governor-generals as a cat's paw against the Philippine independence movement. When the break between the Philippine legislature and General Wood came three years ago, Aguinaldo supported Wood as against the stand of his countrymen.

Deadlock.

The Philippines legislature, under the leadership of Manuel Quezon and Manuel Roxas, is deadlocked with the office of the Governor-General. This is the organization composed of old fighters for the Philippines who stay with Aguinaldo because he is their hero, the general attempted to create an imperialist bloc. All the Philippine population was not with "Quezon and Quezon against Wood.

"Now, with the secret connivance of the governor-general, Aguinaldo has announced the formation of a new political party, the object of which will be to support General Wood in the legislature.

But Aguinaldo has but a small following. Quezon and his supporters have already won large numbers of Aguinaldo's veterans' organization by the creation of the party is recognized thruout the islands as a dodge maneuvered by Governor-General Wood to create discussion in the ranks of the nationalist movement.

The N. Y. Times Views Situation in China and Whistles for Courage

By J. LOUIS ENODAHL

IMPERIALIST diplomacy is losing much sleep over the situation in China, with the Cantonese armies bringing new sections of the republic almost daily under the standards of the revolution.

The dirt issued by General Chang Kai Shek forces the next move upon the diplomats of Washington, London and Paris.

The New York Times tries to discuss what that move shall be. It indicates that it ought to be very cautious. That is, of course, to be expected of imperialist diplomacy when it is on the defensive. But the Chinese, under the leadership of Canton, will not be fooled by imperialism's soft words that always have a spiked club in reserve.

The moving of the revolutionary capital from Canton to Wuchang isn't considered so bad, by The Times. It admits the political and geographical reasons for the change saying: "Wuchang is the heart of China," but it is rather skeptical about how "the outside world" will accept it. This doesn't seem to be troubling the Chinese. Peking has been a capital city in the north in name only. It remains in the eyes of the imperialist diplomats the symbol of the imperial splendor of China" that passed with the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty 15 years ago. It is in Peking that the reputed "friendly" foreign and their "treaty establishments," for which enslaved Chinese labor has been forced to pay over and over.

It is bitter indeed for the bandit agents of foreign greed to give up all this show of power and move to Wuchang, railroad center, heshiva of rising Chinese industry, where the living and clenched fist of New China hattles its way forward in conjunction to the dead hand of things past becoming its grip forever on progress in Pekin.

Even the diplomats were compelled to forget the stories, as they viewed them, of the Czars in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) and accommodate themselves to workers' and peasants' rule in Red Moscow, capital city of the Soviet Union.

But that does not mean that the imperialists quit their attack on the Chinese National Revolution any more than that they have given up hope that they will be able in time to achieve the crushing of the Workers Republic.

It is to their interests, therefore, to misrepresent before the world, as they are able thru their own press, the actual situation in China.

It is here that The New York Times is at its best. It now raises the question:

"Has the government of Canton the right to move the capital from Pekin? Will it not the same time assume the international obligations of the Pekin government? Will it take over the latter's financial responsibilities?"

Revolutions have a way of assuming rights distasteful to the remnants of the interests of things that have been overthrown. It also has an uncomfortable way of repudiating all connections with the past.

The question then is the right to establish its capital at Wuchang because it has the power to do so. It certainly is not compelled to assume the loans and obligations imposed by gun and bayonet upon the Chinese people. It has no financial responsibilities to world imperialism. The Chinese might indeed demand the return of the loot taken from them. It is not for imperialism to dictate its terms. That time is gone. General Chiang has clearly stated the intention to denounce all existing treaties with the imperialist powers, that extra-territorial privileges will be abolished and that the struggle against imperialism will be continued everywhere, because the Chinese national revolution is part of the world revolution, in the words of the Chinese spokesman at the opening of the Seventh Enlarged Plenum of the executive committee of the Communist International at Moscow, on Monday.

The New York Times is trying to "laugh that off." It says that General Chiang's "pronunciamento need not be taken too seriously, as they are somewhat on a par with our own party convention platform resolutions. They are useful for bona consumption."

The big point is that the Chinese people take the program seriously, whether Wall Street openly professes to or not. They are rallying in support of it. All are being educated to understand it. A revolutionary army, continually growing in strength, has been built in support of it. It is out that old party programs are built for capitalist politicians to ride into office on. The program of the Chinese revolution is similar in this respect: it is built as a unifying instrument for the Chinese masses to go into power.

Whereas the American capitalist party programs are constituted of a flood of words, the Chinese revolutionary program calls for a flood of deeds that moves ever onward engulfing all enemies. No comfort here for the enemies of the people.

The Times whistles another tune on the question of Bolshevik influence in China. It now declares that the Cantonese movement is neither "Red" nor "pro-Bolshevik," stating that:

"As a matter of fact it suited the interests of the Cantonese to use the Russians for a time. Later they gave it the Russian leaders their 'walking papers.'"

It was rather unfortunate for The New York Times that on the same day this editorial appeared, Shou Li Tse, representative of the Kuomintang party of China, was addressing the gathering of the Communist International in Moscow declaring that the Kuomintang is acting unitedly with the Communist Party of China in the struggle for the emancipation of the Chinese people.

With some of the other conclusions of The Times it is easier to agree, especially that, "of all the warring groups in China today the Cantonese have what most nearly approximates a constructive program." The only other groups of any consequence are those headed by Wu Pei Fu and Chang Tso-lin, and they have no program except to play the role of cats-paw for native and alien profiteers. The forces of the former are especially going thru a process of rapid disintegration. One of his most powerful allies, General Yang Sen, has just deserted to the Canton cause, taking with him 50,000 troops in a most important sector.

The Times is wrong again. The Chinese Nationalist Revolution is now commanding the attention of the world. It is the duty of every American worker and farmer to study and understand it, because they may soon be drawn into the very center of the vortex of struggle at any moment.

BLUE-NOSE reformers had better not get too fresh with Chicago politicians. The law must be enforced, but with discretion. This is what we gather from the little speech delivered a few days ago by a federal judge when instructing a grand jury. The judge advised the jurors to be careful and not bring in indictments indiscriminately. Only last week several policemen, one municipal judge and the chief of police's secretary were indicted on charges of violating the dry law. This was a terrible wallop to the democrats so they got busy.

His assistant in turn hired a professional snooper by the name of Williams to assist him. The Rev. It would not be so bad if the snoopers confined their activities to having bubble saloon keepers indicted. But they reached up to the bench as well as behind the bar. Hence the judge's little speech. The moral is that laws are made to be enforced against those who do not make them.

SAYS U. S. COURT WILL KNOCK OUT RADIO DECISION

Tribune Case Cannot Stand, Lesh Asserts

Claims to prior rights in radio wavelengths, made by the Chicago Tribune station WGN, will be knocked out by the federal courts in spite of a decision by an Illinois state court in the Tribune's favor, it is confidently predicted by L. J. Lesh, radio engineer of the Chicago Federation of Labor. Lesh is the man who built WCFL, the labor broadcast station on the municipal pier, and developed the commercial radio telegraph business of the federation to a profitable basis. He has had wide experience in many cities on the engineering side of radio and is deeply read on its legal and social aspects.

Is Federal Power.

"The entire question of radio rights and radio regulation belongs to the federal government," Lesh says. "The Tribune in its suit against the Coyne electrical school station WCBS claimed that the WCBS wave-length interfered with the WGN wave-length and therefore infringed on a property right to the air based on prior use. efficient-service and established goodwill among radio listeners.

A state and not a federal court on Nov. 17 ordered the interfering station to accept a different wave-length, thus seeming to acknowledge the Tribune's property claim.

No Basis for Decision.

"There is nothing whatever in radio law to confirm such alleged ownership. The broadcast licenses are issued for three months only by the federal department of commerce and renewal must be made regularly at their expiration. The licenses are not patents but temporary permits. the certain radio interests have tried persistently to set up vested rights thru them."

The question is vital to the labor station, as it is operating on a wave-length to which a New York station has prior claim. The license was granted automatically by the Department of Commerce after its arbitrary control over radio was severely criticised by a federal decision in the Zenith case.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THERE is quite a lively tempest in spiritual circles over the action of the catholic church in annulling the marriage of Consuelo Vanderbilt with the Duke of Marlborough. According to church dogma, the marriage tie is indissoluble, but the church is never at a loss for an excuse for whatever action it sees fit to take in the interests of its political aims or its treasury. So the Vatican discovered that Miss Vanderbilt was hitched to the duke by force and violence and other unlawful means, as a criminal syndicalist law might read.

BECAUSE the ducal marriage was originally celebrated in the church of Bishop Manning, caplscopal clergyman, the latter felt quite peeved over the papal action and expressed his displeasure at length in a radio message. And logic seems to be on the bishop's side. But what has logic to do with spirituality? It took the vatican 31 years to learn that Consuelo's marriage to the duke was the result of coorsion, so for thirty-one years those two were living in sin and it will take a lot of money to purge them. Just a wave of the papal handkerchief and make even the devil take a back seat!

SEVERAL hundred hungry Americans were lined up by the Mills Hotel in Chicago last Thanksgiving evening waiting for a free meal. A semi-religious organization was throwing the party. As usual the camera was on the job. Two of the oldest and hungriest men in the crowd were taken inside before the banquet was on. They were placed in opposition to two pieces of pie and coffee. Then the camera clicked and no doubt you will see the picture in the papers with a story of how such and such organization is contributing joy to the hearts of several hundred hungry persons.

THE hungry men looked thru the window at the two whose pictures were taken. "A meal once a year and we may starve the rest of the time," remarked one waiter. "This is a good advertisement for the outfit that is giving the feed," said another. And one wondered how those people managed to get along for the rest of the year. What a fake this business of charity is! As if a piece of pie and a cup of coffee would keep life in a body for 365 days.

THE government is about to prosecute 20 fertilizer firms, we are told. More of the same commodity. The companies are charged with having entered into agreements to fix prices. The government of the capitalists can be depended on not to take any action calculated to injure its own system.

BECAUSE American flags can be produced cheaper in Japan than in the United States, oriental symbols of American patriotism are now sold in our best stores. This is not novel. During the late war shells made in Germany were shot out of British guns and British investors earned a nickel a very time a German cannon roared its cargo of death into the British trenches. Nevertheless, it would be rather amusing to see an organized parade of children, young and old, marching down the street, waving little American flags made in Japan and eloquently cursing the country that produced the flags. This may actually happen if our ruling classes feel that they must have a war with the Mikado.

DEBATE CRISIS IN CAPITALISM, GROWING TIDE OF REVOLUTION, AT MEETING OF WORLD PARTIES

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 26.—"We estimate the actual international situation as a situation between two revolutionary waves," said Nikolai Bukharin in his report on the international situation to the delegates of the Communist parties of the world in attendance at the enlarged executive committee of the Communist International meeting here. Bukharin's speech may be summarized as follows:

SUMMARY OF SPEECH BY BUKHARIN

While the social-democrats assert that the present is actually a period of normal capitalistic development and world peace, we affirm the contrary because such important facts as the existence of the Soviet Union, with a proletarian dictatorship and revolution, and the signs of England's decline, prove the absence of the former basis of capitalism.

Social-Democracy's Apostacy.

On the fundamental question facing the workers' parties, namely, the question of capitalistic stabilization, the social-democrats are worse enemies and traitors to labor than even in 1914. They do everything to consolidate the partial capitalist stabilization, defending the world capitalist system, being against the U. S. S. R., against the Chinese revolution, against the miners' strike, advocating on the one hand the league of nations as an allieed instrument of peace, and on the other hand cancealing the fact that the revolutionary movement of struggle and strikes as well as the socialistic construction of the U. S. S. R. and the activity of the Comintern are the best guarantee of true world peace. Thus they play a direct counter-revolutionary role on all occasions when capitalism is in a difficult position.

Comrade Bukharin further analyzed the role of the Communist parties, which varies in different countries. The U. S. S. R. in the constructive work of building socialism, the main task in China is to defeat imperialism. The Comintern considers the possible non-capitalist development of China and believes that a united China and the union of China with the U. S. S. R. and the western European proletariat will modify the correlation of world forces.

American Party Tasks.

The American Communist Party is faced with rather moderate tasks, to conquer the masses and to create a basis for their struggle. A different and more favorable situation exists in western Europe where the Communist parties are conquering the masses and are leading the class struggle. There the parties are serious obstacles in capitalist stabilization which causes over growing sharp conflicts of interest. Political influence of the Communist parties among the masses is growing. The confidence of the masses in the Communist parties is exemplified by the campaign against the compensation of the princes in Germany.

Britain Most Rapid.

As regards the pace of the growth of influence, the most rapid success has been reached by the British Communist Party which, tho numerically still small, developed rapidly because it still paid attention to the work within the trade unions.

In Germany, capital is attacking la-

MINERS' UNION OFFICIALS USE POLICE IN PA.

Cops Sent to Break Up Howat Meeting

By A. JAKIRA

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Nov. 26.—Police under influence of district and sub-district officials of the miners' union of District Five stopped a mass meeting arranged for Alex Howat by the Brophy For President committee at Ukrainian Hall, New Kensington on Wednesday.

Police officers openly boasted that the police acted on orders from union officials who threatened a riot if the meeting was allowed to go on. Several hundred pickets gathered from [illegible] parts of [illegible] to hear the veteran of the miners' union were bitterly aroused against this action of their district officials and decided to hold the meeting despite the police. More than 300 proceeded to Harmarville, a mining town eight miles away, and packed Miners' Hall where Howat was given a most enthusiastic reception.

Cheer Brophy.

Mention of Brophy's name caused prolonged cheers. For three hours Howat, in stirring speech, explained why Lewis must go and Brophy be elected if the union is to be saved.

Two weeks ago the district officials thru trickery succeeded in taking possession of a hall in New Kensington previously rented by the Brophy For President committee but were compelled the rank and file to grant Powers flapgood the floor for nearly two hours.

Big Meet Tuesday.

On Tuesday Nov. 23, Howat addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting of miners in Turner Hell, Charleroi. Miners came from all over the district, mostly on special trucks, traveling in some cases for more than two hours to greet Howat.

Here also the district officials tried to stop the meeting but were unable to induce the town burgess to do it.

Theaten Men.

Attempts were also made to intimidate the men from coming to Howat's meetings under threat of being discharged from the job. But despite all this Turner Hall was crowded to the doors, the crowds enthusiastically cheering the speaker and pledging support to Brophy.

Why not a small bundle of The DAILY WORKER sent to you regularly to take to your trade union meeting?

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Nov. 26.—C. M. Murphy was out today as secretary of the Bloomington Chamber of Commerce, because of his "pro-labor" inclinations.

Murphy resigned last night under fire of members who resented his invitation, extended in the name of the organization, to the Federation of Labor convention at Evansville, to hold the next state convention of the Labor Federation in this city.

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 26.—Moscow was shocked by news from London telling of the passing of Leonid Krassin, Soviet ambassador to Great Britain.

The revolutionary leader who had done so much for economic construction in the Soviet Union and had so creditably carried on its policies abroad, was highly revered by the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union.

Official announcement was made that Krassin's body would be brought to Moscow to lie in state before burial and that fourteen days of mourning would be set aside by the All-Russian Soviet.

DETROIT STILL IN FIRST PLACE; BUFFALO FORGING AHEAD IN THE RACE TO KEEP THE DAILY WORKER

IN the race to raise $25,000 by Tuesday, Detroit is still holding first place with 86.02 per cent of its quota already raised. Buffalo is making tremendous strides to gain the lead, having increased her quota by 18 per cent in ten days. THERE ARE NO GOLD NINES IN EITHER DETROIT OR BUFFALO. This remarkable showing is the result, not of any fortuitous set of circumstances, but it is solely the result of determined and systematic follow-up work from city to city and from comrade to comrade. The Detroit and Buffalo comrades have taken the task of keeping The DAILY WORKER seriously. They do not just talk about it. They go out and tackle all comrades and sympathizers in a persistent, organized manner and THEY DELIVER THE GOODS.

For Monday morning we ordered a carload of newsprint paper. Unless we pay for this paper The DAILY WORKER cannot be issued. The paper company demands immediate payment of $2,000 for this consignment. This is the reason we are emphasizing the necessity of greater efforts at this time. If two districts can make such a splendid record there is no reason why other districts cannot equal it. Every comrade, every supporter of The DAILY WORKER must take immediate action to keep our paper—call in all contribution books, visit comrades and sympathizers personally. FOLLOW-UP—that's the secret. That's the way to keep The DAILY WORKER.

John Dos Passos Reviews How the Sacco-Vanzetti Frame-up Started

(The following article is one of a series written by John Dos Passos, well-known writer who is author of "Three Soldiers," "Manhattan Transfer" and other works. He has finished a new pamphlet on the Sacco and Vanzetti case by using its history up to date. The stories are released thru the Federated Press.)

Sacco and Vanzetti have been six and a half years in jail. For six and a half years they have been caught in the deadlock between the state of Massachusetts and the sense of justice of a large part of mankind. So much has been said and written about this case that it has grown as important in world history as the Mooney case, the Affaire Dreyfus in France, and the Affaire Calas in Voltaire's

MEXICAN DEPUTY EXPOSES WEAPON OF WALL STREET

Calls for Unity of Latin America

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 26.— Antonio Diaz Soto y Gama, agrarian leader and supporter of the Calles administration, said in a speech before the Mexican chamber of deputies that the United States was preparing a financial blokade to be put into effect in January when the Mexican oil and land laws become operative.

This action will be by way of supplementing the break in relations threatened by the state department at Washington, he predicted.

"The United States idea of relations with Mexico is that all rights pertain to the United States and all obligations pertain to Mexico," said Soto y Gama. He also took occasion to express the hope that the whole of Central and South America would come to the aid of Mexico in its fight against American imperialism.

Deputies Respond.

There was a general response from the deputies, when, in a dramatic conclusion, Gama called upon them to rise and declare their willingness to die for their country.

The discussion was prompted by the passage of a new bill for an amendment to the constitution for the regulation of labor and included, in addition to attacks upon Wall Street, severe censure of the catholic elements in Mexico who are acting in unison with American capitalists in the present crisis.

Oil Men Act.

Representatives of American oil companies with holdings in Mexico will meet this week to decide what action they will take when the Mexican oil and land laws go into effect on Jan. 1. The larger companies, notably Standard Oil, are relying upon Washington to interfere and prevent the laws from going into effect.

A number of smaller firms, however, fearing that failure to comply with the new laws will mean the forfeiture of their properties have filed for concessions as provided in the legislation.

Must Register.

The laws call for the registration of all alien property prior to Jan. 1. The foreign owner is required to state the value and extent of his holdings and to apply for concessions for a period not exceeding fifty years. After the half century mark has been reached, it is the intent of the laws to see all alien property in the hands of Mexicans. Compensation for the transfer, which will be gradual is provided for.

Standard Oil and several other large companies have decided not to file their applications, and to depend on the power of the United States to force Mexico to render her own laws inoperative. In political circles here, the publication of the exchange of notes between Washington and Mexico on this question is preparation for a break in relations precipitated by the United States in January.

Borah Opposes Kellogg.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Sen. Borah has taken issue with Secretary Kellogg's interpretation of the Mexican land laws and declares himself opposed to the contemplated step of the state department to break off relations with Mexico.

EDITOR PRINTS NEWS OF VICTORY IN CONTEMPT AND IS FINED AGAIN

ST. THOMAS, Virgin Islands, Nov. 26.—For criticising a native policeman and then charging that he had been "railroaded" into a libel sentence by a political enemy on the bench, Rothschild Francis, Negro editor and legislator of the Virgin Islands, is now serving 30 days in jail and must pay $100 fine.

Francis was sentenced to 30 days and $100 fine for criminal libel on January 10, 1925, by George Washington Williams, district judge of the Islands. On March 16, 1926, he was found guilty of contempt of court because of an editorial in his weekly, "The Emancipator," and again sentenced to 30 days and $100 fine.

Both decisions were carried to the Philadelphia Court of Appeals by the American Civil Liberties Union.

The Court of Appeals on February 28, 1926, sustained the contempt sentence and reversed the libel sentence. The U. S. Supreme Court refused to review the contempt case.

Francis has appealed a second contempt of court sentence based on his publishing in "The Emancipator" the Civil Liberties Union's account of the first appeal verdict.

Kuusinen Reports.

Kuusinen of Finland, making his ... ...second part of the report on the international situation, and the tasks of the Comintern, pointed to the white terror raging around the U. S. S. R. In comparison with the pre-war time, the counter-revolutionary nature of the capitalist regime is coming ever more into the foreground. Violence is becoming systematic in all capitalist countries. The torrents passing from illegal into legal forms. But, in spite of all, it become daily clearer that state violence is no longer sufficient to keep up the supremacy of the bourgeoisie.

Therefore, the latter seeks allies in the peasantry and petty-bourgeoisie, whereof fascism is a typical example. In all countries except Italy, the bourgeoisie seeks the support also of the former social-democracy, which is much more dangerous than sheer force. The actual machinery of the counter-revolution consists in the organization of violence plus the white terror of the social-democracy, plus most countries. "Our task is to promote the revolutionary process, to the reformism which is still strong in it, to the revolutionary experience, into the workers' consciousness, and thus to raise the revolutionary level."

Labor Delegations.

The labor delegation to the U. S. S. R. received an object lesson in the possibility of socialist construction. The most important task is to explain this to the workers to counteract the social-democratic lies. To achieve the fundamental task of freeing the masses from the second international it is necessary to have organizations among the social-democratic and non-partisan masses. Among these there are many revolutionary and semi-revolutionary elements who are ...ready to support openly the Communist Party. "Our task is to demolish the wall separating our masses and the social-democratic masses and to ...ntermine with the social-democratic workers, but not with the leaders."

In the Trade Unions.

The defect in the work of our Communist parties within the trade unions consists in certain mixing up of the party and the trade unions. The latter must not be turned into a party. The energy of trade union officials will be needed in the economic struggles of the immediate future. The movement towards unity must be carried on further in a practical way for which special trade union strategy is necessary. We are not against rationalization such as but against capitalist rationalization at the cost of the workers' standard of living. The Communists must fight for the rights of the factory committees.

Preserve Identity.

Our work in the co-operative movement and among women and youth must be improved. More attention must be paid to this while pursuing more energetically our tactics in united front committees. Our Communist identity must be preserved. The Comintern methods of struggle against the white terror are somewhat superannuated in spite of the existence of such individual heroism. The task of the Communists is to mobilise the masses against fascism and the white terror, using the tactics of partial demands. An example is the money collections in Italy for the British miners. The campaign of the German Communist Party against the compensation of the princes was above reproach and can serve as a good example to other sections.

Reviewing the position and the activities of the Communist parties in various countries, Comrade Kuusinen points out: the growing influence of the German party on the masses, the party energy and initiative, the big fighting experience, and the Bolshevization. The Czechoslovakian Communist Party has grown into a real mass party, the influence of the French Communist Party has also increased, but the party has not enough fighting experience. It must energetically utilize the strike movements. The Italian Communist Party is passing through a hard school of struggle. It is actually the second strongest party in Italy after the fascists.

British Successes.

Comrade Kuusinen pointed to the big successes of the British Communist Party, especially in the miners' strike; declared that the trade union work of the Swedish and Norwegian Communist parties has been somewhat slow.

Utilize All Fields.

Referring to the illegal Communist parties, Comrade Kuusinen pointed out that they must utilize more energetically all legal possibilities and legal forms of organisation. The party leadership must pay more attention to the active connections of the party press and literature with the masses. It must utilize the films for the purpose of propaganda. Speaking on the inner party crises, Kuusinen declared that they are too costly. The Communist Party of the U. S. S. R. gives an example of what a Communist Party must be. "After this example we ought to advance."

In concluding, Comrade Kuusinen recommended and stressed Lenin's teaching of the movement of the masses and mass work. The official decisions must be not only adopted but carried in fulfillment. The results must be controlled and checked.

The first speaker opened the debate which followed Bukharin's and Kuusinen's reports on the international situation. Treint, representing the French Party, pointed out that everybody recognises the development of an antagonism between the European and the capitalists as well as between the U. S. A. and capitalist Europe, especially Britain. He declared that the question is which of these two processes is developing more rapidly. Either there will be revolutions in Europe in the very near future resulting in a coalition of all the capitalist world against revolution, or there will be a slow revolutionary development of Europe, resulting in an antagonism in between America and an alliance of the Anglo-European imperialists, leading to a new imperialistic war, the alliance of the Anglo-European imperialists constituting a terrible danger to the proletariat of the U. S. S. R. and to colonial and semi-colonial peoples.

To understand this danger is to play the game of the social-democrats, who represent the projects as such an alliance as a move towards peace, the Leag ue of Nations veiling the European imperialist policy under pacifist phrases, and must be ruthlessly unmasked and fought by all Communists. The project of an alliance of the big European capitalists must be opposed by the union of the U. S. S. R., the Chinese revolution, and the European and American labor movements.

Some Wrong Theories.

The next speaker, Comrade Pepper, stressing the growth of conflicts between Europe and America, pointed out the existence of several wrong theories on the relations between Europe and America. Trotsky's theory that Europe's economy is only a part of America's economy is erroneous because it considers only America's world hegemony, not perceiving the resistance offered by Europe. Radek's theory of Anglo-American co-operation with Anglo-American capitalism as an indigral entity is also incorrect because it underestimates the conflicting interests of the imperialist states. Treint is wrong in cherishing illusions. After Geneva's failure to create a European anti-American bloc. Treint spoke of the growing influence of the League of Nations and the unification tendancies in Europe after Thoiry. He overlooked the indisputable fact of Franco-German and Anglo-Italian blocs within the European bloc. He drew erroneous conclusions of the possibility of a Pan-European bloc not only political but also economic.

Tekse Issue.

Treint's viewpoint that the actual situation differs entirely from the elimination report, is also adopted when he comes to a revision of Leninism. The main source of mistaken theories is the fact that the phenomena are only partially considered. The efforts of imperialism towards stabilisation are studied ab-tractly, independently of the practical forms of such efforts, which are the only decisive shots in the struggle against imperialist conflicting interests.

Comrade Pepper declares that a United States of capitalist Europe can exist only temporarily in a period between inner-European wars Trotzky's and Zinoviev's theories disseminate pacifist illusions among the masses of labor, therefore they are dangerous. The realization of these theories would correspond in the bourgeois "pacifist ideal."

Intensive Exploitation.

Comrade Jaklen, representative of the Czecho-Slovakian Communist Parties, pointed out that recently there began a crisis in the partial stabilization, Czech industry lost markets and contracts, resulting in a crisis of the main industries. The futile attempts of the bourgeois rationalization are resulting in a more intensive exploitation of labor, a heavier tax burden pressing upon the poorest classes. The Czech Communist Party has grown as a mass party, is numerically quite powerful, its influence has increased. The United Front tactics were successful.

Movement in East.

Comrade Sen Katayama, of the Japanese Communist Party, pointed out the unprecedented amplitude of the revolutionary movement in the East, which was caused and is actually in the period of Chinese revolution. Naturally, the most important revolution is in China, in which different classes and layers are participating, in spite of the very varied class composition of the huge country. The movement towards national liberation pursues the common aspiration for emancipation from foreign imperialism. Therefore, the immense task of the Chinese Communist Party is to secure hegemony of the proletariat and its own leadership over the movement. The struggle of the actual fighting masses of China has responded in nearly all far-Eastern countries, local revolts and insurrections in Java and in the Philippines have exploited colonies tending to become movements national in scope.

Echoes of Revolution.

The revolutionary Pacific situation conference is proof of the strong echoes of the Chinese revolution. Japan has the same revolutionary stabilization of capitalism as western countries. Chinese events show the weakness of the Japanese stabilisation: Japanese capitalism is exploiting China and is most interested in the victories of the Chinese revolution. The labor movement of Japan has recently made big progress. It has created a so-called workers' and farmers' party, uniting two million peasants and workers under our ideological influence. The Japanese Communist Party must lead the masses in the revolutionary struggle and help the Chinese revolution.

Relative Stabilization.

Comrade Mc Pherbiakoff, of the U. S. S. R. stressed the relative nature of the capitalist stabilization in capitalist economy, due mainly to the very unequal process of the restoration of agriculture in various countries. While the level of the world's crops, cereals and cotton, reached in 1925-6 the pre-war level and even surpassed it in the U. S. A. and Canada (130-140 per cent) in Europe it reached only 80 to 90 per cent. At the same time the consumption has been reduced owing to the low working wages, therefore a crisis of overproduction is inevitable in the near future.

The partial stabilization of agricultural production has affected the cost of living of the toiling masses. Increasing unemployment and dissatisfaction of the peasant by stimulate these masses towards a revolutionary struggle. Financial capital is enslaving the farmers. The work of the Communists among the peasants is more necessary and important.

Chinese Contradictions.

Comrade Pepper, of the U. S. S. R. dwelt on the growth of class contradictions and rural economy in the eastern and western countries. An example of this is the American paradox. One of the fundamental tasks of our Communist Parties is to secure the hegemony of the proletariat in the coming workers' movements, making the revolution in rural economy a part of the general revolutionary struggle.

Comrade Gallagher of the British Communist Party, referring to the problem of capitalist rationalization, declared that the Communist Parties must make it clear that they stand for rationalization and technical progress, but only such as is not done at a cost to the working class. The coal conflict in England was due to attempts of the bourgeoisie at purely capitalist rationalization.

Revolutionary Peasants.

Comrade Dombel of Poland declared that the revolutionary peasants' movement is a fundamental and very important phenomenon in the sphere of the modern revolutionary movement. The Communist Parties must realise this and carefully their work among the peasant masses. The social peasants' movement in the East is the first stage of the international socialist revolution. The peasant masses are being revolutionised in all countries, whether agrarian or industrial. Important political shifts of the farmers are noticeable everywhere, even overseas in the countries of Canada and the U. S. A.

Win the Farmers.

Comrade Hoshkovitch of Yugoslavia briefly reviewed the work of the Communist Parties among the peasants in different countries. He stated that the American Workers' Party is carrying on considerable work penetrating the non-partisan farmers' organisations and influencing the former masses. The organs of the party are attentive to the farmers, displaying winning views over their leaders. He pointed out the efforts of the Japanese and Chinese Communist Parties to find an approach to the peasants and influence the latter. The Communist Party endeavors to put into Lenin's teachings to win the peasant masses to a platform of a world anti-capitalist alliance of the workers and peasants.

British Experience.

Comrade Smith dwelt on the experiment of the British Communist Party in their tactics of a united front for the last eighteen months, pointing out the application of new methods. He especially emphasized the intensification of the work of the Communist fractions in the trade unions, which, binding the general political slogans to the practical everyday demands of the workers, yielded favorable results. The party is steadily winning the masses.

World Crisis.

Comrade Varga, dwelling on the crisis in world capitalist economy, declared that in spite of the boom in the economies it is impossible to find a way out of the blind alley. The only issue is world revolution. The speaker analyzed the variations in the structure of decaying capitalism. He pointed out three main factors. The U. S. S. R. has made a breach in the structure, greatly influencing the working class, the struggle of the colonial peoples for liberation destroying super-profits and wrecking the alliance of the bourgeoisie with the labor aristocracy based on such super-profits, the waning of the economic hegemony, of the West European countries, depriving the capitalists of their former profits. Capitalism is unable to outlive the disproportion between the buying capacity of the markets, hence the inevitable conflict leading to new wars.

Comrade Kurella (executive of the Comintern), refuting Treint, pointed out that the conflict of interests of the European states is tending to increase, not decrease.

Work in France.

Comrade Semard (France), in analysing the internal situation in France and the work of the Communist Party, recalled a number of successful strikes led by the Communists. He affirmed that the party does not neglect the mass work, which is developing, and the party influence is growing.

Refuta Trosky Theory.

Comrade Birch (America), speaking in the International role of American capitalism, refuted Trotsky's theses concerning the entire dependence of European economy on the American, pointing out that Trotsky loses sight of the resistance offered against America by separate European countries.

Comrade Kolaroff of Bulgaria dwelt on the questions of stabilization of capitalism in the Balkans entirely with the help of foreign capital. The conflicting Balkan interests with the big capitalist countries may cause a new Balken war.

Two Kinds of Rationalization.

Comrade Bell of Canada, Communist Party, speaking on the international position of British capitalism, pointed out that the Anglo-American struggle for industrial markets calls for the necessity of rationalization of the methods of production in both countries. "Our position is for socialistic against capitalist rationalization."

Comrade Bittelman (America), briefly reviewing the tasks of the American Communist Party, pointed out the interference of the new processes in the economic development of America, and declared that the most important tasks is the organizational consolidation of the political influence thus far conquered.

Take Up the Discussion of Immediate Need for the Farmer-Labor Party

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE Minnesota Union Advocate is rightly taken up the discussion of the need for a national farmer-labor party.

This is the reply of the official organ of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor and the St. Paul Trades and Labor Assembly to the poisonous propaganda spread by the capitalist press to the effect that the farmer-labor party in Minnesota had been liquidated following the defeat of Magnus Johnson, candidate for governor, in the recent elections.

The state farmer-labor ticket polled more than a quarter million votes out of the 700,000 total cast, which is no cause for weeping. It is a strong basis on which to build for the future, especially with the debris left by the disappearance of the democratic party practically cleaned away.

Neither can the reported desertion of Senator Hendrik Shipstead, heralded as an ally of the republican "old guard" in congress, have much effect on the growth of the farmer-labor movement, in Minnesota or nationally, which has been steeled against the passing of renegades.

These are the two incidents upon which the crepe hangers of the enemy class have seized in an effort to convince city and land labor over the nation that the farmer-labor movement in the middle northern states has disappeared. Nothing can be further from the truth.

An editorial in the current issue of the Minnesota Union Advocate summarizes the present situation there as follows:

"The dire predictions of the plutocratic press that the farmer-labor party would be wiped out of existence in the recent election did not materialize. While the vote fell considerably, the decline was relatively less than the decline of the republican vote. When the extraordinary and insidious methods employed to belittle and demoralize the farmer-labor movement are considered and the face of the extravagant claims of the republican party boosters, there is much to claim for the farmer-labor movement. The result is by no means final in any other light than one of victory.

"The election demonstrated one point beyond peradventure; that the mass of the farmer-labor supporters are fresh from conviction and cannot be discouraged nor diverted by enemy propaganda or internal treachery. This one point alone is the vital factor pregnant on the future."

It is argued, therefore, and correctly, that there is a strong base on which to build more powerfully of independent political action in Minnesota. This movement will certainly gain in strength thru linking up with similar efforts to unite the workers and farmers against the old parties in other states. Minnesota has been of great assistance in such efforts in the past. It must play the same role again.

The question of how best to proceed is open to discussion. There is much to be said in favor of holding regional conferences as a starter. Representatives of the farmer-labor parties of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington, that have just some thru a strenuous campaign, have much in common, and as the result of common discussions could issue a ringing call to the nation. Or Washington might be the center around which to rally the forces for independent action on the coast, just as Oklahoma, where a farmer-labor party is in the field, could serve the same mission in the south, reaching into Texas and Kansas. The movement shows some promise in western Pennsylvania, western New York and in sections of Ohio and Michigan. In Wisconsin the Berger socialists block the real unity of the workers in the political arena, while in Illinois the labor of Scialdom plays the same obstructionist role. There are some healthy beginnings in New England, while New York City offers another center of struggle. Here are opportunities for sectional gatherings to iron out many difficulties and pave the way for the national conference.

In all of these districts the movement has sufficient vitality to move forward aggressively at the present time.

Within a few days now President Coolidge will again challenge the workers and farmers of the nation with another reactionary message to be submitted to the short session of the present congress. Coolidge's declarations will, in a sense, be the planks with which the republican party intends to fight to retain and strengthen its control of the capitalist government at the 1928 national elections. Already Coolidge has raised the issue of new tax cuts and of balking at entrance into the world court, in the hope that he will thus win favor for his administration in the next congress and at the polls two years hence.

The capitalist class is farsighted. It plans ahead, not only for weeks or months, but for many years.

Labor must do the same. Repeated attacks by the exploiters against the workers and farmers have met with no effective counter-attacks. The American working class is on the defensive.

All the so-called relief conferences, called to protect the interests of the cotton and grain growers, have been dominated by middle class interests — lawyer-politicians, small bankers, great landlords and others who feed off the working farmers.

The decision of the United States supreme court in the Dorchy case is only another step toward completely robbing the workers of their right to strike. The growing and vicious use of the injunction in labor disputes also tends in the same direction.

Labor must strengthen its power economically and politically. In addition to other important efforts, it must rally now in support of the slogan, "A Labor Party in the 1928 Elections!" and assume the offensive against its oppressors.

Tells How the Frame-up Started

day, that most people have forgotten how it started.

On the evening of May 3, 1920, two Italian workmen, Nicola Sacco, an edge trimmer in a shoe factory, and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, a fish peddlar, were arrested in a Brockton streetcar. Radical literature was found on them by the police, notably a draft of an announcement of a meeting of protest called against the illegal deeds in New York of Salsedo and Elia, printers, and against Salsedo's murder.

Two days before, the smashed body of Salsedo had been found on Park Row under the windows of the offices of the department of justice where he had been held without warrant and daily put to the third degree for eight weeks. Whether he jumped out or was pushed out will never be known. In any case the responsibility for his death lies squarely on the department of justice.

When they were arrested, Sacco and Vanzetti were found to have revolvers on them. Vanzetti happened to have some shotgun shells in his pocket. They were expecting a police raid. They had gone to Brockton in a panic to get a car belonging to a man named Boda. With this car they were going to collect all the radical literature in the possession of their friends in the ring of mill towns round Boston to bury it out in the woods somewhere. When they were arrested and cross-examined they were scared to death. They thought they were going to be deported. They had just enough presence of mind left to shield their friends and comrades of the radical groups. They remembered the smashed body of Salsedo.

Deported. The word still has a familiar sound. In the winter of 1920 it was on every one's lips. With the signing of the peace the great flood of hatred let loose on the Germans by press and pulpit swashed back into civil life. The man on the street had got used to hatred. All over the country politicians and flag-wavers who had saved democracy in Washington and in training camps saw a chance to ride to fame and fortune in office.

Who must be hated next? Aliens, naturally; every good patriot must hate aliens. Reds. Every working man who had a hope for a saner organization of society, who had public spirit enough to work for his ideal, was a marked man. If he was an alien he was to be deported. If he was a citizen he was to be framed and jailed.

Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer had got a great scare the year before when some lunatic set off a bomb in front of his house in Washington. Then too he had hopes of a presidential boom in his direction. He and the leaders of various anti-labor detective agencies fabricated the great Red plot. By agents provocateure he tried to stimulate labor groups to commit illegal acts, by floods of publicity he tried to put a scare into the general public. He saw himself the savior of the country from radicalism, socialism and anarchy.

This was just the moment that Sacco and Vanzetti, virtually the last anarchist leaders around Boston as yet undeported, were arrested. The Brockton police picked them up by accident looking for the owners of a car they thought might have been used in a holdup two weeks before.

The steel trap of the law closed on these two men. Six and a half years of worldwide agitation have not yet made it let go.

SMALL HOPE HELD OUT THAT TUNNEL MEN ARE LIVING

(Special to The Daily Worker)

OAKLAND, Nov. 26.—A forlorn hope existed today that the ten men trapped in the Claremont tunnel, 15 miles from here late yesterday, might still be alive.

The percentage against them, however, is tremendous.

"One chance in a million."

Officials of the East Bay municipal utility district, in charge of the tunnel project which was a unit being constructed to carry water here from the Mokelumne river, announced that ratio.

The men had two meager chances of escaping drowning, the officials said. In the event the rush of water compressed the air sufficiently to cause a landslide, the earth may have formed a barricade against the torrent. On the other hand, it was pointed out, the tunnel is irregular in contour and the men may have found a haven in an air pocket.

Meanwhile frantic efforts are being made to reach the men. The flood gates will be opened today in an effort to drain the tunnel.

Ted Chambers, a boatsman, has volunteered to lower himself into the shaft to open the gates.

A steady rain which continued thruout the night was hampering rescue efforts.

After holding a meeting today, 80 workmen employed on the tunnel project in addition of quitting work. Fifteen of the group asked to be paid off and the rest of the group said they would lay down their tools later in the day. They declared the tunnel was unsafe and feared another disaster.

FRIDAY'S SACCO AND VANZETTI MEETING IS UNDER JOINT AUSPICES

The meeting scheduled for Friday night at Ashland Auditorium at which John L. Fitzpatrick and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn are the main speakers is under the auspices of the Chicago Sacco and Vanzetti committee, a joint organization representative of various sections of the local labor movement. In its edition of Thursday, The DAILY WORKER stated the meeting was being staged by International Labor Defense. The meeting is, of course, under the former's auspices, altho I. L. D. was the initiator of the committee and is actively participating in its work.

Use your brains and your pen to aid the workers in the class struggle.

INDIAN MASSES PROTEST STATUS UNDER NEW PLAN

Empire "Equality" Does Not Include Them

LONDON, Nov. 26.—Advices from Calcutta say that Indian national opinion has been deeply stirred by the announcement of the new Colonial Charter giving equal status to the seven dominions and entirely ignoring the question of Indian independence. India will continue to be ruled from the India office in London.

India Not Represented.

The protest, in fact, was begun before the imperial conference met. The Indian nationalists were resentful at the beginning that India was "represented" only by Lord Birkenhead, Secretary of State for India and the Maharaja of Burdwar, a rich landowner entirely under British influence and without any power in Indian affairs.

Indian residents in London are preparing a protest meeting and say that a nation-wide protest is in preparation in their home country.

Ulster Protests.

Another complication has arisen with regard to the Ulster government in Northern Ireland. The new charter recommends to commons the changing of the king's title to include, King of Ireland, thus ignoring the separate existence of the Ulster government. Sir James Craig, prime minister of Northern Ireland is rushing to London with several other state officials to register a protest and fight the passage of the titles bill in parliament.

They are reported to claim that the conference, in making the change envisaged the union of the Irish Free State and Ulster at some future time. They also hinted that possible pressure might be used to force Ulster to join the Free State which she [illegible] in the concessions made by Britain to the colonies at the imperial conference.

Soviet Union Will Aid Colonization Project for Jews

MOSCOW, Nov. 26.—The Soviet Union will aid the Jewish colonization project to establish a Jewish territorial unit, even if other foreign countries do not, Kalinin, president of the Soviet Republic, told the colonization committee.

He also announced the establishment of the Agrokushank, with an initial capital of $750,000 for this purpose. The bank will finance the agriculture and handicraft of these colonists. It is not a state project, but stock is held by the state banks, as well as by private holders.

INDIAN, WHO THUMBMARKED AWAY HIS $550,000 TO WILLING BAPTISTS, JARS COURT BY VIEWS OF WEALTH

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—He didn't know what it was all about, this 75-year-old millionaire Indian, Jackson Barnett, fullblooded Creek, of Oklahoma and Los Angeles, Cal., as they heralded him verbally today on the witness stand in an equity suit involving $550,000.

It is charged that by means of a thumbmark on a document Jackson gave the money to the American Baptist Home Mission Society for the Sequoyah Indian school. Elmer S. Bailey, Jackson's guardian, of Tulsa, Okla., seeks to prove him incompetent.

But Jackson didn't appear interested in all this excitement about money. He said he didn't know how much he was worth or how fast his oil wells near Muskogee, Okla., were gushing for him.

Ask Us, Judge; We know.

"What ren you buy with a million dollars?" Federal Judge John C. Knox asked.

"I dunno," grinned Jackson.

"Have you any idea what a million dollars is?"

"No."

"What do you like to spend money for?"

"To ride on trains."

"Do you like to have people wait on you or like to get it yourself?"

"I like to get it myself," Jackson declared loudly.

"Do you like New York?"

"No, no, no," the elderly Indian shouted.

Jackson revealed in answer to further questioning that he didn't know he was in court, nor that a judge was talking to him.

Before Jackson became a millionaire he "worked for other people."

"Sometimes I got 50 cents or 75 cents a day," he asserted promptly.

"How long have you been married?"

"I dunno."

Jackson said he was married in Missouri and in Coffeyville, Kan. Apparently he meant he had gone thru two marriage ceremonies. His white wife was excused from the courtroom during Jackson's interrogation.

Cow Ponies and Gasoline.

The elderly Indian told of what he did in his home at Los Angeles. He owned a number of cow ponies and loved to ride them. He also rode in one of his automobiles to the doctor every day because he had been a sick man. He slept and ate and had a good time. He wished he was back home.

"Would you rather go to your home in Oklahoma or in California?"

"Both," Jackson answered.

The millionaire Indian said he liked Bacone school and was fond of children.

"Would you like to do something for that school?"

"Yes, when I died."

"You mean let them have money when you die?"

"If I not eat it all up by that time, maybe I give it."

McAdoo Will Again Try for Nomination Meredith Predicts

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—William G. McAdoo, who was defeated for the democratic presidential nomination in 1924, will be the standard-bearer of the democrats in 1928, Edwin T. Meredith, secretary of agriculture under Wilson, predicted in an interview here.

Meredith declared the "progressive" democrats of the west and south will rally behind McAdoo. They will dictate a dry platform, on which Al Smith could not consistently run.

McAdoo's strength in 1928 will be about the same as in 1924 Meredith admitted. When asked if that wouldn't result in a deadlock again he said he hopes not.

The convention won't be held in New York—stronghold of Smith. Of this Meredith was confident. He said it will be held in the west.

LONDON, Nov. 26.—A new record price for a picture sale at a public auction was set up when Sir Joseph Duveen paid $366,945 for Sir Thomas Lawrence's "Pinkie" at the sale of the art treasures of the late Lord Michelham.

Fifteen famous pictures in the Michelham collection brought a total of $2,189,775.

Sir Joseph Duveen also purchased Gainsborough's "Miss Tatton" for $224,670.

Two Boucher panels sold together for $263,250, which was a record price for an English sale.

NEW YORK LEGISLATORS INVESTIGATE CHARGES AGAINST LABOR UNIONS

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Investigation into the charges of C. G. Norman, chairman of the board of governors of the building trades employers' association, that New York labor unions are restricting membership and denying the right of union men from other cities to work on union jobs, is being started by the industrial survey commission of the New York legislature.

Steamfitters, electrical workers, plumbers and carpenters are involved in the charges, it is reported.

It is said that legislation will follow the inquiry should the investigating committee advise it.

Case of Lefkowitz, Radical Teacher, Is Still Booted Around

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—The appeal of the Teachers' Union to the board of education on behalf of Abraham Lefkowitz, who was refused promotion because of alleged radical opinions, has been turned down. The board holds that it is without authority in the matter, as the board of superintendents were empowered by law to take the action they did. The board of education suggests that Lefkowitz, if he still feels aggrieved, should make his appeal to the state commissioner of education.

What further action the Teachers' Union will take in the matter has not yet been announced. The case is one which has excited the attention of radicals and liberals thruout the country, as involving a teacher's right to opinion and freedom of speech.

Friend of Lincoln Dies.

PEORIA, Ill., Nov. 26.—Leslie Robison, mayor of Peoria in 1876 and 1877, who was introduced to the supreme court by Abraham Lincoln, died here today in his ninety-third year. Robison was the oldest settler in Peoria, having resided here since 1860.

PENN. COUNCIL FOR FOREIGN BORN TO MEET

Will Outline Campaign Against Alien Laws

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 26.—The western Pennsylvania Council for the Protection of Foreign Born will hold a very important conference on Sunday, Dec. 12, at 3 p. m. at Walton Hall, 320 Stanwix street, Pittsburgh.

This conference is being called to renew and enlarge the movement against the vicious bills to gag foreign-born workmen. At the last session of congress the forces behind these czarist bills were not successful in their attempt to rush them thru on the quiet.

Council Successful.

It was largely due to the efforts of the National Council for the Protection of Foreign Born, to which the western Pennsylvania council is affiliated and which is one of its most important sections, that a storm of protest was raised thruout the country which resulted in these bills not being pushed at the last session of congress.

Danger Still Exists.

This year, however, there is grave danger that these bills will be passed unless the movement against them is renewed with ever greater vigor. The passage of these bills will mean a great blow not only to the foreign-born workers but to the whole working class movement and to organized labor.

All organizations which have affiliated with the council are urged to see that their delegates attend this conference. A call was also sent out to all local labor and fraternal organizations that are not yet affiliated inviting them to send delegates. It is urged that this call be acted upon favorably and delegates be sent.

Dressed "Fit to Kill", Cleveland Police Raid Criminal Rendezvous

CLEVELAND, Nov. 26 — Armed with riot guns and tear gas bombs and protected with bullet-proof armor, 33 Cleveland detectives early today wiped out what police believed to have been the rendezvous of one of the most vicious crime groups in the state.

The officers descended on the house, located near Berea, after a careful rehearsal. They captured 28 men and 10 women.

Twelve stolen automobiles and thousands of dollars worth of loot was recovered, police said.

Jilted Wife of Rich Magazine Publisher Files Damages Suit

NEW YORK, Nov. 26. — Eugene V. Brewster, millionaire movie magazine publisher, and Corliss Palmer, Georgia beauty, whom he married last month in Ensenada, Mexico, today were defendants in a $200,000 damage suit brought by Mrs. Eleanor V. V. Brewster.

Mrs Brewster charges she still is the legal wife of the publisher, claiming the Mexican divorce and subsequent marriage were part of a conspiracy to injure her marital rights.

Fascists Would Have "Intellectual Snobs" Trained for Dictating

ROME, Nov. 26.—Proposal for the establishment of a school to develop an "educated aristocracy of fascism" has been presented to Premier Mussolini by a group of fascist intellectuals. Their idea is to educate young fascists in the principles of government so they would be able to act as national leaders.

The plan is that Mussolini would select the members of the school. Courses would be taught to conform with the principles of fascism.

Goodyear Stockholders Bring Suit.

AKRON, O., Nov. 26.—The extent to which profits may be stretched in rubber is shown by an internal fight in the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., this city. A trifling amount of $15,000,000 is what a group of stockholders assert, in a suit that has been filed, was "wrongfully removed" from the assets of the company into those who reorganized it in 1921. The suit is brought against Clarence Dillon of Dillon, Read & Co. and John Sherwin, a Cleveland banker.

SEND FOR 650 MOVIE EXTRAS; WHEN THEY ARRIVE ARE TOLD THEY ARE NOT NEEDED; FORCE LASKY TO PAY

By L. L. RINDAL
(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 26.—Six hundred fifty movie stars, mostly riders, were called to Lasky Studio at 8 a. m. to go on location at San Juan Capistrano, Cal. They were to be paid $7.50 per day, and to have several days' work. When they arrived at the studio, 350 were told they were cancelled. The studio had found out that some could be hired at San Juan Capistrano for $5.00.

Rioting—Police.

The men, most of whom came from the Veterans' Bureau, refused to accept the cancellation of their jobs. There was some rioting. Police were called, and about 25 cops arrived.

Colonel Wyman, head of the Central Casting Agency, was sent for. He spoke to the men and offered them a quarter check if they would go home. They refused. Half a check was turned down also. Finally they were taken to the place of work, 75 miles away.

They were told after arriving that there were no uniforms for them, and the company wanted to send them back to Los Angeles before lunch time. The men protested, demanded their lunch and got it. They finally arrived in Los Angeles about 15½ hours after leaving, and got one day's pay for their time.

Overtime Refused.

The next day they demanded pay for their overtime. After being refused, the case went to the labor commissioner. At first the gentleman refused to do anything for them, but later was induced to listen to reason by representatives of the A. F. of L., who are interested in organizing all labor in the studios.

Sailors, Soldiers Replace Extras.

Several hundred sailors from U. S. warships worked in this Roosevelt picture without pay, thus depriving hundreds of extras of jobs. Previously this same company was on location in Texas, and while there had the free use of U. S. troops and aviators. At least one U. S. aviator is said to have been killed while working in this same picture, the "Rough Riders."

AFTER TEN MONTHS OF SILENCE, WHIR OF MILLS IS AT PASSAIC WORSTED AS COMPANY SIGNS UP

By VERA BUCH.
(Worker Correspondent)

On Eighth Street, in Passaic, street of many struggles, there stand side by side two textile mills. There are other factories on this street, here where it crosses the river, but these two great woolen mills dominate, stretching for blocks, reaching backward as far as the eyes can see, their huge red brick walls loom above the street.

For ten months these towering walls have looked down upon the battles of their workers who were on strike. Mass picket lines singing and shouting, picket lines of twelve, tramping steadfastly and silent; furious onslaughts of police, broken heads of workers, screams of women and terror of children. These things the walls have seen for ten months as the textile strikers fought for freedom. Now at last there has come a change.

Life Stirs Now.

The Passaic Worsted Spinning mill has settled its strike. Now from behind its once silent walls comes an unwonted stir of life. The clicking of wheels, the steady whir of machinery is heard where shortly before there was desolation. Machinery unused for ten months, clogged with dust, is being brought to life again.

Union Recognized.

The workers are back with their union recognized. They are cleaning the machinery and setting to work. And as one department after another gets into working order, the boss calls up the union office and asks for the number of workers he needs. Yes, the workers have fought their bitter struggle to the end they desired: the union is recognized. And the whirring machinery now booms forth a triumphant message to the rest of the city: "Keep it up, fellow workers! Keep it up! Fight on, fellow workers! Fight on! You will win! You will win!"

At first sight small and pitiful, as one watch this picket line pass and think of all it stands for, it grips your heart. It is the symbol of a grim and mighty struggle. Behind the walls of Gera Mills the entrenched wealth and power of courts, judges, police, reserves, all that a class in power can command are there. Behind the pickets line are the strength of the awakening workers. The solidarity of the working class, the will to live of the exploited who produce all wealth; the hope of the class that is rising to power, all this is behind that slowmoving picket line of twelve. The picket line must not lose. It cannot, it will not lose. March on, fellow workers! March on! And as you march, listen to the victorious message of the whirring machinery of Passaic Worsted: "Keep it up, fellow workers! Fight on! You will win!"

CARPENTERS VOTE STRIKE ASSESSMENT FOR N. Y. IN SPITE OF HARRY JENSEN

By a Worker Correspondent.

At its regular meeting last Monday night, Carpenters' Local No. 181, with a membership of about 2,000 assessed each member 5 cents apiece to aid the striking cloakmakers in New York City in accordence with a recommendation made by tha Chicago Federation of Labor.

At the same time, the members of tha local refused to raise the salary of their business agent from $75 to $87.50. It is significant that a prominent member of this local is Harry Jensen, president of the Chicago Carpenters' District Council. Jensen and his supporters fought hard against the assessment for the New York strikers and fought just as hard to raise the salary of the union official. Jensen was beaten by a two to one vota on both propositions.

Queen Marie Missed Hot Time in Cleveland

By CARL HACKER.
(Worker Correspondent)

Local Cleveland, International Labor Defense, held a protest meeting in the West Side Turn Hall recently protesting against the proposed visit of the queen of Roumania to this city. Even the the tour of the queen has been abruptly terminated and the announcement made that she would not visit this city, a large number of workers turned out to the meeting to voice their protest against the manner in which the queen has been received by the financial interests since her arrival in this country.

Cooperating with the I. L. D were such organizations as the United Hungarian Societies, the Russian Workers' Club, the Roumanian Workers' Club, the Workers' Communist Party and others, all denouncing the bloody rule of the queen in her land.

Quite contrary to the reports the queen may have been ill the day she was expressed by all speakers that the real reason for the queen making such a hasty exit from the country was the storm of protest which was raised in various parts of the land.

Beginning in Chicago, the queen was met with a demonstration arranged by the I. L. D., which she will no doubt remember for a long time to come. She would have been greeted in a similar fashion in Detroit, but in Cleveland she could have counted on a greater demonstration of anger on her entire tour. Proof of this lies in the fact that for days the papers of this city had been apparently with headlines such as "Loyal Guards to Protect Queen," "1919 Red Rioters Organized to Meet Queen." "Hungarians Indignant Over Queen's Visit."

Under these headlines the newspapers told of mass meetings which were being held in various parts of the city almost nightly, in which the workers were told about the atrocities many of which the government of fascism Roumania is treating the workers.

We regret very much that the queen did not come to this city, as we were prepared to greet her.

Two Opium Joints

Thirty one years ago a child of American wealth was sold to a British duke and the sale was solemnized by a marriage ritual in an episcopalian church.

The girl was a Vanderbilt and the duke was a Marlborough. She was rich but titleless. He was poor but honorable.

Years passed and order ensued. The duke was growing old faster than the Vanderbilt. The latter cast covetous eyes on a person with a name like cough medicine. He was a catholic. She married him after going thru formalities not recognized by the pope, but necessary if one does not care to get pinched.

Hankering for respectability, the Vanderbilt girl wanted to have her history fumigated so she sought papal sanction for her burst with Marlborough, and the pope in a fit of generosity did the right thing by the little Vanderbilt.

Hence the uproar. Episcopalian bishops are howling. What right has the pope to step in on their territory? In Chicago, when one bootlegger invades another's preserves the rattle of machine gun fire is heard and dead bodies litter the highways. But churchmen are a little less deadly in their technique. They simply page the devil and advise him to get his toasting irons ready.

An episcopal clergyman married a Vanderbilt to a Marlborough. What a nerve the pope must have to undo it, on the ground that methods not sanctioned by the declaration of independence were used in the transaction?

It seems to us that the vatican is not acting regularly. Business is business. The pope should have consulted the episcopal church prior to the annullment decision and suggest that whatever commission was drawn out of the proceedings could be shared between the leaders of the two opium joints.

It Was a Nice Meal

If there is nothing wrong with the digestive organs of the Kuhn, Loeb and company banking firm, the gobbling of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad by this aggregation of money sharks for one-fifth the value of the road should prove to be the cheapest meal those boys ever parked in their innards.

What a fatty old squeezing the "little fellows" got? Is it surprising that Mr. Kuhn could afford to patronize art when he can grab a few thousand hardy Americans by the throat, and shake several hundred million dollars out of their jeans?

If Federal Judge Wilkerson approves the steal, the skids will be greased for another killing. New stock will be issued and a new crop of suckers rounded up, only to be cleaned later on when Kuhn Loeb put into his head to either finance a little war or put a couple of divas on his payroll.

It's a great system, fellow workers, for those who have learned to live on the labor of others and who have learned the knack of robbing those who are vainly trying to live without producing. It is perfectly moral and not wicked or unethical like socialism, under which such highwaymen would be stood up against the nearest wall and turned into a bullet warehouse.

Terror in Italy

News dispatches from Italy tell us that thousands of anti fascists have been arrested and jailed since the last fake attempt on Mussolini's life. Others are condemned to live in certain prescribed areas, perhaps because of lack of jail space.

This news shows that the fascist government is sitting on a tack. A stable regime would not have to resort to such extreme measures. In Russia where the government is based on the interests of the workers and peasants there is no necessity for coersion. The masses feel that the government is theirs and that they have the right to influence its policy. In Italy the masses have no such right. They are completely at the mercy of the fascist tyrants and can only express their views at the risk of their lives.

The capitalist press has sung the praises of fascism deliberately and with malice aforethought, as the lawyers say. They have told us that Italy was prospering under black shirt rule. The people were contented. Business was booming.

But the stories of rioting and terrorism do not jibe with the fascist propaganda. Happy and contented people do not revolt.

It is quite evident that the fascist regime is tottering. Mussolini's eloquence is a poor substitute for bread, butter and spaghetti.

Because the name sounded too much like breakfast food, Mary Landon Baker, much advertised matrimonial impossibility, left Jugo-Slavia and a possible husband by the name of Pouritch. Mary is a nice girl and so are the American wage slaves who get up at six in the morning and toil until five or six in the evening so that Mary can have the wherewithall to enjoy herself kidding European bachelors.

Thanksgiving is over and we are duly thankful that the queen of Roumania is gone. But coming to think it over, the worst is yet upon us. There is the Salvation Army Christmas dinner advertising.

SKVIRSKY, OF RUSSIAN INFORMATION BUREAU, EULOGIZES LEONID KRASSIN

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Boris Skvirsky, head of the Russian Information Bureau here, has issued the following statement on the death of Leonid Krassin, at London, Nov. 23:

"Krassin's death will be deeply felt, both personally and in a professional sense, by his associates. He served thru the revolution and was a valuable personality in the Soviet government from the beginning. He filled various high diplomatic posts with honor and distinction, and invariably won the regard and respect of foreign diplomats with whom he came in contact in various negotiations.

"Death has taken a heavy toll of the Soviet leaders who served thru the lean and dangerous years. Krassin, like Djarzhinsky, died after a long period of impaired health. Fortunately, as I recently observed in Moscow, a capable younger generation is springing up, including many young men and women prepared for high administrative and diplomatic posts."

Many Opportunities for Building the Revolutionary Movement

By C. E. RUTHENBERG
General Secretary,
Workers (Communist) Party

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles by Comrade Ruthenberg on the resolutions and discussions of the recent meeting of the central committee of the Workers (Communist) Party.

THE main discussion of the meeting of the central committee of the Workers (Communist) Party held November 10th, 11th and 12th was on the question of the opportunities for developing the revolutionary workers' movement and building the Workers (Communist) Party in the present period of American imperialist domination of the world.

The central committee squarely faced the question whether there was any basis in the existing situation for pessimism in regard to the possibilities of progress in drawing the American workers into a militant class struggle against the capitalists and in the process of that struggle building the revolutionary movement and our party as the leader of that movement.

SOME pessimism has manifested itself in the ranks of our party, reflecting a similar state of mind in the ranks of workers. The question which the central committee set itself to answer was, whether there is an actual basis for this pessimism in the developments of American capitalism and the reactions of the workers to this development.

The answer which the central committee gave to this question in its resolution was an emphatic "No."

In giving this answer it did not hide from itself or from the party the actual conditions which exist. It frankly acknowledged the fact that the organized labor movement in this country has been steadily moving to the right during the last four years and considered the developments of the capitalist system which is the basis of this movement.

American imperialism is today the dominant factor in the capitalist world. American capitalism has enormously strengthened itself thru the favorable position it won as a result of the war. The forces of disintegration and decay which are at work in the capitalist system in the European countries have left American capitalism untouched, except insofar as the general weakness of world capitalism is a potential danger to American capitalism.

While the power of production of European capitalism has been weakened, American capitalism has greatly increased its productive capacity. The enormous profits which the American capitalists made during the period of the war and since have created a reservoir of new capital which it is investing throughout the world thus drawing imperialist profits from every quarter of the globe.

The great profits of American imperialism have enabled the American capitalists to make concessions in the form of higher wages to sections of the working class. The skilled, organized workers have obtained these concessions, giving them a higher standard of life. It is these workers who comprise the bulk of the organized labor movement and who furnish the leadership of the organized labor movement in this country. It is because these skilled, organized workers are sharing to a degree in the imperialist profits of American capitalism that we find a steady movement to the right, toward collaboration with and support of capitalism and away from militant class struggle among them.

The Mass of Proletarian Workers

WHILE thus, in its estimate of the situation, the central committee frankly admitted that a section of the American workers were moving away from the militant class struggle against capitalism, these workers comprise only a small section of the working class. It we accept the estimate of 26,000,000 workers as composing the workers employed in the industries of this country, we have at best approximately 5,000,000 organized workers, and not all of these even have stood firm during a bitter struggle of nearly ten months indicates the unbearable conditions which exist among these workers. There are a thousand Passaics in existance in the United States. There are twenty million workers, receiving wages which give them a bear existence, suppressed, oppressed and exploited under the whip of American capitalists.

It is toward these workers that our party must turn its face. It is these workers to which it must give hope by giving leadership and organization to their struggles. It must do for them what it has done for the workers at Passaic—give them aid in organizing their strength, a program for their fights and leadership in their struggles.

It is these proletarian workers in the great machine industry who will be the backbone of the revolutionary movement. It is among these workers that the party must intrench itself. Today, in the heyday of American imperialism, it can mobilize these workers for action against the capitalist class, develop the spirit of militant class struggle among them, strengthen the revolutionary movement of the workers and in the process build and strengthen the workers (Communist) Party.

No Desertion of the Struggle Among the Organized.

WHILE emphasizing the opportunities for revolutionary work among these unorganized workers in the great machine industries, the central committee emphatically warns against abandoning the work among the organized, skilled workers. Not all of these workers even are sharing in the profits of American imperialism. The demand of the anthracite miners and the six month strike to enforce them, is the movement among the railroad workers for higher wages, show the possibilities in this field of developing fights against the capitalists.

The movement toward the right in the official, organized labor movement must be the signal to the party for more careful, developed program and more persistent work to find the issues upon which these workers can be won away from the class collaboration programs of their official leaders and drawn into the class struggle with the mass of unorganized, unskilled workers.

As the next article in the discussion and resolutions of the central committee will show, in spite of the concessions which the skilled, organized workers have gained from American imperialism, the party has made progress in its work among these workers. Its achievement in this field can be increased by more work. The intensification of the party work among these workers remains a central point in its program.

Forward in the Struggle.

THE conclusion drawn by the central committee after a day and a half of discussion in which the situation in this country was realistically examined from the standpoint of the work of developing the revolutionary movement was, that not only is there no basis for pessimism in regard to the growth of the movement, but that the party stands before opportunities which, if it mobilizes its strength to take full advantage of them, will enable us to make great strides forward in our work.

The task before the party is not to find opportunities for revolutionary work they which we can build the party, but to mobilize the strength of the party to take full advantage of the opportunities.

The central committee has laid down the issues which must guide our work. It has formulated a program of work which, if transformed into life with the strength of the party behind it, will enable us to set ourselves definite aims toward the work of developing a revolutionary movement, and build a more powerful Communist Party, the leader in the revolutionary struggles which are in American imperialism.

District No. 4 Organizer Tells How Daily Worker Campaign Is Conducted

Following is a letter from Comrade Herbert Benjamin, organiser of Dist No. 4, who tells how he is conducting the drive to Keep The DAILY WORKER. The letter will undoubtedly contain suggestions for other districts. The suggestions are valuable for other districts.

Dear Comrade:—I have yours of recent date inquiring as to the manner in which we have conducted The DAILY WORKER campaign, in this district.

In the first place, we have taken literally the decision of the C. E. C. to regard this as a major campaign until its successful conclusion. There can be no question about the justification of this decision.

Make Every Sacrifice.

I have found that the membership is prepared to make every necessary sacrifice in order that we may keep The DAILY WORKER. By visiting the membership and showing them that only by substantial contributions that may in many instances represent a sacrifice, can we successfully conduct the present campaign, our comrades are induced to contribute more liberally than otherwise.

Comrades Inspired.

Many of the comrades who feared that we might lose members by appealing for substantial contributions, have found that on the contrary all are inspired by the evidence of loyalty that has been manifested in the meetings where the collections for The DAILY WORKER have taken place. So much so that the comrades not only are induced to contribute more liberally themselves but are also encouraged in their work of collecting from among friends, fellow-workers and members in their trade union locals.

Just Beginning.

The amount raised in this district thus far represents almost entirely the contributions of party members. But even of these only about 150 have so far contributed. We are therefore just beginning the work of systematic collections among sympathizers. The arrangements of benefit affairs are also are continuing at the same time the collection within the party so that by the end of the campaign every member in the district will have made a contribution representing a real manifestation of determination to Keep The DAILY WORKER, and will have also sold every worker of his acquaintance a certificate.

Regular reports are being sent to the various units in the district showing their standing. To these reports are accompanied by letters directed to the section organizers who are also the chairmen of the local DAILY WORKER campaign committees, analyzing the results of their work to date and indicating what further should be done.

Means Hard Work.

After all the success of the campaign is not dependent upon novel methods or schemes but only upon the hard work of every member of the party individually and collectively.

Hoping this will have answered your question satisfactorily and with best wishes to you in the new work which you have undertaken, I am,

Fraternally yours,
Herbert Benjamin
District Organizer.

P. S. — You may put it down that the caption of the next report of the standing of the districts in the campaign will read: FOLLOW THE LEAD OF THE BUFFALO DISTRICT.

IT CAN BE DONE!

At a meeting of DAILY WORKER agents held in Chicago, a number of interesting and profitable experiences were given ex for instance the following:

Shop Nucleus 8 of Section 3 has raised $118.00 already in the Keep The DAILY WORKER campaign. This unit has only 36 members which means that each member has raised over three dollars on the average. How many units of the party can equal this splendid record?

$16 PER MEMBER.

Shop Nucleus 5 of Section 4 has only six members. They are all needle trades workers and they have succeeded in raising $98.00 which means more than sixteen dollars per member. In addition they report that sympathizers have not only contributed to Keep The DAILY WORKER but that thru the propaganda of the comrades they have been inspired to read the paper itself and subscribe for it. One sympathizer who refused to give his name contributed twenty-five dollars for the support of the paper. WHY NOT FOLLOW THE EXAMPLE OF SHOP NUCLEUS 5?

$30 PER MEMBER.

Shop Nucleus 14 of Section 4 with thirteen members has raised $390 and has donated over $635.00 from other sources. This means that this active unit has raised almost thirty dollars per member in addition to the donations the comrades have made themselves. What do you think about this record?

The Greek comrades of Chicago are running an affair for the benefit of both The DAILY WORKER and The EMPROS. This schema can be tried with other foreign language papers.

Have you ever tried a Bunco Party for the benefit of The DAILY WORKER? Watch this column for particulars.

Workers Invited to Dance of Detroit Y. W. Sport Alliance

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 26. — All workers are invited to the dance of the Young Workers' Sport Alliance to be given Saturday evening, 8 o'clock, Nov. 27, at Lansdorm Temple, Leland and Moran

Music will be furnished by the Snappy Society Syncopators. This will be a pay affair and a good time is assured.

PIONEERS ENTERTAIN STRIKING BOX MAKERS

NEW YORK, Nov. 26. — Twelve hundred striking paper box makers of New York City at a mass meeting in Webster Hall were very enthusiastic about the play "Strike" which was staged by the Young Pioneers.

One of the Pioneers gave a talk about the Pioneer League pointing out the necessity for working class children becoming members of the Pioneer league. He was very well applauded, and it is hoped that the paper box makers will send their children and also influence their friends and fellow strikers' children to join the Pioneers.

Will Dance for Our Benefit

GLASPORT, Pa. — The Finnish Workingmen's Association will give a dance on the evening of Saturday, Nov. 27, for the benefit of The DAILY WORKER. Several out of town organizations are expected to be present and preparations are under way for a big time at Finnish Hall, on Vermont Ave., on that night.

The matter was handled as Dad ordered; the lawyer's clerk went to court, and came back and reported that the prisoners had appeared, but Chaim Menzies had not been among them. His case had been taken over by the Federal authorities, because it had been discovered that he was born in Russian Poland, and it was proposed to cancel his naturalization papers and deport him. Chaim had been transferred to the county jail, another condemned structure, fully as dingy and filthy as the city jail. There was no longer anything you could do about it, because in these deportation cases the courts were refusing to intervene, holding them to be administrative matters. The Democratic attorney-general had failed in his effort to get the nomination for president by his campaign against the reds, but the machinery he had set going was still grinding out misery for guilty and innocent alike.

So here was some real trouble for Bunny! Over at the Menzies' home was Rachel, white-faced and pacing the floor, and Mamma Menzies wailing and tearing her clothing. It was impossible even to get word to poor Chaim—he was "incommunicado"; indeed, he might already have been put onto a train for the East. After that there would be no chance for him whatever—he would be dumped onto a steamer for Dantzig, and there turned over to the Polish "white terror."

Bunny insisted that something must be tried, and so Mr. Dolliver called in a couple of still more expensive lawyers—at Dad's expense—and they debated habeas corpuses and injunctions and other mystical formulas, and made out a lot of papers and tried this court and that, all in vain. Meantime, in response to frantic commands from his son, Dad broke the speed-laws from Paradise; and when he arrived, there were Bunny and his Jewish girl-friend waiting on his front porch. They dragged him into his den and made him listen to a disquisition on the difference between the right and left wings of the Socialist movement, with a complete description of the activities of a literature agent of the Socialist party. In the middle of it Rachel burst into tears and sank upon the sofa; and Dad, who was really no more able to stand a woman weeping than was Bunny, went over and patted her on the shoulder, and said, "There, there, little girl, never mind! I'll get him out, even if I have to send a man to New York!"

So Dad stepped out and sped away in his car. That was about lunch-time—and a little before three o'clock of that same day, who should emerge from a taxi-cab in front of the Menzies' tenement but Chaim himself, dirty and unshaven, but smiling and serene, and ready to continue his labors for his "cloding workers!" He hadn't the least idea how it had happened; the keepers of the county jail had volunteered no information as they turned him loose, and Chaim had not stopped for questions. He never did know, and neither did his daughter, for what Dad told Bunny was strictly confidential, a bit of oil men's secret lore.

"What did I do?" I called in an oil friend of ours, Ben Skutt."

"Ben Skutt!" Bunny had not thought of their "lease hound" for years.

"Yes, Ben is high up in this defense business, and he did it for me."

"What did you tell him?"

"Tell him? I told him one grand."

"One what?"

"That's bootlegger's slang. I gave him five hundred dollars, and said, 'Ben, go and see the man that's got that old kike in jail and tell him to turn him loose, and then come back to me and I'll give you another five hundred.'"

"My God!" said Bunny.

And Dad took a couple of puffs at his big cigar. "Now you see why we oil men have to be in politics!"

SPORTS

BUSINESS is business—meaning college football business. For the last few weeks this Hog insisted that our modern brain amporiums spent more money to educate feet than heads. Now the Yale Athletic Association comes along with soma data to show why.

They report $800,000 as the estimated income of the football season just concluded Saturday with the Harvard game. The figure is based upon an appropriation of the gate receipts as follows:

With increasing profits football may become so important that all learning will be bent to this purpose. Enough mathematics will be taught to call signals; engineering will come handy to lay out football stadiums and measure yardage gained; physics to teach the laws of forward passing (here's where the Einstein theory will come handy); music and poetry will train cheer leaders; economics will be taught to the boys in the ticket office and finance courses will be given to the school board.

I WONDER how many fight Bugs know that Negroes were the pioneers of the noble art of knocking noses? The first heavyweight champ was Tom Molineaux, a slave of Richmond, Va. He won a $100,000 purse for his master, Algernon Molineaux—and that much money bought more than one steak in those days. In fact, with all that money you could even get onions with the steak then. Molineaux lost his title to Tom Cribb in England in 1810, after knocking all "Superior whites" loose from their necks in America.

Since then there have followed a succession of brilliant Negro boxers: Peter Jackson, Joe Gans, Joe Walcott, Sam Langford, Jack Johnson and a host of others who could also hit so hard they could knock the smile off a cigar store Indian.

JUST have to mention it again Brother Bugs. You might have missed it. The bird who raised such holy hell about the odoriferous circumstance surrounding the Army-Navy game in Chicago today is a fish—our friend the poor (Hamilton) Fish Jr. Brother fish complains that other fish among senators and congressmen besides himself want an investigation.

It seems that wiser congressional fish secured tickets for the game at a trifling $3.50 and sold them for $50. Members of congress seemed nearly $12,000 richer which they peddled for a profit. Evidently poor (Hamilton) Fish and a few other fish were overlooked.

Meanwhile the poor Chicago fish who pay taxes will pay the $30,000 deficit on the game. The expenses including transportation and housing of cadet and middy corps, printing, erecting temporary seats "and incidentals" will total $630,000. The ticket sale brought $600,000.

The Army and Navy will play today. The flag will be flown and saluted; the vice-president promises to be there; army and navy drills will show the dear public to what noble manliness we owe the safety of our country; and to the tune of Yankee Doodle [illegible] and Nina, the poor [illegible] for [illegible] and (Hamilton) Fish, sr.; the poor (tax-paying) fish in Chicago can complain till hell freezes over.

After Bloodshed---Fraternity

By GEORGE JARRBOE.

"Brothers, brothers!" chanted Klein monotonously. "All Mexicans are my brothers!"

"Why do you keep it up?" inquired Harry politely.

The Jewish gob hesitated. Then he spoke in a low, trembly voice. "I am from the working class! The time is coming when I must remember I belong to that class! And I will not kill!"

Harry shook his head and thought it best to walk away. As he pretended to watch the lazy gulf waves he was upset himself. Life as seaman, second class, on a dreadnaught seemed hardly worth while. But for his faith in the flag he would have jumped ship. Harry reflected: the soft-soaping enlisting officer had chatted briskly of broadside to broadside, than hand-to-hand combat, overcoming strong man for the honor of a stainless flag.

Stainless? Shipmates boasted of recent clubbings and stabbings of civilians in Nicaragua! Harry could not believe such cruel things were done; firmly he looked to the flag, symbol of justice and mercy. The others also adored the banner, but when Harry asked why, they shut up and just whispered about him. All were patriots except Klein; because he scowled at the flag nobody but Harry would talk to him. There was Klein now, all alone as usual, leaning over the rail, in spite of himself, Harry loped over and rested a hand on the Jew's shoulder.

"Come out of it, you! Get below while the gettin's good!" The petty officer pushed them along. They were to dip their white uniforms in coffee, dyeing them a khaki color. All the sailors were doing it, to make themselves less of a target. Vera Cruz was their destination. It seemed the "greasers" were to be forced to salute the flag. Harry inquired why. "Wall, Wilson said so. What's more, you bastard, you're turning into a regular sea lawyer and you better look out!"

To keep his head the boy had let out his emotions into bright dreams. He went off by himself and pictured a strongly walled city filled with soldiers and cannon, the heroes and Old Glory charging into battle smoke, the old man-to-man conflict. . . .

The dreadnaught dropped anchor in Vera Cruz harbor. Harry was puzzled when no shot was fired at them. The town seemed asleep in the trembling sunshine; no cannon; no soldiers. Just then a bosun's mate poked him and told him to go below and get ready. A landing party! Bloodshed! But where was the enemy? Harry could not understand the situation at all. Klein tiptoed over and whispered: "America is in the wrong. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo after 1848 provided that all disputes should be submitted to arbitration." Harry stole a glance at his precious flag, more puzzled than ever.

Hatred for the enemy was whipped up. The catholic chaplain rubbed his fat pink hands. "The greasers are turning against our holy church. Makes me more anxious to clean 'em up." The pious fellow was very happy. The landing party fell in along the ship's rail. Mostly young fellows with faces vacant of intelligence, standing stiffly, rather excited. "Growl as you charge, men!" snapped a natty officer. At the kind of snarls a drunken man gives to his dog the boats filled with imperialist shock troops.

As the invaders raced across the bay in their fast motorboats, faintly, in alarm, they heard the beautiful Mexican bugle call. Straining his eyes, Harry could see no sign of soldiers. Only a pedestrian or two was ducking for cover. And well they might! Over the heads of the boys in the boats the "San Francisco, "Chester" and "Prairie" let drive a rapid fire. From then on events moved distastefully fast for Harry. He remembers landing, slipping in a pool of blood. He looked. It was oozing from a woman's wounded side. He felt for his first-aid package. "Oh!" bellowed a petty officer.

He looked around, motivated by the fear of court-martial and the desire to inflict hurt on helpless people, the young fellows licked their dry lips and sibilated like wolves. Only Harry and the Jew kept their heads. A rage gripped the boy who had dreamed of glory. He sneered at the flag, stained with the crime of it all. So Klein was right! Nothing up to his pal. Harry pressed his hand in understanding. "You are my brother; all men are my brothers," said the Jew bashfully. With sad eyes Klein paddled by Harry. Neither fired at an object. Those poor devils in the rags of their exploited country were brothers, brothers! "Brothers, brothers!" chanted Harry and Klein.

The boys had by now [illegible] big, once-handsome naval academy they stopped short. The cruisers had slapped in shells thru the windows so that the front of the building was intact except for broken glass and bedcovings hanging from their fastenings, while the rear wall was nearly shot out. Harry and Klein thought it best to rush around, yelling like the other fiends, letting off their rifles, pretending to bayonet prostrate enemies. No plunder in the schoolrooms, just books, maps, globes and desks overthrown among masses of mortar. To shouts of joy the bedrooms were being rifled. Helpless against the big shells, the Mexican boys had been shocked about by the hurricanes of explosions. Blood stank everywhere, on sheets, pillows, books, broken furniture, on the money and trinkets being lifted by the invaders. Everywhere things like bloody worms seemed to crawl over things; the cadets had taken mattresses from their beds and stuffed them into the broad windows; the shells had blown boys and bedding into feathery wriggling bits. Klein and Harry stood in a corner. They took a moment in which to breathe, and decided to smile as they saw two satin slippers borne away as a gift to the captain of an English warship.

A pious gangster from New York, whose loud voice and brutal fist had earned him rapid promotion to bosun's mate routed out the boys. "Into the street with ye!" he shouted. As he was poking his bayonet their way they scuffled out. The pious catholic was now real bloodthirsty, religious fury agitating him against the helpless people. Crazed with fear, bleeding about the head, a child skidded up and clutched his legs. "Padre!" wailed the small shrill voice. The petty officer raised his rifle and was bringing down the butt on the little one's head when he paused and plowed the kid to one side. "I can't do it!" he wolfed, and squatted on a door step.

The boys slogged on. The street was filled with panic-stricken citizens. Three nuns on the run, showing their fat calves, were not molested. Harry passed rippling hanks of morning glories and secretly marveled at the rich color of the hibiscus. Dark alleys. Prostitutes in silk tights killed by shells. An old beggar sitting on steps, very quiet. Breast lifted white hair from forehead and there was a fragment of bet iron sticking in his forehead. Harry sobbed. "On! On!" bellowed the Annapolis masters and their overseers, the petty officers.

The imperialist shock troops drove on. To a smashed-up school. Shells had burst within. A slaughterhouse. Tough sailors cried out when they saw the federation to enter into negotiations with the operators on the basis of district agreements. Thus the operators have won a victory despite the heroic struggle waged by the miners. But the operators' victory will prove Pyrrhic. It was won thru the treachery of the reactionary leadership of the British trade union movement and the failure of world labor, outside of the Soviet Union, to come to the miners' assistance. It is very doubtful if there is recorded in the annals of labor history a more shocking instance of betrayal than the story of how the miners were let down by the officials of the Trade Union Congress and of the Labor Party.

THERE is a deep-rooted belief that the action of Thomas, MacDonald, Bevin and Pugh was not due to objection to a general strike on principle, but that those men are conscious agents of the British government and that they considered their duty to the crown higher than their duty to the trade union movement. It is significant that J. H. Thomas, who he sued the official organ of the British Communist Party for libel a few years ago, admitted on the witness stand that when he took the oath as member of the privy council that he bound himself to advise the government of any information that might come into his possession of movements that in his opinion might be prejudicial to the interests of the royal family.

* * * * *

THERE is no doubt that the general strike was a strike against the government and was a decided menace to British capitalism which is the essence of British rule, the royal family being merely the figleaf. The government correctly estimated the strike as a threat and acted accordingly. The labor [illegible] observed. ACCORDING to press dispatches, the British miners' strike has been officially called off. The miners have been instructed by the executive of the federation to enter into negotiations with the operators on the basis of district agreements. Thus the operators have won a victory despite the heroic struggle waged by the miners. But the operators' victory will prove Pyrrhic. It was won thru the treachery of the reactionary leadership of the British trade union movement and the failure of world labor, outside of the Soviet Union, to come to the miners' assistance. It is very doubtful if there is recorded in the annals of labor history a more shocking instance of betrayal than the story of how the miners were let down by the officials of the Trade Union Congress and of the Labor Party.

THERE is a deep-rooted belief that the action of Thomas, MacDonald, Bevin and Pugh was not due to objection to a general strike on principle, but that those men are conscious agents of the British government and that they considered their duty to the crown higher than their duty to the trade union movement. It is significant that J. H. Thomas, who he sued the official organ of the British Communist Party for libel a few years ago, admitted on the witness stand that when he took the oath as member of the privy council that he bound himself to advise the government of any information that might come into his possession of movements that in his opinion might be prejudicial to the interests of the royal family.

* * * * *

THERE is no doubt that the general strike was a strike against the government and was a decided menace to British capitalism which is the essence of British rule, the royal family being merely the figleaf. The government correctly estimated the strike as a threat and acted accordingly. The labor [illegible] observed. Klein [illegible] and children to the [illegible] that it was [illegible] streets!" put in Harry.

"Brothers, brothers!" chanted both Harry and Klein.

A VICTORY for the miners was a certainty when the general strike was called off. The government would be obliged to declare general martial law or else quit office. This would seem to be MacDonald's long-awaited opportunity to walk into office again with his Labor Party. But at this moment the right wingers were not thinking about anything else but the preservation of the empire. Instead of rallying the masses nationally and internationally to the aid of the miners they opened a guerilla war on Cook and Smith, the miners' leaders, and finally pulled the underpinning from beneath them. When the work of betrayal was finished and the miners were left fighting a rear-guard action, alone, J. H. Thomas went to cheer up the drooping spirit of the imperialists in Canada. Ramsay MacDonald went for a trip to Africa for his health and Ernest Bevin, generalissimo of the general strike, accompanied a delegation of British manufacturers to the United States to learn how our bosses' manage to keep their slaves contented.

* * * * *

DURING the entire struggle only the Communist Party proved to be the steadfast friend of the miners, always taking the blows in front and giving encouragement and direction to the strikers. The right wing leaders noting the gains made by the Communists in recruiting members as a result of their conduct during the strike, opened a new war on the revolutionary elements. One faker who spent a few weeks in the United States collecting money [illegible] did not collect enough to pay his passage—[illegible] chair. The American Communists with withhold[illegible] money [illegible] had collected for the miners. This was [illegible] communists. He did not [illegible] the $5,000,000 [illegible] the strike fund while wealthy [illegible] under Communist leader[illegible] agents on the inside, namely Thomas [illegible] Ismaid. [illegible] only $1 about $50,000. As a result of the strike the British workingclass are clearly that the government, supposed to be of all the people, is but a tool of the master-class. Millions of them now see that the reactionary leaders are agents of the government and of the capitalists. This is a gain from the struggle. The miners will rise again with better leadership and greater experience. The miners have been defeated. But the class hatred that has been engendered during the long battle will steel them to victory in the future.

HOW did the capitalists fare? What have they gained from the war? The president of the British Board of Trade estimated the losses at from $1,250,000,000 to $1,500,000,000. But those are only the direct losses he was careful to emphasize. The indirect losses, such as dislocation of trade and loss of markets are enormous. The total income of Great Britain is estimated at $15,000,000,000 yearly. At last a sum equal to one-fourth of this was what the luxury of defeating the miners cost the British ruling classes. In addition to other troubles the strike delivered a blow to British imperialism from which few believe it will ever recover.

THAT Benito Mussolini has been the author of most of the attempts on his life that have occurred with such monotonous regularity during the past years is no longer in doubt. The arrest of a member of the Garibaldi family, who was in the pay of the fascisti while posing as an anti-fascist, revealed a story of intrigue and duplicity unequalled in the annals of provocation. The French police, for reasons of their own, saw fit to expose Mussolini's conspiracies. It appears that the Italian police, with Mussolini's knowledge pulled off fake plots against the dictator's life in order to keep the popular mind inflamed against the enemies of fascism.

Marching Men -- A Review

By V. L. Calverton

Several centuries ago, in the time of Shakespeare and Bacon, authors lived upon their patrons. The system of patronage was a European institution. There were few other ways whereby an author could earn a living. John Wolfe offered the opportunity of translation, an experience in hack-work, to a limited number of the craft. Ballad-scribbling presented a simple medium for literary prostitution. University fellowships demanded too many qualifications and were encumbered with too many entailments to be an important source of assistance to any but the dedicated scholar. Samuel Daniel and William Browne supported themselves by private tutoring. Cadman, Ocland and Shirley were regular teachers. The life of the author in general, however, was dismal, insufferable, hopeless without the aid of a patron.

The practice of a patronage, deeply rooted in the economic basis of feudal society, injured poet and dramatist. Monastic patronage has disappeared with the predatory English reformation, and it was to the feudal lord that the artist had to appeal. The Earl of Southampton, for instance, was Shakespeare's patron; Leicester, not with untained purity, was Spencer's; Herbert was Daniel's. It was the economic element involved in the relationship of the author to his patron that bred danger. Spontaneity was often transformed into sycophancy, and servility became a literary virtue. The author too often looked to his superiors for favor and commendation. This tendency speedily became a habit. Even so acute a mind as that of Francis Bacon solicited the king for "a theme for treatment" in this fashion:

"I should with more alacrity embrace your Majesty's direction than my own choice."

Stultifying as Bacon's solicitation was, it is surpassed by that of Mathesen, a composer, who in his dedication to Landgraf Ernst Ludwig of Hessen declared:

"If god did not exist, who could more fittingly take His place than Your Supreme Highness."

What a contrast is to be discovered today, then, in Sherwood Anderson's dedication of his second novel to "American Workingmen."

The wide gulf of years that separated the two dedications is disclosed in their antithetical sentiments. The literature of the one age scorned the proletariat, the literature of the other age has begun to exalt it.

Marching Men is a romantic, proletarian novel. It is one of the few novels in American literature that is devoted to the toiler. While it may not visualize the class struggle as a historical process determined by social conflict and economic destiny, it does project the cause of the worker as an issue revolutionary and significant. There is, it is true, a noticeable sentimentality of description in the advance of the protagonist, Beaut McGregor, from the position of menial to that of master. The sense of social awareness that he develops, however, counterbalances something of this sentimentality. Beaut McGregor is harrassed by the unsightly chaos of human thought and activity, the wild clash of individual impulse and purpose. He is obsessed with a desire for orderliness, for design amid confusion. This craving becomes a mania, demanding active not contemplative expression. Sheer intellectual speculation, dreamlet theorizing in historical abstraction, are an abomination to one of his temperament. He is in vital revolt against the cabinet retreat of the student and philosopher. His life is a cry for vigorous organized force, perpetually in motion, ceaselessly advancing, defiant and invincible.

As a symphony of impulse, a drama of the grandiose, Marching Men is a moving and picturesque novel; as a piece of realism, which it purports to be, it falls of solidity and conviction. We marvel at the ghost-ish McGregor heading his countless ranks of marching men. He is another giant, an apotheosis of an ideal rather than the crystallization of an idea, a personification of a movement, not an individuality. His achievements are illogical—melodramatic. They belong to another civilization than ours, a civilization constructed upon a different ethic. Men could not have been made to march in the fashion of McGregor's squads if they were employed and lived at the time and under the social conditions in which they were placed. There is something exceedingly romantic about the drilling and chanting of the proletarian groups, marching unarmed in endless procession in town and city over all the country.

"And then the movement of the Marching Men began to come to the surface. It got into the blood of men. That harsh drumming voice began to shake their hearts and legs.

"Everywhere men began to see and hear of the Marchers. From lip to lip ran the question, 'What's going on?'

"'What's going on?' How that cry ran over Chicago. Every newspaper man in town got assignments on the story. The papers were loaded with it every day. All over the city they appeared, everywhere—the Marching Men . . . . .

"Of course, the police tried to stop the marchers. Into a street they would run crying 'Disperse!' The men did disperse only to appear again on some vacant lot working away at the perfection of the marching. Only an excited squad of police captured a company of them. The same men were back in line the next evening. The police could not arrest a hundred thousand men because they marched shoulder to shoulder along the streets and chanted a weird march song as they went."

To anyone the least acquainted with our social system such description is palpably absurd. Our recent experience has proved that without chance of doubt. If the police could not arrest the marching hordes, and the very sentence implies that such was (and had to be) the wish and object of the upper class, the militia would have been summoned to conclude the demonstrations. A dozen pretexts could have been invented. Agent provocateurs could have been employed, as may have been the case in the Haymarket riot of '86, if not other means could have been devised. Further, the disaffiliance of the movement with any political or economic policy or any method of definite reform taxes our credulity beyond endurance. Men do not march for the rhythm of marching, nor involve themselves in movements without knowledge of their purpose and fluality—nor without promise of reward!

"We do not think and banter words. We march"

These two verses of their song express their movement. There is no clean, steady plan that directs their enthusiasm, no orderliness of design, except the orderliness of marching. "We will not talk or listen to talk—but march . . . . on and on forever." This is romantic psychology and sociology—it is not fidelity to reality.

David Ormsby, "the quiet efficient representative of wealth," is an exaggerated type of antithesis. His psychology, an embodiment of the attitude of the capitalist, is softened by a strange and grasping affection for his daughter Margaret, who, despite her vacillation of sentiment, is in love with McGregor. His opposition to McGregor, anemic and pulseless. His opposition to McGregor, pallid and feeble though it is, is easily comprehensible, but his attempt to discourage his daughter's admiration for the leader of the Marching Men and convert her to his philosophy, his platitudinizing explanations and defense are the actions of a puppet, a man without vigor or vitality. He is another plant, lost winning and magnetic, however, than the stalwart, flaming McGregor.

Nevertheless, with all of its inconsistencies of character and situation, Marching Men possesses unique significance in American literature. It is radiantly and romantically symbolic of the rise of the proletariat. The tragic cry of the working man finds passionate echo in the voice of McGregor.

"I am going to fight the comfortable well-to-do acceptance of a disorderly world. The smug men who see nothing wrong in a world like this. I would like to fight them so that they throw their cigars away and run about like ants when you kick over ant-hills in the fields."

The effect of the organization of the proletariat, a result of industrial limitation and oppression, obtains vivid and unmistakable reflection in this furious novel. The decay of an old and the synthesis of a new civilization are implicit in the substance of the narrative.

In the Wake of the News

By at Benito's nose. After the revolver spoke, Mussolini could afford to remain calm. His handkerchief was able to undo the damage which consisted of a smudge. The latest "attempt" on his life was also framed by the police. The incident cost a youth his life and hundreds of people were murdered by the fascisti in a mad orgy of revenge. How long will the Italian people have to suffer under this mad tool of imperialism? Perhaps he will be mad enough to tackle Mustapha Kemal Pasha in order to provide a thrill for his brigands. And what can we think of our democratic bankers whose money has kept this murderer in power?

* * * * *

WE are minus a queen and we are not sorry. Our big butter and egg man can go back to their counters, our packers can return to their swine and our gold coast poodle-dogs can dry their tears for their dear ones will be able to give them more attention, at least until the next queen hoves in sight. Marie is leaving in tears. One of her sons is hestarigising Europe and half a dozen concubines are on his trail. The a famous English monarch once said that "a king's bastard is a hosar's pride" modern royalty has to be more careful and the conduct of Marie's brood has clapped a gas mask on more than one royal snout. Her boy Carol is reported returning to Roumania and divers other burglars are making the royal seat uncomfortable for Marie. The queen is harrying home, perhaps to exchange a tack for the cushioned seats of American royal trains.

* * * * *

THE queen came to the United States to get money. Whether she got it or not remains to be seen. Some say her technique was good, but the heroine of Cotsofanesti could not be good, even for a little while. She surrounded herself with a bunch of drunken bums that could not keep from brawling. It was a common sight to see a hat, expelled from the royal train, only to be followed by a pair of pajamas and a millionaire. The masses liked this, it was more entertaining than the romance of Mr. Edward Browning and his baby bride. But the bankers like their fun in its native state they favor dignity in public. The money they loan comes out of the pockets of depositors and out of the hides of the workers. That's where it all comes from. If there is anything a small depositor likes better than his life it is his money. So it might not look well for our bankers to supply a bawdy queen with enough money for a five years' debauch while hordes of thousands of American children are going hungry.

* * * * *

BUT our ruling classes care little for public opinion, since it means little unless organized. What is usually called "public opinion" is about as influential as a hog-tied flea. Were the American workers, class-conscious and organized industrially and politically, not only would they be in a position to prevent this pig-in-an queen from entering New York harbor, but there would be no bankers left to lick her boots. As it is only the Communists and those who sympathize with their program protested [illegible] before the royal harlot was able to [illegible] the ominous ruin of the Roumanian [illegible] of considerable poisonous propaganda. ## A PEEK EACH WEEK AT MOTION PICTURES

"THE TEMPTRESS"

Greta Garbo, Antonio Moreno and a first rate director have made a success of this picture despite Blasco Ibanez. The sing of the story (and it's a story of sins) are many. So many in fact, that the whole business is hardly worth recounting. If you have read any Blasco Ibanez drivel, you are acquainted with the theme a story of "unrestrained passion," a beautiful woman who plays hell with the lives of more than one man, whose nature "god given or by the devil" (that stuff still goes!) is such that she drives men to a passion of some hundreds degrees Fahrenheit. In addition to the high temperature of the story, the plot moves fast tho in devious ways. That's what that is.

Greta Garbo is something else again. This beautiful woman is also an actress. Tho only in her second American picture she seems sure of a gold-lined future. Antonio Moreno is fully as deserving. He gives a characterization which like that of Greta Garbo's, helps to get conviction despite the unconvincing hokum of the plot.

Lionel Barrymore is also in the cast—as are one or two other movie notables. The supporting cast is one that lifts the whole production far above the average. The direction is a first rate job. The picture as a whole has both brains and bank account and all the resources of motion pictures given an honest story to tell. We would have had something very much more worthy.

Motion picture art has made no progress with the making of this film But motion picture profits are sure to be swollen "The Temptress" with its many worth-while features, plus the highly-headed hokum should prove a first-rate box office attraction. It has color, movement, adventure and passion—glorified with a mention or two of God himself and some beautiful photography. All the romantic advances of the motion picture are included in "The Temptress."

The picture (showing at the Roosevelt) is well worth seeing. It is not one of the truly good pictures. But in comparison with the great majority of the super-heated holy hallelujia we are usually asked to swallow, and unconvincing as the "Temptress" is, you will find it entertainment worth the modest price of admission.

THE THEATER

A NEW THEATER IN NEW YORK

Like the "Dog Bites Man" story, the inauguration of a new theater in New York is not news. But a new theater has been inaugurated in New York—in America. And it is news.

It is not a commercial theater. It is not an "art" theater. It is not a "little" theater. It is something more vital than any of these. It is a workers' theater. The first true workers' theater on this side of the Atlantic. It is called (at present) The Workers' Drama League.

America, thank god, has no Gordon Craig to tell it its need for a national theater. America had no Romain Rolland to tell it its need for a "peoples" theater. But America has workers. And these workers found the need of a theater to link their struggle in shop and field and mine.

I say this is a true workers' theater because theaters or rather dramatic societies in the past and even in the present were and are "doing shows" for workers. Shows which generally depirt the virtues of the poor and lowly workingman. The proletarian artist has gotten rid of the paper-cap working man. The proletarian theater must get rid of the sentimental weaver. The workingman in the arts, like in the economic field, must become a conscious power.

I predict the day when there will be not one, but a hundred workers' theaters in America. The theater must become the vital power that it is in Russia. For the theater is the greatest power in which to express the emotions of the workers.

What has the worker to gain from the present commercial or art theater! In one he sees a false presentation of life: the poor mechanic finally reaches sucress and marries the boss' daughter.

The other theater is too cerebral, pickthrow, as he calls it. And he calls it so justly. What has the worker to do with one suffering from an exaggerated wellschmerts? The other theaters that are left to him are the vaudeville and burlesque shows which act like an opiate upon him.

Yes! I say the workers of America have need of a workers' theater. The workers of America need hundreds of workers' theaters. But this is only a start. A small but very significant start in the forming the country over of American proletcult theaters.

May this theater, The Workers Drama League, be supported by those for whom it was conceived.

—Max Geltman.

Note: The first production of the Workers Drama League will be "The Biggest Boob in the World." A play by a young German Communist, Karl Wittfogal. The play has been translated into English by Upton Sinclair. It will be shown on the evenings of Dec. 4, 8 and 10 at the Church of All Nations, 9 Second Ave. N. Y.

The Farmer—As He Is

ARTICLE II

By WILLIAM BOUCK

Now let us take a glance at the farmers' efforts to organize.

First he was herded into an organization by officers of the agricultural department in Washington. This afterward grew, and was called the Grange. Its co-operative efforts availed for several years. Then under the exploiting policy of this country these farmers fell victims to their own legislation, viz, that a producer could live and prosper under a system which pyramided all his vast surplus which his poor marketing conditions gave to the other fellow upon his shoulders, as dividends and rent and interest which he had to pay the other fellow for taking it away from him.

Then came other organizations, all with the same holy belief in the sanctity of American exploiting methods, and they with the Grange have passed into that state which means no return.

Then in the early 90's of the last century an organization, more virile and more aggressive, came about on the western plains called the Farmers Alliance, and afterward merged into the Populist party. It had a program and an aggressive policy. It succeeded in electing numerous senators and congressmen, carried several states and governed them for several years. But instead of going on clearly to a workers' government it became befogged with success and quick achievement and "fused" with the aristocratic democratic party in 1896—and lost what independent policy it had. It too became a memory.

Not, however, until it had left as a legacy in several western states the principle of direct legislation, which is the direct outgrowth of populist teachings, and has in one way and another got into the constitutions of many of our states.

Passed away! Yes, it did not see the condition, or its cause clearly and made no great effort to fundamentally change the basic law of our country a capitalist character to a co-operative commonwealth of which it talked a great deal.

Yet the Peoples' Party was a real effort of American farmers to take control of government for the producers.

Then about 1914-15, the North Dakota farmers led by A. C. Townley. Lemke and others came back with a new and aggressive force in the republican party—for let it be known the Non-Partisan League was not an independent economic organization. It was an effort to capture the republican party by one faction—and did for the time sneered in doing so with the North Dakota republican party.

Mr. Townley's whole program was to keep away from being radical, from forganizing a new party, from being anything but regular, dyed-in-the-wool capitalists, and his teaching was at the beginning. "Don't try to scare the farmers by organsing new parties, it can't be done. Steal their party and make it do what we farmers want to be done." Time and time again their organizers reiterated that principle.

Again here was an aggressive, newly built, up-to-date party, teaching farmers that they could gain their ends and still not disturb those dividends—rent-interest-surplus, pyramided upon their backs and ever becoming heavier.

And the Non-Partisan league wasted tons of ink and carloads of paper defending their loyalty and urging others to buy Liberty bonds and so forth, and again and again defended their loyalty to this present capitalist regime.

It must not be understood, however, that it was a mossy-foot organization. They DID start out with a state socialist program. They did get as far as erecting a state mill and elevator. They did force state bell insurance. They did establish a state bank, and several minor functions. They did stay with the republican party. They did endorse Coolidge by their state campaign committee of the republican party which they controlled four to one, or state central committee properly speaking. They have this year degenerated into endorsing the whole state republican ticket, altho half of them are I. V. A.'s—old guard republicans. And this same republican administration which they elected two years ago is now sabotaging their mills and elevators at every turn.

The governor whom they elected says there is no cause for any disagreement between the farmers and the business interests. Everything is now harmonious, and any insinuation to the contrary is made by some person knows what that means. The same administration has also curtailed the functions of their state bank until it is now merely a farm-loan bank. Altho the purpose when established was to make it a general bank and establish branches in every county.

Such is capitalism in the United States.

You tell me, dear reader, if the producer can beat its game of surplus pyramiding upon the farmers' backs?

And the fundamental teaching of the Non-Partisan League was that a farmer could still be under that load and win. That was its fatal defect, and that's why it's where it is to-day, an asset to capitalist politicians, like Governor Sorlie.

A Pan-Asiatic Congress in Japan

By TANG SHIN SHE.

THE imperialists of Europe wish to convoke a Pan-European Congress; those of America intend to create a Pan-American league of nations, while those of Asia have convened for August 1 of this year a Pan-Asiatic Congress.

These movements did not originate exclusively among the imperialists; the Second International and the Amsterdam International have also played their part in the matter. Several months ago the newspapers of the Second International and the Amsterdam International reported that a Pan-Asiatic Labor Congress was to be convened in Shanghai, and now it appears that a Pan-Asiatic Congress is to meet on August 1 in Nagasaki (Japan).

As regards the anti-Japanese movement in China, in the political sense as well as the economic, which has arisen on account of the 21 demands of Japan, the Japanese assume that the antagonism had been produced by American agitation, and for this reason they have long desired to call a Pan-Asiatic Congress. The murderous shootings in Shanghai on May 30, 1925, which in reality were caused by the Japanese, are being used by them to ingratiate themselves with the Chinese, whose indignation is directed against the international imperialists. Japanese politicians sent repeated delegations to express to the Chinese their "sympathy" with them in their fight against the "whites." With clever and cunning words they endeavored to stir up racial hatred on the part of the yellow peoples against the whites. They immediately found adherents for this idea among the Chinese bourgeoisie, and committees were promptly formed in Shanghai and Pekin to prepare for the Pan-Asiatic Congress.

The original plan was to hold the congress in Shanghai, but as the revolutionary wave in China continued to increase from day to day, and because until a congress would meet with great confusion, it was decided to hold it in Nagasaki in Japan. In all there were to be 100 delegates at the congress, Japan and China each sending 35 representatives, while the remaining 30 should come from India, Persia, Turkey and other countries. Under no circumstances is English to be spoken at the congress; French may be used when necessity arises.

It was, however, not satisfactory to the Japanese that, after all the trouble they had gone thru to prepare the congress, only those politicians who live on Japanese money and the expelled members of the Kuomintang party—all persons of but little significance in China—were willing to attend. They, therefore, towards the end of May of this year, sent a delegation of parliamentarians to Shanghai to invite the chamber of commerce of that city. But as a portion of the small traders displayed an anti-imperialist tendency, while, on the other hand, some of the bigger merchants were under English-American influence, there was little to be done in regard to the chamber of commerce beyond inviting a hundred members to visit Japan for the purpose of fostering friendlier relations between Japan and China, which invitation was accepted.

What is the purpose of the Pan-Asiatic Labor Congress?

Last year the Japanese government sent the reformist labor leader, Bunji Suzuki, the secretary of the Japanese Federation of Labor, to the congress of the internationale labor office at Geneva. Shortly afterwards American newspapers published the report that a Pan-Asiatic Congress was to be held in France under the presidency of Suzuki. This plan, naturally, emanated from the Geneva labor office and the Amsterdam Trade-Union International, and with no other object that the disruption of the Asiatic labor movement, for it had long been a source of great dissatisfaction to those bodies that the Asiatic labor organizations all incline towards the Red International of Labor Unions or are actually affiliated to it.

After his return to Japan—after the shooting in Shanghai—Suzuki stated in the course of an interview with a representative of the Japanese press that the Pan-Asiatic Labor Congress would take place in Shanghai and that its chief aim would be the inveigling up of the wages of Asiatic workers with those of western workers. The reason for the sudden shifting of the scene of the congress from France to Shanghai may be attributed to the fact that the Japanese imperialists needed their reformist leaders for their own purposes and were not disposed to have them exploited by any other imperialists. At the beginning of this year it appeared as tho the congress would really take place in Shanghai. In consequence, the general secretary of the Shanghai Trades Council, Li Li San, wrote an article on this subject in April this year in the Guide Weekly:

". . . What attitude should the workers adopt in regard to a congress of this kind?

"1. We have observed how the western working class have been deceived by their reformist leaders, and that as a result they are still today under the yoke of capitalist domination. The reformist leaders are nothing but the jackels of the bourgeoisie, and no matter what fine words they may utter we cannot afford to trust them.

"2. During the recent imperialist world war eight million of our fellow workers were slaughtered under the slogan of defense of home and country, while many millions were crippled for life. Now the Japanese imperialists want to deceive the working class of the Far East with the same slogan of defense of home and country. We must not tolerate this.

"3. The large majority of the peoples of the East suffer under imperialistic oppression. There is only one way for us: a united front against imperialists! The workers in particular must line up in this front. It must also be their task to see that the Pan-Asiatic Labor Congress, which is merely a maneuver of the imperialists and a campaign of lies on the part of the reformists, is prevented . . ."

This single attack served to bury the magnificent Pan-Asiatic Labor Congress.

The extension of the British naval base at Singapore, the maneuvers of the American fleet in the Pacific Ocean and the strong revolutionary tendency in China forced the Japanese imperialists to try to bring about a Pan-Asiatic Congress for the bourgeoisie and for the workers, in order to smash the revolutionary united front in Asia and to defend their conflicting interests against foreign imperialists. Such action signifies nothing less than preparation on the part of Japanese imperialism for a war in the Pacific Ocean.

Manuel Gomez's article, "China Hails the Philippines," is held over until next week because of technical difficulties.

American Planning at the Waldorf

By ROBERT DUNN.

WHILE the American Federation of Labor was worrying the allied, associated and associated automobile manufacturers in Detroit, the National Association of Manufacturers, the One Big Union of the employers, was convening under the gilded ceilings of the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, and worrying no one.

The N. A. of M. is a brilliant, strident, he-mannish aggregation of business evangels. The delegates at one of their annual pow-wows are said to represent an invested capital of something like $4,000,000,000. The organization talks big at its conventions (this was its thirty-first), but its activities during the year are confined pretty much to lobbying and propaganda. Its reports are impressive. Its "open shop department" last year had over "1,000 college and university teachers of economics and sociology on its mailing list," and its publications, it says, "are widely used and quoted by industrial associations and it is constantly supplying material upon request to industrial organizations, college professors, debators and others."

For the Open Shop.

The open shop department of the N. A. of M. is particularly interesting. This year, in addition to the representatives of the manufacturers, those who spoke for education, finance, religion, "men who stand for big constructive things," were on the program. They added their hosannahs to the open shop American plan of employment.

First, education. In the person of Dr. George B. Cutten, president of Colgate University. Dr. Cutten quoted from Oscar Wilde and the scriptures, deplored the English coal strike and predicted that there may be just a union or two left in America when the American plan boys get through cleaning them up. He asserted that every worker has a right "God-given," were his words—to work and that his remuneration, like that of university presidents, should be based on accomplishment. Bricklayers, especially, should lay more bricks. This point seems to have become an obsession with some folk who are not bricklayers. They cannot see—at least from the Waldorf gallery—why bricklayers don't splash the old mortar just a little quicker.

Then Dr. Cutten referred to workers as morons who ought not to ask for a share in management through collective bargaining. He smote the arming less than preparation on the part sympathetic strike idea and deprecated the late Brother Gompers for gumshoeing the courts. Gompers, you will recall once asked Jehovah to save labor from said courts. This, the doctor thought, was very bad.

Hammond Praises Coolidge.

Second, finance. Mr. John H. Hammond of Brown Bros. & Co. started his audience with the statement that the country is prosperous, "thanks to the economical administration at Washington," and added that the workers should be encouraged to purchase shares of stock in the companies hiring them and thus get in on the prosperity via the dividend route. He advocated treating labor "as well as possible," but claimed that Herrin was a blot on our escutcheon. With something resembling a shiver the cozy little group of business men heard his words: "Had it not been for the non-union miners many of us would have frozen to death last winter."

Out of his own personal experience Mr. Hammond cited the fruits of conscientious open shopping. He is the chairman of the Bangor and Aroostook Railway (if that means anything to you). Well, a few years ago he smashed a walk-out of engineers and in 1922 he beat the union shopmen led by "sinister outsiders." Result: all his "hands" are now faithful and amenable. They have group insurance and "slackers have been eliminated."

Third, religion: In the bluff and bulky form of the Rt. Rev. Mons. John L. Bedford, D. D., who a few years ago declared that every socialist should be shot. Mons. Bedford didn't repeat his stuff, but confined himself to stating that the church is impartial and that Leo XIII had penned an encyclical epistle on labor in order to dispose of the socialists. That was in 1891. "Mons." also said, "the right to private property is absolutely sacred," and that crafty agitators are stirring up the people to sedition. They should be dealt with firmly. The manufacturers, he thought, should make the open shop "attractive." However, if William Green wants to talk in Detroit or elsewhere, "let him go hire a hall." Only an "accredited minister of the gospel" should be permitted to shoot off his face in god's temple.

Big Man With Puny Voice.

Finally the manufacturer himself: Mr. John Lester Dryden, president of the Employers' Association of Detroit, reading his paper in a hurried, scarcely audible, school-boyish voice. Informing us that there are so many people in Detroit. There are so many employes there. Some of them are "free"—to be exact 97 per cent. They work in open shops. Only 20,000 are still "enslaved." They work in union shops. Labor conditions, in fact "are almost ideal." Why? Because the employers got together and—organized into an association with a "free employment bureau" to break strikes and maintain blacklist. And now Detroit is no longer under the domination of the filthy union hod carriers and milk wagon drivers' in fact, the visiting delegation of "labor union men" sent over by the London Daily Mail says all sorts of nice things about the town. In short, everything is lovely because employers are organized, and workers are not.

It should be added that the chairman of the meeting who introduced the above worthy men of weight, insisted that the N. A. of M. is not opposed to organized labor. It is merely opposed to having labor organizations act like labor organizations after they get organized.

A Hymn to Hate

By COVAMI.

O thou, twin-born with Love from Beauty's line,
Her alter ego and, like her, divine!
To thee I lift my voice in feeble praise!
To thee, admiring, my eyes I raise!
To thee whose fructifying kiss, O Hate,
So oft hath 'couraged men to challenge fate!

Thou art not evil,—thou art good and fair!
To thee we owe the strength of our despair;
To thee alone, when all around is night,
When Hope is dead and Love herself in flight,—
To thee we owe the iron strength and will
To battle for emancipation still.

'Tis not till slav'ry's hated by the slaves,—
'Tis only then Truth rises from her graves,—
'Tis only then that Freedom comes to birth.—
'Tis only then Love glorifies the Earth.
'Tis only then, O Hate, 'tis only then,—
After thou hast cleansed the hearts of men!

It is because Toil's legions know thee not,
Theirs is the burden and the bitter lot;
Theirs is the robot task, the servile name,
The peon's and the tenant's wage and shame:—
Because of this, O Hate, because of this,—
They have not felt thy fructifying kiss!

A WEEK IN CARTOONS By M. P. Bales

Lenin and Art - - By A. V. Lunacharsky

Translated from the German by Sophia Schmidt.

LENIN had very little time in his life to give close attention to art; and in that respect he usually considered himself totally incompetent. For that reason, as all dilettantism was foreign and hateful to him, he did not like to give an opinion on questions of art. His tastes, however, were nonetheless definite. He loved the Russian classics, and he liked realism in literature, painting, etc.

Once, in the year 1905, the time of the first revolution, he had the opportunity to spend a night at the home of Comrade D. I. Leshtchenko, which contained a whole series of Knackfuss monographs of the world's greatest artists. On the next morning Vladimir Ilyitch said to me, "How wonderful is the realm of the history of art! How much work it offers for the Communist! Last night I could not go to sleep till morning—I examined one book after another. And it vexed me that I had no time to occupy myself with art, and that I never shall have!"

Several times I had the opportunity—it was after the revolution—to confer with Lenin at various occasions about matters of art. I remember, for example, that he once asked me over the telephone to go with him and Kemenev to see an exhibit of models for a statue which was to be set up on the magnificent pedestal next to the Christ Cathedral in the Kremi, from which the figure of Alexander III had just been removed. Vladimir Ilyitch examined all these models with a critical eye. Not one pleased him. For a long time he contemplated a monument in a futuristic style, and when asked for his opinion, he answered, "Here I comprehend nothing; ask Lunatcharsky." Upon my remark that I saw no design worthy of execution, he was very happy and said, "And I thought you would set up some futuristic scare-crow!"

At another time a memorial of Karl Marx was under consideration. The well-known sculptor, M. manifested a particular obstinacy. He exhibited a large project for a statue called, "Karl Marx on the Four Elephants." This unexpected conception appeared very curious to us, and also to Vladimir Ilyitch. The artist began to alter his design, and he did this three times; under no circumstances did he wish to forego the victory over his competitors. Then under my chairmanship the jury definitely accepted his model and gave preference to a common design of a group of artists under the direction of Aryoshin; the sculptor M. rushed into the study of Vladimir Ilyitch and complained to him about the matter. Vladimir Ilyitch took his grievance to heart and asked me over the telephone to call in a new jury. He declared that he would inspect the model of Aryoshin and that of the sculptor M. himself. He actually came, and approved Aryoshin's design; but that of the sculptor M. he also rejected.

In the same year the group of Aryoshin erected for the May celebration a miniature of Karl Marx on the spot where the memorial was to be placed. Vladimir Ilyitch walked several times around the statue, asked suddenly how large it was going to be, finally declared himself satisfied, added, however, turning to me, "Anatoly Vasilyevitch, remind the artist to see that the hair of the head be more fine, so as to give the same good impression as does a portrait of Marx; it seems as if it were a little coarse."

Already in the year 1918, Vladimir Ilyitch called me to him and told me that art ought to be used for agitation purposes; at the same time he presented two projects to me. First, according to his opinion, buildings, walls, etc., where bills are usually posted, should be furnished with large revolutionary inscriptions, several of which he at once suggested.

Gen. Brichichtchen took up this project later, when he was director of the branch for mass-education in Homel. When I came to Homel, I found the city literally covered with these inscriptions, which really would not have been bad, had they been true to the original conception. Even the mirrors in a large restaurant, where an enlightenment committee was quartered, were written over with proverbs and citations.

In Moscow and Leningrad this idea was never realized, neither in the exaggerated form of Homel nor in one resembling the conception of Ilyitch.

The second project dealt with the erection of memorials for the great revolutionists, and on a very large scale. Provisional statues of plaster of Paris were to be set up in Leningrad as well as in Moscow. Both cities responded with enthusiasm to my suggestion that Lenin's plan be carried out. It was intended that every monument be solemnly inaugurated with a speech on the particular revolutionist; the rest was to be left to enlightening inscriptions. Vladimir Ilyitch referred to this as "Monument-propaganda."

In Leningrad this propaganda was very successful. The first of the memorials was by Sherwood and represented Radltchev. A copy of this monument was set up in Moscow. Unfortunately the original in Leningrad was broken and has not been replaced. On the whole, because of their frailty, most good memorials in Leningrad did not last long. Among them I remember very good ones, for example, busts of Garibaldi, Shevtchenko, Dobrolutov, Herzen, and several others. The statues in a left-radical vein proved less successful. When, for example, the cubistically styled head of Peryovskaya was unveiled, some of the spectators were quite appalled, and S. Lilina made the positive demand that the statue be removed immediately. The memorial of Tchernishevsky also, was deemed too artificial by many. Most satisfactory was the monument of Lassalle by Seilt. This statue, placed in front of the former city duma, is still intact. I believe it is of bronze. The monument of Marx by Matveyev, representing him standing, also turned out well. Unfortunately it was soon broken, and a bronze-head of Marx in the usual style, without the original plastic conception of Matveyev, took its place at the Smolny.

The Moscow monuments were less successful. Marx and Engels were represented in a sort of basin and received the designation, "The Bearded Barbers." The sculptor K. surpassed all others. For a long time men and horses coming through Myasnitskaya street cast furtive, uneasy glances at a queer, spooky figure, covered by way of caution, with boards. It was Bakunin in the conception of the worthy artist. If I am not mistaken, the monument was destroyed immediately after its inauguration by anarchists, who, in spite of their advanced point of view, could not tolerate such sculptural derision of their leader's memory.

In general, there were few satisfactory monuments in Moscow. A better than the others is perhaps the monument of Nikitin. I do not know whether Ilyitch has given close attention to these memorials; at any rate, he told me once with a certain dissatisfaction, that the monument propaganda had turned to no account. By way of an answer, I pointed out the experience in Leningrad and the testimony of Zinoviev. Vladimir Ilyitch shook his head doubtfully and said, "Should all talent be concentrated in Petrograd, and in Moscow—only amateurs?" I was not in a position to explain to him this extraordinary phenomenon.

He also had certain skepticisms concerning the "Memorial-Tablet" of the sculptor, Konenkov. Not without humor Konenkov named his work "The Pseudo-Real Tablet.". I also recollect how the first bas-relief, Ilyitch's bas-relief representing Chaliurin. Vladimir Ilyitch was greatly pleased with the bas-relief, but asked me whether it was not a futuristic work. He was altogether adverse to futurism. I was not present when Lenin once visited a home of artists which, if I am not mistaken, had been inhabited by a young relative of his. Later I was informed of a discussion between him and the artists of this group, who were all of the radical turn of mind. Vladimir Ilyitch avoided serious discussion, jested and ridiculed a little; but here, too, he declared that he did not consider himself sufficiently competent to talk seriously about the matter. Youth itself he loved, and rejoiced over its Communistic spirit.

In the last period of his life, Vladimir Ilyitch seldom had the opportunity to enjoy art. He was several times at the theater; I believe, without exception at the Art theater which he esteemed very highly. This theater always made an excellent impression on him.

Vladimir Ilyitch loved music exceedingly, but its effect on him was too strong. For some time good concerts took place at my home. Schaliapin sang occasionally, Meltchik played, or Romanovsky, the quartet of Stradivarius, Kussvisky and others. I often asked Vladimir Ilyitch to come, but he always was busy. Once he told me frankly, "Certainly it is a great pleasure to hear music, but you see, it affects me too much, I cannot stand it very well." I recollect that Gen Tchurupa who succeeded several times in bringing Vladimir Ilyitch to attend a concert at his home at which the same Romanovsky played, also told me that Lenin enjoyed the music, but that he was obviously very agitated.

I will add that Vladimir Ilyitch was very critical about the government theater. I pointed out to him several times that we enjoyed the theater at relatively moderate cost, but he insisted that state subsidies for this theater be abolished. In this matter Vladimir Ilyitch was guided by two considerations. On one he named forthwith: "It is not fair to spend large sums on a magnificent theater, when we have no means to maintain the most primitive schools in the villages." The other consideration he brought out at a meeting, where I refuted his attacks on the great theater. I emphasized the unquestionably great cultural value of this institute. Vladimir Ilyitch screwed up his eyes sardonically and said, "And yet, no one can deny that it is a piece of the purest "feudal-culture."

It does not necessarily follow that Vladimir Ilyitch was hostile to all culture of the past. Specifically, he considered "seignorial" the entire ostentatious courtly tone of the opera. Art of the past in general, and especially Russian realism (including also the tendencies of the Peredvishen ki's), was rated very highly by Vladimir Ilyitch.

These are the facts which I can present out of my reminiscenses of Ilyitch. I repeat that to Lenin his esthetic sympathies and antipathies never became principles.

Comrades interested in art remember the declaration of the central committee, concerning questions of art and directed severely against futurism. I have no further information on the matter, but I am inclined to think that Vladimir Ilyitch was in some way connected with it. Lenin at that time quite erroneously considered me a follower of futurism and a man who supported that view exclusively; and therefore, perhaps, he did not consult me before the publication of this noscript of the committee - apparently endeavoring to correct my behavior

A difference of opinion, and a very acute one, existed between Vladimir Ilyitch and myself on the subject of the "Proletcult." Once, in fact, he upbraided me very harshly. I will observe, first of all, that Vladimir Ilyitch by no means denied the importance of workers' groups for the purpose of developing authors and artists out of proletarian ranks; he even considered an all-Russian federation of such groups advisable. But he feared the pretentions of the proletcult—the endeavor to take over the entire development of proletarian science and culture. This seemed to him in the first place entirely premature and a task surpassing the resources at hand, secondly, he was of the opinion that the proletarian would, by such a system, be caused to neglect the study and the acquisition of the already existing science and culture; thirdly, Vladimir Ilyitch obviously feared also the possibility of political dissentions growing up in the proletcult. He was quite annoyed, for example, by the important role played by A. A. Bogdanov in the proletcult.

In the year 1920, when the conference of the proletcult was in session, Vladimir Ilyitch asked me to go there and to point out definitely that the proletcult must work under the leadership of the people's commissariat for enlightenment, that it must consider itself part of that institution, etc. In a word, Vladimir Ilyitch desired that the proletcult be drawn closer to the state, while he at the same time took measures calculated to intensify the relationship between the proletcult and the party. The speech I then made at the conference was fairly evasive and conciliatory. To me it seemed wrong to injure the assembled workers with a violent attack. Vladimir Ilyitch learned about the speech in a form still milder. He called me to him and there was an explosion. Later the proletcult was reconstructed according to the directions of Vladimir Ilyitch. I repeat, he never intended to dissolve the proletcult; on the contrary, he was sympathetic with its purely artistic pursuits.

The new artistic literary formations which grew up during the revolution received little attention from Vladimir Ilyitch. He had no time to occupy himself with them. At any rate, I know that the "Hundred and Fifty Millions" of Mayakovsky did not please Vladimir Ilyitch in the least. He considered this book to be affected and superficial." It is to be deplored that Lenin could not pronounce judgment on the later and more mature development of literature in the revolutionary direction.

The enormous interest of Vladimir Ilyitch in the photoplay is well known to everybody.

"On the other hand, a little poem of Mayakovsky, treating of a bobo, made Vladimir Ilyitch laugh, and occasionally he even repeated several lines of it.

Gunboat Diplomacy In Nicaragua

By HARRISON GEORGE.

GUNBOAT diplomacy, sometimes going under the more pacific alias of "dollar diplomacy," is going ahead under full steam in Central America. The object is complete control of Nicaragua. This follows up Wall Street imperialism's forceful domination in Porto Rico and Haiti, its extension of actual control of Cuba and Venezuela, and is but one more step in making the Caribbean an American lake.

To understand the situation we must first see what interest has brought on the present situation, with the Coolidge government proceeding with brass face to thrust its armed forces against the majority of the Nicaraguan people, using the bugaboo of "Mexican Bolshevism" to convince the Yankee bourgeoisie as a whole that an enemy of power and malevolence justifies the "energetic action" taken by the U. S. navy against the weak and small republic lying just north of the Republic of Panama through which U. S. imperialism constructed its famous canal also by act of violence.

Desire to Grab All.

FRUIT companies, mining, railway and banking interests make up the major part of Yankee capital interested in Nicaragua. But there are other larger imperialist interests, such as Washington's desire to control all territory anywhere near the Panama canal and to dominate Nicaragua directly with a view to building another canal through Nicaragua, joining the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by another big ditch from the east coast to Lake Nicaragua and another through the shorter land area from the lake to the Pacific. United States also has a naval base in the Bay of Fonseca, on the northwest coast of Nicaragua.

The United Fruit company had in 1912 an investment interest of $8,253,826, including interest in some 276 miles of railway, and undoubtedly has greatly extended this investment as have other companies cited in Robert W. Dunn's book on American Foreign Investments.

Controlled by Wall Street.

THE National Bank of Nicaragua up to 1924 was openly controlled by Brown Brothers and company and W. Seligman and company of New York. It was formally in that year bought back by the Nicaraguan government under the rule of the dictator and U. S. lackey, Emiliano Chamorro, but three Americans still remain in the directorate and Wall Street unquestionably rules Nicaraguan finance.

Over 70 per cent of the foreign trade of Nicaragua is conducted with the United States, and a host of corporations have concessions in the fruit, mining, lumber, public utilities, sugar, power and other industries, while the smell of petroleum has given a flock of oil vultures concessions for development of this basic cause for imperialist aggression. The National Railway of Nicaragua is formally owned by the government, but is managed by J. G. White and company of New York. The list of lesser interests is quite lengthy.

WITH each concession and loan, it must be remembered, Wall Street insists on such guarantees as having control of the government financial machinery, the right to share in the government directing body, to examine customs receipts and generally to boss things through a host of agents and "advisors."

The present revolution came about as follows: Some years ago an election was held under which a so-called "progressive alliance" was placed in power, with Carlo Solorsano, a Conservative, as president, and Juan Bautista Sacasa, a Liberal, as vice-president. Solorzano, however, was merely a figurehead for the active tool of U. S. imperialism, one Emiliano Chamorro, who in 1923 and with the help of Solorsano, overthrew the constitutional government and by the grossest fraud had himself "elected" as president.

Resorted to Arms.

UNDER the Nicaraguan law, Vice-president Sacasa should have been installed as president upon the resignation, forced or otherwise, of the president. Therefore, the Liberal party, which clearly has the support of the majority of Nicaraguans, claimed the presidency for Juan B. Sacasa. Failing in all peaceful efforts to dislodge Chamorro from power the Liberals have resorted to arms

Chamorro, after seizing power, well knew that Sacasa, backed by the population, would strive to depose him. Hence, he calmly proceeded to summon his clique in a "congress" and had a decree issued against Sacasa, charging him with "conspiracy against the peace and security of the state." This forced Sacasa to flee to the neighboring government of Guatemala for refuge, while the Liberal party continued to re-establish the constitutional regime and place the fugitive vice-president in power.

Must Save Its Face.

THE United States, which welcomed the rule of Chamorro as a servile instrument for imperialist ventures, was placed in an advantageous position, with the exception that it could not very well give the Chamorro government official recognition. This was because the Washington government had signed a treaty with other Latin American countries pledging not to recognize any government which seized power by force and not by being regularly elected. Wall Street needed the formality of an elected government.

The last few months developed a crisis in which the United States could no longer just let things drift, while maintaining its rule through Chamorro unofficially, although it must be said that the ubiquitous U. S. Marines were ever present to aid the ever-present "American investors." But the Liberals began a serious revolt and recently seemed on the point of pushing Senor Chamorro and his followers into the briny ocean. Secretary Kellogg immediately became "excited" at the "menace to peace and order"—and Yankee imperialism.

ABOUT the time the Liberal army was seizing the town of Bluefields on the east coast, the U. S navy was ordered to land marines and take over that territory. Although Coolidge had decreed an embargo on arms to Nicaragua, a whole shipload was allowed to leave New York harbor to aid Chamorro

—a flat violation by the United States of its own rules.

Dennis Get Busy.

To save itself, American imperialism was forced to save its tool, Chamorro. The U. S charge d'affaires, Lawrence Dennis, got busy on one hand "negotiating" between Chamorro and the Liberals, and on the other hand brazenly threatening the Liberals with American occupation and open war if they did not "accept" peace.

DENNIS forced the Liberals to meet Chamorro on board a U. S. warship in a "conference" during which Dennis openly acted as Chamorro's protector and read the Liberals' an ultimatum from the Washington government demanding a stop to their attempt to reestablish constitutional government by force of arms. Dennis demanded that the Liberals accept one Adolfo Dias, a Chamorro follower, as president, and threatened the Liberals with more warships and more marines if they did not cease fighting for the government.

The Liberals naturally resented this bull-dozing and bolted the conference with a promise to resume fighting, come what may. About this time the United States suddenly found a need to raise the image of some vague "peril" which would give grace to the intended crushing of little Nicaragua under the heel of the "Colossus of the North." A scare was quickly spread on the front pages of U. S. newspapers of "Mexican Bolshevism" and its "interference" in Nicaragua.

Mexican Progressives Sympathetic.

IT is undoubtedly true that progressive elements in Mexico, which have long been terrorized by American imperialism, sympathize with the Liberal attempt to oust Chamorro. But it is questionable if Mexico has intervened in their support officially if at all. The arms supplied to the Liberals have probably been sold by the same New York munitions corporation as that sell the mio Chamorro. Such are the ethics of munitioners.

But Secretary Kellogg has recently waxed indignant at this supposed Mexican "interference," in such self-righteous way as to be amusing in view of his own clear aggression against the Nicaraguan people with warships, diplomatic threats and marines landed to "protect" American interests.

UNITED STATES Charge d'Affaire Lawrence Dennis has actively bossed the Chamorro regime. Following the collapse of the "conference," Dennis ordered Chamorro to summon his hand-picked "congress" and brazenly nominated Adolfo Dias as Chamorro's successor, promising in advance that the U. S. would recognize Dias as soon as he was "elected."

This was carried out, and the moment Dias was "chosen" president, the U. S. government recognized his government, while Diaz replied in kind by asking the U. S. to send a force of U. S. army officers to take over his army and help crush the Liberal revolt. Another immediate effect was the arranging of a loan with Wall Street bankers, $300,000 being given to Diaz as once on a loan which is to total $6,000,000.

Yet the Washington government has the audacity to propagandize the American people with indignant protests at Mexican "interference" in Nicaragua!

Gunboat diplomacy is not expected to show any signs of conscience at its violation of sovereignty of weak little nations of Latin America, but under Coolidge it seems to have lost its sense of humor as well

THE contributions to the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund must be boosted by $3,365 on Monday and Tuesday in order to reach the half-way mark in raising the $50,000 fund to Keep The DAILY WORKER.

The contributions received by The DAILY WORKER during the latter part of last week show a falling off in the work for the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund. $1,500 was received during the first three days of the week and only $500 for the last three days.

IT seems that the supporters of The DAILY WORKER wished to give The DAILY WORKER something to be thankful for before Thanksgiving Day, and let up in their effort to boost the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund. The DAILY WORKER would have been more thankful if the returns for the week-end had kept up to the pace during the first three days of the week.

The DAILY WORKER is still in danger. The work of raising the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund has not gone forward fast enough to overcome the crisis against which The DAILY WORKER is struggling. The Keep The DAILY WORKER campaign has been under way for ten weeks. If the fund had been completed during these ten weeks The DAILY WORKER would have overcome the dangerous financial situation and had a reserve for the future. The fact that only $21,635.89 was raised during these ten weeks has left The DAILY WORKER little better off than at the beginning of the campaign for the deficit during these ten weeks has used up the funds raised.

[illegible] poll The DAILY WORKER out of this situation the work of raising the balance of the $50,000 fund must be taken up with greater energy. It is only if all the party members and supporters of The DAILY WORKER are mobilized for an intensive drive to raise the balance of the fund during the next months, that we can win the struggle to Keep The DAILY WORKER.

THUS far the Keep The DAILY WORKER campaign has been without organized support, except in two or three districts of the party. The prompt organization of Keep The DAILY WORKER committees in every unit of the party and the greatest activities of these committees to organize support for and collect the Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund is the requirement of the hour.

WE MUST COMPLETE THE $50,000 FUND TO KEEP THE DAILY WORKER.

WE MUST IMMEDIATELY ORGANIZE THE FULL STRENGTH OF THE PARTY FOR THE WORK OF RAISING THE BALANCE OF THE FUND.

WE MUST SEE THAT EVERY MEMBER OF THE PARTY RAISES THE $5.00 QUOTA HE HAS BEEN ASSESSED TO RAISE FOR THE KEEP THE DAILY WORKER FUND.

THESE ARE MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS TO KEEP THE DAILY WORKER AS THE VOICE OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WORKERS' MOVEMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.

HUGE MEETING LAUDS FIGHT ON FRAME-UP

"Sacco and Vanzetti Must Not Die!"

A slender figure speaking in the monotonous singsong which is the Chinese language to the American ear, brought to the 3,000 workers assembled in Ashland Auditorium Friday night under auspices of the Chicago conference to protest the legal murder of Sacco and Vanzetti, the greeting and pledge of support of 250,000,000 workers and peasants organized behind the Canton (Kuomintang) government.

Sze Toa Chan, minister of education of the Cantoo government, in the United States on an official mission, personifying at this great working class meeting the second greatest mass force in the world today, speaking in the name of a government which is the mighty arm of the Chinese liberation movement that already has restored three-fifths of China to its people after wresting it from the world's imperialists, was living proof, given in a dramatic form that the labor movement experiences too seldom, of the globe-encircling sweep of the movement represented by the International Labor Defense.

Perfect quiet, in which one could hear only the words of the speaker and the breathing of one's neighbor, broken finally by the stormiest burst of applause of the evening, was evidence furnished by the audience that without anything other than the simple sentences of Sze Toa Chan it had sensed the tremendous importance to labor of the things he said—and represented.

Flynn Outlines Program.

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, national chairman of the International Labor Defense, probably the most brilliant and convincing woman speaker in America, following Sze Toa Chan, took the enthusiastic audience and gave it concrete expression. She brought greetings from the meeting of 13,000 workers in Madison Square Garden, organized by the New York Sacco-Vanzetti conference as well as greetings from Sacco and Vanzetti

"Liberty or Death!"

"Sacco and Vanzetti," she said, "have refused to appeal for a commutation of their death sentence to life imprisonment. They realize that they are no longer individuals but that they have come to symbolize the martyrdom of the masses. They have now after six and one-half years of incredible suffering, always in the shadow of the electric chair, 'give as liberty or give us death!'

"They know that their deaths at the hands of the state of Massachusetts will be something of far more importance than the death of two Italian workers. It will be the American labor movement that will go to the electric chair together with Sacco and Vanzetti."

National Conference Endorsed.

Elisabeth Gurley Flynn outlined the plans for a national Sacco-Vanzetti conference to coincide with the ruling of the Massachusetts supreme court on the new appeal which, she said, "we know now will simply uphold the decision of Judge Thayer so that the face of the state courts can be saved."

"Sacco and Vanzetti must not die but only labor can save them," the speaker concluded, and the applause

JAPANESE WHO KILLED SOCIALIST, WOMAN AND CHILD, IS OUT OF JAIL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TOKYO, Nov. 28.—After serving but three years of the very lenient sentence of seven and a half years, Captain Amakasu is free. His crime was that of strangling to death, just after the earthquake of 1923, a socialist, his woman companion, and the women's ten-year-old nephew. He left the prison in disguise, fearing vengeance. His plea in defense at the time of his trial was that he felt it his duty to kill the socialist and his companion, and that he then killed the child as being a witness to the first crime. Captain Amakasu, it is reliably reported, has never heard of the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

1,400 MINERS ON STRIKE IN WILKES-BARRE

Company Refuses to Adjust Grievances

By a Worker Correspondent.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Nov. 28.—Fourteen hundred miners at the Prospect and Henry mines of the Lehigh Valley Coal company have gone on strike following refusal of the company to adjust grievances arising out of the leading of coal cars. The workers have been docked from two to three cars of coal a week because of the method of loading required by the company.

The miners demand that topping of loaded cars be six inches from the face, instead of at the breaker, a practice which now allows much coal to fall off the cars, for which the workers receive no pay.

Refuse to Meet Committee.

When the company refused to meet the local union's grievance committee the strike was called. The company officials declared they would meet only with Rinaldo Cappellini, President of District No. 1, United Mine Workers. Cappellini was invited by the local union to attend the special meeting, and after promising to attend failed to show up.

Cappellini Denounced.

Cappellini's action and the declaration of the company that they would meet Cappellini in ceasing feeling to run high here against the district president. He is charged with being more friendly to the company than to the unionists.

The local union officials declare the men will remain on strike until their demands are met and the local committee recognized.

The Passaic Textile Mill Owners Can Be Beaten

THE mill owners of Passaic, undoubtedly with the advice and aid of their agents in the labor movement, are making strenuous efforts to settle the strike without conceding the right to organize to the great majority of the workers.

We are in possession of information that today the Botany mill will post notices of a ten per cent increase in wages.

Other information which is in line with recent attempts to make a settlement on the basis of organization of skilled workers such as loomfixers and spinners in the Botany mills, leaving the unskilled workers who are the majority of the strikers out of consideration, points conclusively to an extremely unhealthy condition in the official conduct of the strike.

This policy, which would amount in practice to the creation of a separate local union of the United Textile Workers, composed of skilled strikebreakers now in the mills, means to demoralize the strike completely, drive a wedge between skilled and unskilled and to sacrifice the unskilled workers who have been the backbone of the strike, for a union which could be nothing more than a company union from the start.

The offer of a ten per cent increase by the Botany (whose advertisement, by the way, is still carried by the official organ of the U. T. W. and the American Federationist) is an indication that the mill owners have weakened and with the improvement in business conditions in the textile industry, they want their working forces back in the mills.

But they are not yet willing to concede the right to organize and guarantee no discrimination against strikers.

The task of the U. T. W. officials in charge of the strike is to explain this to the workers, start a new offensive against the millowners by intensifying and extending the strike, and put forward the demands mentioned above.

It is necessary to strengthen the strike lines, see that no stampede into the mills takes place on the part of workers who after ten months of struggle may be fooled by the ten per cent increase into believing in the good intentions of the textile capitalists.

The Passaic strike can be won if the U. T. W. leadership will put forward a militant program and set in motion energetically in the whole labor movement the relief machinery which can bring in the money and supplies necessary if it is used to its capacity with full official support.

Above all there must be no desertion of the mass of unskilled textile workers whose struggle has made a new and glorious chapter in American labor history.

Let there be an end to the playing of politics in the ranks of the two capitalist parties in Washington, let President Green of the American Federation of Labor and President McMahon of the United Textile Workers come to the Passaic battlefield, pledge the full support of the trade union movement to a mass meeting of the strikers, carry out this pledge in letter and spirit, and the strike will be won.

GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES IN FIGHT FOR SUPREMACY BALK CAPITALIST STABILIZATION

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 28.—"Two important obstacles to the stabilization of world capitalism are the antagonistic fight for world supremacy between the United States and Great Britain and the decomposition of the British Empire," said M. N. Roy, delegate from the Communist Party of India to the enlarged session of the executive committee of the Communist International.

Roy declared that the imperial conference just concluded in London was unable to solve the difficulties attendant upon the adjustment of internal imperial relations and that the English bourgeoisie were forced to make concessions to the dominions on the question of their independence. In the colonies, India and Egypt, other new conflicts of interest are looming.

The essential element, said Roy, of the revolutionary situation is the world fact that the growth of these imperialist weaknesses and rivalries between imperialist nations result in international wars that force civil war in all capitalist countries.

Vja, 41, cigar store clerk; Wingfield Merrihill, 23, clerk; Steven Varmillion, 23, clerk; Christian Vogel, 44, restaurant steward; Chester F. Parker, 40, salesman; Henry J. Briggs, 36, architect; Vernan Snow, 30, artist; Alfonso E. Parker, 42, merchant.

Use your brains and your pen to aid the workers in the class struggle.

REVOLUTIONISTS IN DRIVE DOWN YANGTZE VALLEY

Anwhei Province Fled by Sun's Troops

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HANKOW, Nov. 28.—Another victory has been added to the achievements of the Canton revolutionary army in its march down the Yangtze Kian river valley toward Shanghai, the present military objective of the young General Chiang Kai Shek. Anking, capital of Anwhei Province, was abandoned by Marshal Sun Chuan Fang and adds another large stretch of former militarist-controlled territory to the increasing jurisdiction of the Canton republican government, soon to be moved to Wuchang.

After weeks of effort to halt the advance of the Cantonese down the Yangtze between Kiukiang and Anking, Sun's troops duplicated the route which was the lot of Wu Pei Fu when he was forced to abandon the great centers of Hankow and Wuchang. Shanghai is now in the range of operation of the Cantonese armies and its fall is confidently expected by the revolutionary general staff.

Food Problem for Foreigners.

HANKOW, Nov. 28. The long continued strike of workers in Shanghai directed against foreign domination and which has seriously handicapped the activities of foreigners in cities along the sea coast, have spread up the Yangtze Valley to Hankow and Wuchang and now perilously threaten the foreign communities in both these latter cities with having to [illegible] The chief difficulty of maintaining these concessions in the face of the strikes is the problem of food and servants.

Commerce Chamber Meets.

In Hankow, the executive committee of the American Chamber of Commerce met with the United States Consul General Frank P. Lockhart and Rear-Admiral Henry H. Hough, commander of the Yangtze patrol to devise means of continuing the food supply to the foreign concessions cut off by the strike of food-handlers and servants. A meeting of British business men expressed doubt as to their ability to hold out against the inability to procure supplies.

The British decided upon sending appeals to Shanghai for food and to establish a community food store. But even these plans are rendered doubtful of execution by the military campaign of the Cantonese down the

Duluth Labor Acts for Iron Miners, Victims of Disaster

DULUTH, Minn., Nov. 28.—The frequently recurring disasters in the iron mines of Minnesota and Michigan has moved the Duluth Trades and Labor Assembly to action. A resolution passed by the head of the lakes city labor body condemns the innumerable mine accidents as preventable and charges the death of hundreds of miners to the negligence of the iron companies, most of them subsidiary to the United States Steel Corporation.

The resolution makes particular reference to the unjust settlement made by the Oliver Mine Co. to the men who were entombed for 121 hours in the Pabst mine in Ironwood, Mich. It supports the move made by a group of Ironwood sympathizers, among whom are lawyers and newspaper men for a federal investigation, and petitions Minnesota senators and congressmen to bring the matter to the attention of Washington authorities.

NINETEEN BANKS IN TWO COUNTIES OF IOWA CLOSE DOORS IN ONE DAY; DEPOSITORS WILL LOSE MILLIONS

DES MOINES, Iowa, Nov. 28.—Nineteen banks in Kossuth and Polo Alto counties did not open for business Friday, the state banking department announced.

The closed institutions include state, national and private institutions.

No official estimate of the amount of money on deposit in the closed institutions was available today, but unofficial estimates placed the amount in the millions.

The closing of the banks, according to reports to the state banking department, was the result of a concerted action on the part of bankers in two counties. It is stated that the action is purely local.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

AN Anglo-German coal war is prophesied by the Westminster Gazette in fact the war is on now. While the British capitalists were burning up money to defeat the miners the German coal owners were busy capturing British coal markets. They intend to keep them. This is how wars are bred. The British capitalists will soon learn that the luxury of defeating the miners was a costly one.

HAD the workers of other countries supported the British miners as the Soviet workers did, the British mine strike would have smashed the coal owners and world labor would be immensely strengthened. As it is the miners suffered defeat and capitalists all over the world will take the defeat as a suggestion to cut wages. Already in the non-union mine fields of the United States the employers have announced that the finish of the British strike forces them to reduce wages. There you are! Even from the pure bread and butter standpoint international solidarity is a paying proposition.

CLOAKMAKERS OF N. Y. DENOUNCE RIGHT WINGERS

General Strike Committee Issues Defy

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The general strike committee of the Cloak and Dress Makers' Union of New York has issued an official statement which answers the attacks of the right wing Jewish Daily Forward and its satellites in the needle trade unions with regard to the settlement just concluded by the cloakmakers after 19 weeks of struggle with the bosses.

The statement begins by pointing to the chains that were forged on the membership by the former right wing administration of the New York Joint Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and the international officials of that union by allowing a stain body, known as the governor's commission, to decide on wage and condition terms for the cloakmakers.

The struggle of the 40,000 strikers in New York was as much a fight against compulsory arbitration as represented by the governor's commission as it was for better working conditions and higher wages. The strike, in addition to other gains referred to in the statement, freed the cloak-

SHEFFIELD GOES TO STAGE BREAK, MEXICAN CHARGE

Wall St. Envoy Lands in Capital

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 28.—Ambassador James Sheffield has returned to Mexico for the purpose of being able to stage a dramatic diplomatic departure when the crisis between the United States and Mexico is precipitated by the operation of the oil and land laws for the first time on January 1, is the opinion in political circles here.

Only a minor attache of the Mexican foreign office was at the train to greet the ambassador when he arrived here and went, accompanied by the U. S. American staff, directly to the U. S. embassy building. He announced he would make the usual formal call at the Mexican foreign office and would ask for an audience with President Calles.

Fights For Bosses.

Aside from the questions of the oil laws and the Nicaraguan situation, Sheffield is expected to bring up the matter of new labor regulations contained in a bill before the senate. American contractors and employers have protested against the "preference to labor" shown by the bill which has already passed the chamber of deputies and now waits confirmation in the senate.

Sheffield announced that he brot no new notes with him from Washington. But it is expected he will enter into immediate conversations with the Calles government concerning the oil and land laws. He is faced with a complicated situation with regard to the stand of the United States on the oil laws due to the fact that some large foreign oil companies have already registered their willingness to take out concessions in place of their title deeds as provided for in the legislation on the subject.

British Companies Sign.

Two big companies controlled by the Royal Dutch Shell group, El Aguila and La Corona, are reliably reported to have applied for the fifty-year concessions demanded by Mexican law to replace the fee simple titles of ownership now held. This is expected to make the situation of the large American companies, notably Standard Oil, somewhat embarrassing. They have declared their intention of not applying for concessions. According to the law, companies not registering their willingness to take the 50-year concession arrangement in place of the titles they now hold, run the risk of having their properties denounced and taken over by the state.

London Plays Game.

The move of the British companies is taken as a thrust at their American competitors whose operations are likely to be suspended after December 31, because of the stand they have taken. British interests in Mexico, it must be understood, are no more friendly to the oil laws than are Wall Street interests. But the rivalry between them is sharp and the American companies' holdings are much larger and have offered keen competition to the British. British diplomacy appears to be playing a game of its own while Wall Street is forcing an open fight which is expected to find its echo in the recall of Sheffield when the first denouncement takes place subsequent to Jan. first.

MAINE MESS IS WORRISOME TO G. O. P. LEADERS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Charges of corruption against Arthur R. Gould, republican candidate for the United States senate to be elected Monday in Maine, normally a republican state, are worrying republican leaders here.

If Gould is defeated it will be a severe blow to the republicans as Maine is always declared to be the "barometer state." And if Gould is elected, it will mean a slush fund investigation by the senate, which is equally as displeasing. So the G. O. P. leaders here see no relief in the situation.

Effects Senate Vote.

The election in Maine is doubly important because of the present alignment in the senate of parties, that the voting strength of the two old line parties is about equal.

Gould is charged with spending too much money for campaign expenses. He was cleared of the charge by the Maine election commission, but the stigma remains and may contribute to his defeat. However, he must still face a senate investigation. Fulton J. Redman, is his democratic opponent. He is known to have the support of the ku klux klan.

THE battle over the annulment of the Duke of Marlborough's marriage to Consuelo Vanderbilt continues. It looks like a first class fictional fight. The pope seems to think that title is the sixteenth century and does not recognize the legality of any marriage that is not solemnized to the tune of holy water and a goodly check. Since the Vanderbilt-Marlborough marriage was cinched in an episcopal church, episcopal clergymen are angry with the pope for having intervened. This hurts business. If an episcopal clergyman cannot give a satisfactory guarantee that a marriage solemnized to that church can stand up in court, business is liable to fall off and the old feed bag is liable to get slack.

SOVIET UNION MAKES CHANGES IN STATE POSTS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 28.—The death of Leonid Krassin is expected to be the occasion for considerable reshifting of domestic and foreign posts in the Soviet Union. It is believed that George Sokolnikov, former commissar of finance and a leader in the opposition in the Communist Party, will succeed Krassin.

Others mentioned in this connection are Maxim Litvinov, acting commissar of foreign affairs; Simeon Aralov, and Boris Stomonjakov, both members of the foreign affairs presidium.

Zinoviav Placad.

Gregory Zinoviev, whose resignation as chairman of the Communist International, has recently been accepted, is in line for the post of member of the presidium of the state planning commission, replacing Adolf Joffe. Leo Kamenev, associated with Zinoviev in the opposition group that was defeated at the last congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, will be appointed ambassador to Italy in place of Platon Kerjenzev, the present incumbent.

M. Lashevitch, formerly assistant commissar of war and navy has been made assistant manager of the Chinese Eastern Railway, while G. Piatakov, former vice-chairman of the supreme economic council is slated for work in Amerca, the Soviet state trading organization in the United States. Pavel Ankeev is to replace Yakov Ganson as trade commissioner to Japan and Joseph Friedrich is to take Akim Nikolaev's place as commissar to Norway.

Passaic Strike Shows Autocracy in America, Holmes Tells Forum

John Haynes Holmes, in speaking on the Passaic strike at the Chicago Forum Sunday, declared that the strike revealed that America is endangered by an autocracy of industrialists just as the old world suffered from autocrats.

Holmes declared that the workers of the United States should form a labor Party of their own, similar to that of Great Britain, in order that social evils be eradicated.

The speaker gave a vivid picture of the strike, presenting facts which led up to it. He praised Albart Wainbord, the leader, highly. He also severely condemned the American Federation of Labor for its attitude on the strike and for its failure to organize the textile workers.

was an eloquent testimonial, that in endorsing the resolution read by Anton Johannsen, chairman of the meeting, pledging full support to the Sacco-Vanzetti campaign, the audience had meant what it said.

John Fitzpatrick Pledges Support

John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, read the various actions of the American Federation of Labor in support of a new trial for Sacco and Vanzatti, welcomed the united support of which the meeting was evidence and pledged the Chicago trade union movement to the campaign.

Clayton Morrison, editor of the Christian Century, made an eloquent and scholarly address in which he reviewed the legal history of the case. He stated that he regretted the failure of the churches to take a more active part in the campaign to secure justice for Sacco and Vanzetti and congratulated the workers on their determined efforts to prevent their murder without a new trial.

Vincenzo Vacirca, representing the Anti-Fascist Alliance, made an able address in Italian, comparing the persecution of Sacco and Vanzetti with the tactics of Mussolini.

Ovation for Communist Message.

Letters pledging support for the Sacco-Vanzetti campaign were read from many labor, fraternal and political organizations among them being one from C. E. Ruthenberg, general secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party which evoked tremendous applause from the audience.

A collection was taken up to finance the work of the Chicago Sacco-Vanzetti conference and a generous response was made.

Elizabath Gurley Flynn, routed under the auspices of the International Labor Defense, left Chicago after the meeting for a two months' tour during which she will make a very large city in America, hold mass meetings and do organization work for the Sacco-Vanzetti defense conference.

THIRD DEGREE OF NEW JERSEY STRIKERS TOLD

Defense Organizations Set Forth the Facts

By HOLLACE RANDSELL,
Federated Press

PASSAIC, N. J., Nov. 28.—(FP)—Accusations against the police of the Passaic textile district, startling to anyone not familiar with the labor history of this country, are contained in a pamphlet soon to be issued by the joint committee for Passaic defense.

This committee, organized jointly by the American Civil Liberties Union and the International Labor Defense, has just announced the beginning of a national campaign for the defense of the prisoners of the Passaic strike.

Since the week of September 21 there have been held in the Passaic and Bergen county jails eleven men arrested on charges arising out of the strike. Six of the men, all married and under 26 years of age, are in the Passaic county jail in bail aggregaton under $210,000 hail. The other five, two of them boys 18 and 21, are in Hackensack jail, of Bergen county, under $80,000.

Rough Handling.

Statements of these eleven men, made in jail to their counsel and to officials from union headquarters, and gathered by the committee's pamphlet describe the third degree treatment given to the men by the police.

Paul Oznik, an active member of the union and a leader on the Forstmann and Huffman mills picket line, before his arrest, is quoted as saying:

"The detectives jumped on me, kicked me any place they could punched, blackjacked and pummelled me until I was weak and dizzy. Then they gave me a paper to sign. They told me if I would not sign they would beat me up worse. I signed, but I cannot read or write English, so I do not know what I signed."

William Sabora, the shy, inoffensive father of five children related his experience in these words:

"They took me into the police station and started to ask questions, and every time I answered they said I lied, and struck me in the face, knocking out two of my teeth and bruising my face and body with blows and kicks. After a few minutes of this treatment, I don't remember anything."

Cripple Striker.

The story of how young Tony Picchino, once jolly and good-looking, had his nose smashed and his hearing impaired by Paterson police while companions in jail. He, himself, they say, has been a little "queer" ever since. The beatings Picchino was used by the police as a ample for the other prisoners of what would be done to them, if they didn't say yes when the police demanded.

Charles Curran, not a striker himself, but unlucky enough to have a cousin who is, gives this account:

"In the police station, detectives punched and kicked me anywhere they could. They did not care what they did. I was beaten up three times. I do not remember anything after that. I don't know why this happened then. I did not care what happened to me. I was in this dazed condition for four days."

80 Cases Pending.

The campaign started by the joint committee for Passaic Defense will raise funds not only for these 11 prisoners, but also for the 80 other cases now pending on appeal, among them the case of Albert Weisbord, former strike leader, now out on $10,000 bail. It will also care for the cases which come up daily and which are a big drain on the union treasury. To date there have been 80 arrests, and $27,063 paid out in fines.

Contributions for the defense of the 11 prisoners, and others arrested in the textile strike, should be sent to the headquarters of the joint committee for Passaic Defense, Room 14, 743 Main Avenue, Passaic, N. J., Hollace Ransdell secretary.

Denies Federal Power to Control Production of Oil and Gas in U. S.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—John H. Brennan, chief counsel for the Barnedall Oil corporation, denies the power of the federal government to exercise control over the production of oil and gas under the interstate commerce clause of the constitution. Brennan made this statement following the announcement by Secretary of Commerce Hoover that the anti-trust laws should be amended to allow oil companies to combine in order to "preserve" resources in times of overproduction.

Brennan says such an amendment is not necessary, as the government has nothing to say in the matter, anyway. He contends that the states alone have jurisdiction, and oil production is not a matter for interstate commerce.

Leonid Krassin, Soviet Diplomat, Able Soldier of Social Revolution

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

LEONID Borisovitch Krassin is dead. Fourteen days of harrowing have been declared thruout the Union of Soviet Republics. Thus does the revolution do honer to one of its Bolshevik soldiers.

Krassin died in London, on the field of battle of Soviet diplomacy, where he had helped achieve one of the big "peace" triumphs of the Workers' Republic, the forcing of the proud British empire into the Anglo-Russian trade treaty and the recognition of the Soviet Union.

When the social revolution, born in Russia, failed to spread immediately to other lands, the workers' victory had need of such men as Krassin to meet with the diplomatic agents of the capitalist nations. Soviet diplomacy has been charged by the profit world with trying to compromise Communism, with trying to pave the way for the return of capitalism to Russia. This will no doubt be the thema of the capitalist editorial writers in commenting on Krassin's death. It is well, therefore, to quote Krassin's own views on this subject. He said:

"As we recede from wartime conditions and advance towards reconstruction and peace, we proceed toward a business-like adaptation of our methods to those of real life. WE CALL IT NEITHER GOING TO THE RIGHT NOR TO THE LEFT. Whatever reports we may receive here, I am sure that Lenin will never abandon his Communist principles, but as he is a practical man with a practical mind, he may decide in one matter or another to take a practical course with regard to present-day conditions."

Thus Krassin set forth the task of the Soviet diplomat, who, thru carrying on relations with capitalist nations abroad, does everything possible to strengthen workers' rule at home.

It was the late Samuel Gompers, as head of the American Federation of Labor, who led his attack against the Soviet Union, who united Krassin, and thus paid tribute to him, to show that the Soviet Union was not being swerved away from the path toward Communism in its dealings with enemy capitalist countries. Gompers, loyal defender of capitalism, issued his "warning" to the Wall Street government at Washington, in his ceaseless struggle to prevent American recognition of the Soviet Union. President William Green, his successor, continues the campaign.

Krassin was always close to Lenin. It was in an article published in May, 1924, in the "Russia Pictorial" that Krassin pointed out Lenin's attitude on the foreign trade monopoly and concessions under the new economic policy. Krassin wrote:

"With the extension of the new economic policy and the growth of Russian exports of raw materials, a new danger arose. During private enterprise in Russia clamored for removal of the state monopoly of foreign trade. The pressure of capitalist interests, issued in the same direction. The position became very dangerous, and to whom would one turn if not to Vladimir Ilyitch.

"Vladimir Ilyitch resumed the chairmanship of the Council of People's Commissars in October, 1922, but he was still ill. Altho he was confined to his room, he insisted on seeing me, and when I had discussed the whole dangerous position, he said in a serious tone, 'We must act.' From that moment I felt that the foreign trade monopoly was saved. He himself studied all the material and wrota a letter giving his views, in the course of which he said:

"'The question is this—is the foreign trade commissariat to work in the interests of the 'Nepman,' or is it to work in the interests of the proletarian State? This is the important question which must be considered by the party congress.'

"We foresaw that if export of raw materials was permitted, there would appear in the villages the worst of exploiters, the speculative purchaser acting as an agent of foreign capital. Our opponents pointed out that we allowed the entrance of foreign capital in the form of concessions. Lenin answered:

"'No such results follow from the concessions, where we not only control the territory but also hold in our hands the trade in the articles which are the subject of the concessions.'"

It is necessary to emphasize the adamant attitude of Soviet rule toward world capitalism, on the occasion of Krassin's death, since the whole propaganda of the enemy press has been directed toward spreading the poison that Soviet diplomacy is some form of Machiavellian deception that really works against the revolution and in favor of capitalism. Krassin's whole career as a Soviet diplomat gives the lie to this propaganda. Soviet diplomacy is revealed instead as one of the necessary factors in developing the social revolution and strengthening it in that part of the world, where it has already gained a foothold, while capitalism prevails as an enemy force elsewhere.

Krassin joined the revolution in 1891 while still a student. He was arrested while an undergraduate at the St Petersburg Technical School and was sent to Siberia. Much of his time thereafter was spent between jail and exile. The triumph of the Bolshevik revolution in 1917 found him in Moscow as engineer for a large concern. He immediately associated himself with Lenin in helping to create the Soviet government.

He accompanied Lenin and Trotsky when they went to Brest-Litovsk to negotiate the peace treaty with Germany. He became food commissar for the Red Army.

As early as May, 1918, the Swedish legation at Petrograd knew Leningrad began looking for trade with Russia. Later, in 1920, Krassin signed a private treaty with a Swedish Exporters' Association. Similarly the Danish government was active in seeking trade in 1918, and in April, 1920, a private agreement was drawn up at Copenhagen between Krassin and Danish banking and industrial elements. In 1922 Krassin was elected a member of the central executive committee of the All-Russian Soviet Congress.

Krassin was a member of the Soviet delegation at the Genoa conference, in April, 1922, during which the important Rapello treaty was concluded with Germany. Other members of the delegation were Chicherin, Litvinov, Joffe, Vorovsky and Rakovsky. Chicherin is now commissar of foreign affairs, with Litvinov closely associated with him. Joffe is in Japan and Rakovsky in Paris. Vorovsky was assassinated in Switzerland during the Geneva conference, in which the Soviet Union had been invited to participate.

It was also as Soviet commissar of foreign trade and commerce that Krassin worked to break down the capitalist blockade against the Soviet Union. He visited the various capitals of Europe opening trade negotiations. He became the Soviet ambassador to Paris and later changed places with Rakovsky at London.

The role of a Soviet diplomat in London has been a difficult one. Forged copies of Communist newspapers in the Soviet Union and forged "Zinoviev letters" as instruments of anti-Soviet propaganda, continuous complaints against "Bolshevik propaganda" in India and other treasured British colonial possessions, and lastly the bitter complaint of the British ruling class against the millions of dollars of strike relief sent by the workers of the Soviet Union in aid of the British miners' struggle, have kept the relations of Moscow and London continuously before the workers of the world.

Concerning the results of this clash of rieing Communism with disintegrating capitalism, we have but to quote again from an attack by Gompers on Krassin, in which the American "labor lieutenant of capitalism" declared:

"There can be no doubt that the Soviet-British trade agreement was a tremendous victory for Soviet prestige, both in Russia and in every country of the world."

Soviet diplomacy is a strong weapon in the armory of the social revolution. Krassin knew how to wield that weapon as an able soldier of the social revolution.

14 ARRESTED BY BRITISH, HANDED TO MILITARISTS

Chinese Students Face Murder by War Lords

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker)
From Intl. Press Correspondence

BERLIN, Nov. 28. — The Berlin bureau of international Press Correspondence has just received the following telegram from Pekin:

"The People's Tribune carries a front page story in its issue of Saturday telling of the arrest by British police in the British concession at Tientsin of fourteen young students all members of the Kuomintang. Following instructions from the British Embassy in Pekin, the students were handed over to the Chinese militarists. This, the Pekin paper points out, is in the present situation cold-blooded murder by British authorities because they know only too well the fatesof Communists after they fall into the hands of Chang Tso Lin and Wu Pei Fu's officers.

"This deed, the Tribune continues, exposes British real policy in China and is decidedly unhelpful to the hopes of better relations between Nationalist China and England. The British ambassador has handed over Kuomintangers to the militarist hangmen altho their only crime was membership in the Kuomintang party and devotion to the fight for a united, independent China, observes the paper.

"The Tribune declares that the only conclusion to be drawn from the incident is that an agreement exists between the militarists and the British for delivery of Chinese revolutionaries into the former's hands.

"Revolutionary China will neither forget nor forgive this deed of Englands," says the nationalist organ.

It also asks the following questions: Does England want to destroy the last possibility of an understanding with the new nationalist China? Must Chinese reactionaries have found safe refuge in the British concessions in Hankow Kiukiang and other cities what does England say of this? And how will the British government explain its infamous deeds to the British workers?

Revolutionaries in Drive Down Yangtze Valley

Yangtze and the possibility of connection with Shanghai being cut off.

Nature is to some extent with the Chinese insofar as the recession of the Yangtze river at this time of the year will not allow the British and American ships to proceed farther up the river as Wuchang. The last American destroyer, the Pillsbury has departed from Wuchang to escape the low water. Hereafter there will be no destroyers sent above Wuhu near the top of the Yangtze delta, the farthest point inland they will be able to reach until the water rises again next year.

While the river gunboats of the powers may still operate, they are unwieldy and are confined for more stationary service to ports in which there are foreign concessions. All of which makes the problem of easing for the foreign representatives of European and American capitalists extremely difficult. The present situation indicates that many of the inland concessions will have to be abandoned.

Hits "Waste Basket" News.

SHANGHAI—That America is supporting, as well as consuming locality into news is implied in remarks made here by the former governor of Kansas, Henry J. Allen. He says the Chinese are being fed with "waste basket" news from the United States consisting largely of crime, movie or sport items, and the outpourings of cheap politicians, giving the Chinese a distorted view of Americanism, disregarding the fact that the service on news from America is a sample of what this country consumes in large quantities. The fault he attributes largely to the prevailing cable rate of 40 cents a word.

He also charged that America is prevented from having radio connection with China by a diplomatic blocking by Britain and Japan.

BORAH TO TALK TO OWNERS ON PASSAIC STRIKE

Rumor He Will Hold Them to Pledge

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—Senator Wm. E. Borah, republican of Idaho, is expected to stop in New York City on Friday to confer with owners of New Jersey textile mills concerning a settlement of the Passaic strike. It is said that while Senator Borah is for the moment devoting his time chiefly to the duties of the present election campaign, he is still very much interested in the New Jersey strike. It will be while he is on his way to campaign for Senator Moses of New Hampshire that Borah will talk to the mill owners.

Made Pledges.

It is understood that the textile manufacturers made certain pledges to the senator on condition that Albert Weisbord withdraw as a leader of the strike and allow the United Textile Workers' Union to come upon the scene. As is well known, this has been done. In some quarters here it is held that Borah, unless these pledges are made good, will carry out his threat of a senatorial investigation into the conditions surrounding the struggle of the textile workers.

Borah has not ceased to be very interested in the Passaic fight and is expected, at the end of the campaign, to devote fuller attention towards effecting a settlement. There is word from New Jersey that the textile manufacturers are themselves divided into two factions on the question of terminating the dispute.

Federal Courts have no Jurisdiction Over Radio, Is Ruling Here

The federal courts have no authority to regulate radio broadcasting or to take action to clear the air of conflicting wave lengths, Judge James H. Wilkerson indicated here today when he remanded to the state courts an injunction proceeding brought by station WGES on the grounds of lack of jurisdiction.

Station WGES sought the dissolution of a temporary injunction granted against it to prevent it from interfering with the programs broadcast by station WGN. Both stations are broadcasting on the same wavelength.

Chicagoan Submits Low Bid for Dam in Illinois Waterway

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Oct. 29.—Thomas Leroy Warner, Chicago, today submitted the apparently low bid to the state department of purchases and construction for building of the retaining wall at Joliet in the Illinois waterway. The bid, which was for $1,892,170 includes excavation and construction work. Next lowest bidder was H. E. Culbertson Co., Cleveland, O., $1,950,000.

This is the third time bids have been received for this work by the state, the previous bids being unsatisfactory.

OREGON SENATE CAMPAIGN UNDER REED SPOTLIGHT

Senator Orders Probe of G. O. P. Funds

(Special to The Daily Worker)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 29.—A slush fund investigation of the Oregon senatorial campaign was ordered today by Senator James A. Reed, democrat of Missouri, chairman of the senatorial campaign fund committee.

Reed instructed Senators McNary, republican of Oregon, and King, democrat of Utah, to conduct the inquiry as soon as they complete present investigation into the Washington senatorial campaign.

Probe G. O. P. Nominee.

Senator Reed asked them to investigate specifically the campaign of Fred Steiwer, the republican nominee

"I have it on good authority," said Reed, "that Franklin K. Griffith of the Portland Electric Power Company gave the Portland, Oregonian, $15,000 for opposition to Senator Stanfield, who was defeated by Steiwer in the republican primary, of which $25,000 was sent from the headquarters in Philadelphia. Only a senate inquiry can establish the fact, as no report was made of this contribution to the state."

Two Drowned in River.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 29.—Two persons were drowned today when a Missouri river steamboat, the Elisha Woods, used in river improvement worker, capsized in striking a retard near Atherton, Mo.

Forest Bridges, 17, Atherton, and Ruby Ann Maude, cook, of Kansas City, were the victims.

Fourteen others on the boat escaped.

N. Y. JEWELRY WORKERS CALL 700 ON STRIKE

Police Recruit Scabs in Paper Box Strike

NEW YORK CITY, Oct. 29.—Forty shops involving nearly 700 workers have responded to the strike call of the Amalgamated Jewelry Novelty Workers. Negotiations began at once between Anthony Capraro, manager of the union, and the employers. Capraro announced that the following shops had petitioned the union for settlement:

Large Shops Ask Settlement.

Tyfari, Krussman and Fishel, 35 Sixth Ave., the largest shop in the trade with 150 workers out and 60 girls who will automatically become members of the union when the contract is signed; S. Friedman, 269 W. 35th St. (30 employes); Rhinestone Novelty Manufacturing Co., 19 W. 35th St. (26 workers); Berkshire Jewelry Co., 41 W. 26th St. (15); Green Engraving and Decorating Co., 140 W. 32rd St. (80); and Grand and Douglas, 105 Fulton St. (10 employes.)

The contract which these employers will sign with the union calls for the hiring of all workers thru the union employment bureau, a 10 per cent wage increase, a 44-hour week and time and a half for overtime. The strike will be continued in the other shops until the employers sign this contract, according to Manager Capraro.

Police Recruit Scabs.

Two paper box strikers, Morris Wray and James Loresco, were arrested yesterday in the paper box district, Wooster and Grand streets, taken to the First Magistrate Court, White and Center streets, and fined $5 each by Magistrate MacAndrews. These workers declare that they were brutally assaulted by the police before being arrested. Wray charges that one officer spit in his face when he was inside the Mercer street police station. They maintain that the officers who attacked and arrested them have made the great majority of similar arrests since the beginning of the box strike three weeks ago.

Florence Geller, secretary of the union, charges that she witnessed officers approaching workers on Wooster street yesterday and asking them if they wanted jobs. "In addition to riding on the paper box delivery wagons, protecting the property of the employers," Miss Geller said, "the police are evidently recruiting workers for the bosses to help break the strike."

Try to Terrorize Pickets.

Late yesterday afternoon, Harry Tick, shop chairman of the Unique Paper Box Co., 109 Spring St., was arrested for attempting to get the number of an officer from he had seen shake a girl picket for calling one scabs "strikebreakers." Tick was taken to the Mercar street police station charged with disorderly conduct, and released on $500 bail.

The union announced last night that the Park Paper Box Co., 24 Norton St., Brooklyn, and the Cantor Paper Box Co., 1001 Broadway, Manhattan, had settled with the union. This makes a total of 19 shops settled to date, involving over 200 workers.

Germans Sore at U. S. Kick at Steel Trust; Kellogg Denies Story

BERLIN, Oct. 29.—The German press was greatly excited over London and Paris reports that the United States government is "amazed and irritated" over the proposed formation of a Franco-German steel combine.

The reports declared that the United States department of state has warned the German ambassador, Baron von Maltzan, in sharp terms against Herr Stresemann venturing upon any European policy which displeased the United States.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—Secretary of State Kellogg has branded as untrue reports that the United States has interposed objections, directly or indirectly, to the formation of a Franco-German steel combine. An equally forceful disclaimer came from high officials of the treasury.

The German embassy also formally denied that Baron von Maltzan, or any of the embassy officials, had discussed with Kellogg the steel combine.

Ponzi Loses Battle Against Extradition

AUSTIN, Tex., Oct. 29.—Charles Ponzi, financial wizard, today lost his appeal to avoid extradition to Massachusetts.

The state court of criminal appeals overruled the motion made by Ponzi's attorneys and sustained Governor Miriam A. Ferguson's order for Ponzi to be extradited to Massachusetts, where Ponzi is under sentence of from seven to nine years for alleged illegal financial operations.

Schools Force Bible Worship on Children of Muskegon, Mich

MUSKEGON, Mich., Oct. 29.—Two thousand Muskegon schoolchildren are having a "love and faith" religion stuffed to them by what is known as the "Muskegon plan" of religious education. The pupils are dismissed from the school one hour a week to attend church classes which are under the direction of a central organization.

Those in support of the system say "it is divorced completely from the school system," but they admit openly that it is an auxiliary to the schools.

The central theme of the bible teachings are, it is announced, to teach the children "obedience, faith, trust, and love for god."

AMBITIONS OF DOMINIONS IRK DOWNING STREET

Empire Opposes Their Ambassadorial Aims

LONDON, Oct. 29.—The British diplomats are nothing if not clever. They are now using all their tricks on the delegates to the imperial conference, particularly those who are chafing under the collar because of the imperial restrictions imposed on them by the so-called "mother country."

As we pointed out yesterday, it is not wise to believe British news stories to-the effect that Downing Street has Premier Hertzog of South Africa isolated from Canada and the Irish Free State representatives. As a matter of fact, the British are at least as worried about Canada as they are about South Africa. And today we learn that the intention of Canada to send a representative to Washington who would speak directly to the state departam for Canada has created a very uneasy feeling in London.

British Jesuitism.

This is where British trickery comes in. The foreign office circulated the report that Washington would rather deal with the imperial ambassador, speaking for all the dominions rather than with a dozen representatives. As a matter of fact, Washington has already had direct conferences with South Africa over trade matters and one of Hertzog's grievances is that the British ambassador in Washington allowed imperial displeasure over the conversations to reach the white house.

Labor Must Support Filipino Demand, Say Anti-Imperialists

"The Filipinos want their independence," reads a statement by the U. S. section of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, issued from its Chicago headquarters.

"American labor has nothing to gain from American imperialism. For the great masses of the American people continual domination of the Philippine islands means only new dangers, new sacrifices, new hardships. Abraham Lincoln once said: No nation that enslaves another can be itself free."

The league is joining with the Emergency Foreign Policy Association, the League for Democratic Control and the Filipino Association of Chicago in a call for a Filipino freedom conference to be held in Washington December 17-19.

D. of J. Empoye Got "Honorarium" for Tip to Fertilizer Trust

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 29.—Thru the U. S. district attorney in Baltimore, Amos W. W. Woodstock, it is revealed that a trusted employe of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, has received "honorariums"—in plain English bribes,—for providing information to corporations against which the department was considering anti-trust action.

The case over which the revelation took place, was the $200,000,000 merger of seven Maryland fertilizer concerns. But the district attorney refuses to reveal any details, and it is supposed the case will be hushed up.

Voting Compulsory in Mexico City Election

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 29.—You vote in the municipal elections now coming on in Mexico City or you go to jail if you do not or cannot pay a fine.

NEGOTIATIONS START TOWARD ENDING STRIKE

Date Factory Bosses to Meet Workers

Negotiations toward the ending of the strike of the Negro woman workers against the Marsa and Company date stuffing factory, 214 West Kinzie street, are being conducted, it is announced. Conferences have been arranged by the Chicago Federation of Labor with the employers.

Monday has been set as the date when a definite settlement will be made. A committee from the strikers and a representative of the C. F. of L. is meeting with the bosses.

Picketing Ceases.

During the conferences militant activities of the women have been suspended and picketing has been stopped temporarily until an agreement is reached.

Among the demands insisted upon by the workers are recognition of the Date and Fig Workers' Union, a wage increase of one-half a cent pound over the old scale, improvement in working conditions and sanitation provisions, shorter working hours.

Under no condition will the workers back down on their demand for recognition of the union, declare strike leaders. This is their prime demand. The half cent a pound increase will increase the weekly wages from about $14 to $16. The company desired to decrease the wages to $12, and the announcement of this resulted in the strike.

There are at present no sanitation provisions in the factory, the workers charge, making for much discomfort among the workers.

A business and social meeting will be held by the strikers Saturday night at 8 o'clock at 3537 Indiana avenue. Friends are invited to attend. Donations for strike relief are expected.

Boston Capmakers Pass Resolution, Regretting Death of 'Gene Debs

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 29.—Local No. 7 of the Cloth, Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' International Union passed the following resolution on the death of Eugene V. Debs

Whereas, Eugene V. Debs has just passed away, and

Whereas, Eugene V. Debs has been a militant leader in the struggle of the American workers against the autocratic rule of the American capitalist class, fearing no sacrifice for the right of the workers to organize, against the use of injunctions in labor disputes, against the participation by the United States in the last World War and for the establishing of a political party that shall represent the workers of the nation, and

Whereas, by his untiring activity in behalf of the workers of the nation Eugene V. Debs has spent years of his life in the cause of labor, being released only after years of confinement which broke his health and caused his untimely death.

Whereafore Be it Resolved by Capmakers Union, Local 7, that he express our sincere sorrow at the loss of Eugene V. Debs, from the ranks of the labor movement, and

Be It Further Resolved, that we call upon all labor organizations in the city of Boston to unite and honor his memory.

Local 37 of the Upholsterers Union adopted a similar resolution.

Pullman Porters Join in Memorial to Debs

NEW YORK, Oct. 29.—(FP)—One of the most interested groups in holding a memorial meeting for Eugene V. Debs is the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, which has taken St. Lukes Hall for Thursday night. Debs, leader of the 1894 Pullman strike, had a special place in his heart for the Negro Pullman porters and was a personal friend of their leaders.

He sent messages of commendation during the last year to the Brotherhood as it grew, always hoping that it would attain more success than the great fight of Pullman car workers in which he participated.

Letters from Our Readers

Ukrainian Workers Help!

To The DAILY WORKER:

The Ukrainian Working Women's Organization in Boston recently celebrated their fourth anniversary. The fifth year has begun and we are striving to make this year even more fruitful and beneficial then these four years have been. This small branch of the Alliance of Ukrainian Workers' Organizations has made a progress that is quite creditable. Our class conscious members have worked, and are still working, very energetically and wholeheartedly to aid strikers, working people's newspapers and other journals, political prisoners, and to patronize entertainments given for the benefit of the labor movement. Besides this our members take part in plays, concerts, lectures, and the study circle, English, etc.

Hearing of your need for financial support we informed our audience attending and participating in our celebration of your need and then took up a collection which amounted to $12.85. It is with great pleasure that we enclose a money order for this amount.

Ukrainian Working Women's Organization. By M. Kalcta.

The Progress of Dictatorship in America

The steady progress of government controllation is drawn again to our attention by the recent decision of the supreme court upholding the right of the president to remove federal appointees without "the advice and consent of the senate."

One step more has been made in making a president elected for four years a dictator without check or hindrance. Able to hire and fire at will, in an immense country such as this, with its veritable army of employes, themselves wielding tremendous power since the extension of centralized government control to almost every phase of social, industrial and political activity, the president now symbolizes the concentrated force of the strongest sections of American capitalism.

It is significant that the decision was written by Judge Taft, that fat and faithful friend of big capital and that Justices Holmes, Brandeis, McReynolds, who cling to the traditions of the competitive period of American capitalism, dissented.

The capitalist press is practically a unit in welcoming this decision. It assures them of a curtailment of the restrictions which the franchise places upon big capitalism and places them in a more favorable position in relation to the profession politicians of the capitalist parties.

For the workers the decision is one more significant sign that American capitalism is strengthening its hold on the suppressive machinery of the state, organizing it so that in the hands of its henchmen it can be mobilized against the masses with the least possible difficulty.

This increase of the power in the hands of the executive is the more dangerous for the American working class in that it comes at a time when the labor movement has made but the barest beginnings in building a labor party to fight for its interests against the centralized power of capitalism.

The Worker (Communist) Party of America alone is carrying on the struggle for a labor party with its base in trade unions and other organizations of the workers. The decision of the supreme court confirms with an accuracy characteristic of reaction all we have said about the necessity for American centralising all its struggles in a powerful party of its own.

MANY INDUSTRIES SHOW BIGGER OUTPUT WITH FEWER MEN EMPLOYED

The remarkable increase in productivity per man-hour in American industry since 1914 is again emphasized in a U. S. department of labor study of the cement, leather, flour and sugar-refining industries.

"Of the 8 industries studied so far," says the department, "one—the automobile industry—has shown an increase in man-hour output for the period 1914-1925 of over 200%; 6 industries have shown increases ranging from 25% to 80%, while in the boot and shoe industry the increase has been 16.8%, which is somewhat below the average.

Cement industry.

"Workers in the cement industry in 1925, the report shows, produced 57.8% more per man-hour of work than in 1914. It says: "This industry has been favored by a tremendous increase in the demand for its product during the past 4 years, so that it has undergone considerable expansion, a situation which is usually favorable to increasing output per man-hour. Conditions in the leather industry are practically the reverse of this, for there has been a steady decline in leather production since 1923 and not very much of an increase in recent years over 1914. Yet in spite of this situation the output per man-hour in the leather industry in 1925 was 28.2% greater than in 1924, while a 5-year average, 1921-1925, shows an even larger increase—34%."

In flour milling the output per man-hour was 39% greater in 1925. In sugar refining the 1925 output per man-hour was 27.3% above 1914, but in the postwar years 1919 to 1920 it was 20% below that level.

In the leather industry 1925 production stood 13.6% above 1914, but the industry employed 11.4% fewer workers. In 1924, with 14% fewer workers, there was produced 15.2% more leather than in 1914, an increase of 34% in labor productivity. The average working week in the industry has declined from about 57 hours in 1914 to 51½ in 1923.

PROBLEMS OF ILLINOIS LABOR

LEADERS OF STATE LABOR MOVEMENT CONTINUE TO THE RIGHT AT HIGH SPEED

SECOND ARTICLE.

IN his report to the Illinois State Federation of Labor convention, held at Streator, Ill., recently, President Walker painted a rather dismal picture of the future of labor while at the same time stating, which he undoubtedly thought rather gratifying, that there had been fewer labor disputes in the state during the last year than previously—only 94 strikes throughout the state, whereas in 1917 there were 363, in 1917 there were 267 and in 1920 there were 256. He said nothing of the fact that fewer labor disputes in this instance signify a failure by organized labor to utilize the favorable situation for aggressive organization activities. The losses sustained by the various unions, both in membership and organized positions, during this period were completely ignored by him. President Walker predicted a period of decline in the industrial activities for the future, but without suggesting any measures whereby labor could fortify itself or giving the slightest lead for militant fight against the open shop, which is again threatening the unions.

Injunctions.

IN this same report President Walker also claimed that there had been less injunctions during the past year because of the injunction limitation bill. Yet injunctions have been issued against the Chicago Retails Clerks' Union by the notorious Dennis E. Sullivan, who also imposed fines and prison penalty upon members of that union for picketing and declared the injunction limitation act unconstitutional. An injunction has been issued against the culinary crafts, covering some 150 Chicago restaurants, prohibiting any efforts of organization. An injunction has been issued against the machinists on strike in Chicago not to mention the fact that some fifty members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union were thrown into prison to serve various terms for maintaining their union rights against an injunction in 1924. While many resolutions have been adopted against such usurpation of power by the courts, the labor leadership of Illinois did nothing to keep these labor prisoners out of jail save to beg the good friend of capital, Governor Small, for a pardon. Governor Small, of course, lived up to his oath and his service to the republican party program and this back-door politics gained nothing for the workers, while it certainly strengthened the employers.

ON the question of the injunction the Illinois State Federation of labor convention resolved, "That the campaign of education shall be continued to enlighten our membership and the decent citizens of our state as to its dire possibilities." These possibilities are well recognized by the organized capitalists and their tools, the injunction judges. They are taking advantage of it, while the labor leaders completely fail to measure up to the requirements of the situation.

Free books.

THE convention further voted for free text books for schools, better salary for factory inspectors, better and more compensation laws. It voted support for the retail clerks, attempted to terrify the employers with their unfair lists, and voted to support the new tax amendment to the constitution, which has already been adopted by both houses of the state and will be submitted to a referendum at the elections November 2. Support was expressed for these quite worthy, and quite harmless objects, while speeches were made every day for the union label.

One real issue, that of organizing unorganized workers, came up and was slightly discussed, but the net result was merely the adoption of a resolution relative to the automobile industry resolving to "look for the union garage shop card."

In its attitude inwards relations with or the sending of a labor delegation to the Soviet Republics, the reactionary leadership became particularly revealed. It attempted to place the Soviet Republic on a parallel with the fascist dictatorship, which exists by the foul murder of thousands of workers and destruction of their organizations.

Drift to Right.

STEP by step, the Illinois State Federation of Labor has during recent years gone completely to the right. It has made a considerable swing since 1919, when Duncan McDonald became its president for one year. Subsequently, John Walker stumped the state as candidate for governor on the farmer-labor party ticket at the same time that Len Small was put on the anti-ticket by the Central Labor Council at Kankakee. Now the turn is completed and the union leadership has forged a solid alliance with the stinking, corrupt Len Small machine.

This leadership gave full endorsement to Frank L. Smith, so-called friend of labor, prior to the exposure of the hundreds of thousands of dollars contributed for his campaign by the utilities corporations. The exposure proved a concrete example of the outright buying of political candidates of the old parties by the big capitalist corporations. Incidentally, it also laid bare one of the greatest combinations of big business, dirty politics, and BROWNSVILLE, Pa., Nov. 24. It is widely known that the Crescent mine property of the reputable Pittsburgh Coal company in western Pennsylvania will resume work on a non-union basis. This mine has been idle for 18 months.

Order Families Out.

Superintendent Harkers has ordered all families out of the company-owned houses on Red Hill. There are 36 families living in these houses. He has given them 10 days' notice to move. The reason for the order is that the Pittsburgh company will use the huts to house imported scabs and gunmen.

Police Picket Mine.

A picket of a dozen coal-iron police is already on duty at the Crescent mine, and has already carried on the instructions of the Pittsburgh company to terrorize the residents of Red Hill by patrolling the roads leading to the mine.

It is very likely that the United Mine Workers of America will take steps to fight the eviction of the miners and their families.

THIS WEEK'S PRIZE WINNERS!

A worker in the Eastman Kodak company factory at Rochester, N. Y., is awarded the first prize this week for his story describing the effects on the workers of the speed-up system in that plant. He will receive a copy of "Romance of New Russia" by Magdeleine Marx, cloth bound edition.

The second prize for this week, "Bars and Shadows" by Ralph Chaplin is awarded to George E. Powers, who has admirably "covered" the present strike of the Paper Box Makers' Union in New York. Powers' prize-winning story appeared in an earlier issue.

The third prize goes to a coal miner in Brownsville, Pa., who gives the news of the activity of the Pittsburgh Coal company against the unionists. He receives a copy of "Government—Strikebreaker" by Jay Lovestone.

WHO WILL BE PRIZE-WINNERS NEXT WEEK? You know, worker correspondents, no one else does! Send in that story you have been thinking of writing. Write it today and send it in!

SPEED-UP SYSTEM IN KODAK PLANT MEANS DEATH AND INJURY, COMPANY FORCES WORKERS TO BE CARELESS

By a Worker Correspondent.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 24. — In a previous article on working conditions in the plants of the Eastman Kodak Co. assertion was made that the institution of the Dedeux point system was in a large part responsible for the tremendous increase in the number of accidents in which workers were injured, crippled and killed. That this is so in spite of the continuous accident prevention campaigns which are carried on by the company and the installation of the best in the line of safety appliances by them is proved by concrete evidence.

Forced Carelessness.

While on the one hand the workers are urged to exercise care at all times in their work the very nature of the speed up system under which they are compelled to work forbids their being careful. Their weekly base wage is sufficiently low to induce them to work carelessly under the most hazardous conditions in order to make some extra money in the shape of a bonus.

Cut Down Times.

The yard department, for example, of the plant at which I work, in which department the work is heavy and hazardous, requires of its employes that they do the jobs in half and even less than half the time that it formerly took them. For instance formerly five men were expected to load a freight car load of paper which weights up to seven hundred pounds per hale, within three hours. Since the inauguration of the bonus system, a twin from the Dedeux system, four men are expected to do the same amount of work in one and one half hours. If they do it in less time than this they are rewarded (or should I say insulted) with a miserably small bonus. If they don't do it within the allotted time, well . . . We're terribly sorry, but we can't use you any longer." Other jobs done by this department the time has been reduced proportionately.

Crushed by Beams.

Thus, some time ago, one of the workers of this department, while leading some 12 inch I-beams about 15 feet in length upon an auto truck, being in a great hurry, failed to fasten the beams securely with the result that when the truck started to move the beams tipped over, pinning him beneath the load and crushing the bones in both legs. He is now a watchman on one of the company's railroad crossings, being unfit for any other kind of labor.

Another worker, employed in the cotton slitting department also as a result of the hurry up system caught his hand in one of the wringers with the result that his hand is about 75% useless now.

Three Workers Killed.

Recently, three workers were killed within six weeks of one another. One of them, a youth about 18, who had contemplated leaving the employ of the company about two or three days later, was killed while dismantling rigging which had been used to hoist some materials. It seems that he too was in a great hurry, so much so that he failed to provide himself with a firm footing with the result that the weight of the chain hoist, which he was unhooking overbalanced him, causing him to fall some twenty feet to instant death. The other two workers lost their lives in building construction work.

Lose Fingers.

Any number of cases could be cited where, owing to the Bedaux system, workers become impatient with the slow motion of the punch press or cutting machine upon which they happen to work, try to rush it along with the result that they lose from one to four fingers. Only within the past two weeks a girl had the best part of three fingers cut off.

Adding insult to injury, the company, in it's monthly accident reports which are posted throuout the plant, places the responsibility for 90 per cent or more of these accidents upon the injured workers.

The writer sincerely hopes to see the day, before he too gets killed, when the workers of the Kodak plants become organized into a union whereby they will be able to demand a decent living wage without the necessity of risking the loss of life or limb in the acquisition of it.

S. P. FAKES UP RELIGION WHEN LEADER PASSES

So It Seems at Meeting in Los Angeles

By L. P. RINDAL.
(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 24.—Friday evening, Nov. 12, the International Labor Defense held a successful Debs memorial meeting at Music-Art Hall. This event, which 400 workers were present, was a noteworthy one. Comrades "Mother" Bloor and Fisher, both able, forceful speakers, described wonderfully well the importance of Debs as a leader in the ranks of labor. Debs is not really dead, his spirit in behalf of the working class will live forever, it was pointed out.

S. P. Strong on Religion.

The socialist party Debs memorial at Trinity Auditorium Nov. 14 was a religious affair. The godly expressions connected with it all undoubtedly caused Eugene to turn in his grave. Wright, socialist party ex-candidate for congress, was chairman. His speech, read from a book, dealt with leader, from Abraham to Jerusalem Slim. The Naserene also figured prominently in a recitation given by a female soloist angel.

Speech Is Short.

Rev. Clinton J. Taft, director of A. C. L. U., also spoke. Altho not a radical of any sort, he seemed to have more fighting spirit in him than the socialists themselves.

Upton Sinclair, author of "Profits of Religion," etc., did not seem to like the holy atmosphere in the auditorium very much. He cut his speech short. "Los Angeles is like Russia," he began, "the way it was during the regime of the czar," he continued. At this point he stopped and looked around.

S. P. Suppress Literature Sale.

When Sinclair regained his breath he spoke for the press and against the proposed Debs monument—"the stone," as he termed it. "Increase the power of the press," he shouted. The socialists themselves had no literature for sale, and they stopped everybody else from selling closer than 100 feet from the building. In other words they tried to drive the Communists, I. W. W., anarchists, etc. into the clutches of the police. The Jewish Daily Forward likes that kind of "freedom of the press," but the author of the "Brass Check" does not.

Collection Short.

The chairman, Wright, interfared with Sinclair's collection speech. Result, $200 short of expenses. Sinclair, seemingly disgusted, left the speakers' stand. At this point Rev. Taft took charge of a second collection. Being a preacher, he ought to know how to "separate the 'dear people' from their pockets the second time is not known. It is reasonable to believe, however, that the socialists are forced to follow Sinclair's advice: "Let the stones wait . . ."

Russian Tractor Fund Enriched.

On the same evening as the Debs memorial took place the "iron" held its meeting, as scheduled previous to the break with the socialist party. The collection for tractors to be sent to a Jewish colony in Soviet Russia was $343.

INMATES IN SOVIET PRISONS DO NOT LOSE IDENTITY AS MEN; AN AMERICAN COMRADE TELLS OF LIFE

By JACK HARDY,

MOSCOW, Nov. 6 (By Mail).—While in Russia it was my desire to observe at first hand the workings of the Russian prison system, which has been described in such terrible terms by American capitalists, liberals and anarchists. Comrade Anna Richman, another America, and myself, therefore, went to one of the largest of the prisons in the vicinity of Moscow. The "isolator" prison, which we visited, is known to be one of the severest institutions in central Russia. To it are sent only those convicted of murder, armed robbery or other severe crimes. There are also confined in it a few counter-revolutionists whose actions were of a particularly vicious nature.

The exterior of this institution was not beautiful to behold. Russia is still poor and cannot devote her scant resources upon the decoration of exteriors. The inside, however, presented a different picture entirely.

Learn Trades.

The institution contains 360 inmates. All who so desire may learn a trade. No compulsion is used in the matter of work, but all, save the old and feeble, choose to be gainfully employed. The bulk of them work in either the textile factory attached to the prison, the clothing shop where the textiles are made into garments, and a few work in the small prison machine shop. All who work receive wages ranging from 20 to 75 rubles per month, the average wage being between 55 and 60 rubles. One-third of this wage is given to the prisoner; the other two-thirds go to his family. Those having no families receive the balance when their terms expire. Many of these men were never before gainfully employed.

Richman and myself were conducted through the various departments of the institution with which we were greatly impressed. The outstanding of these were a prison theater (in the former prison church) under the direction of a special cultural director who devotes full time to cultural work; an orchestra of 25 pieces, all prisoners; a prison library of 2,500 volumes, which the inmate may take to their rooms; a wall newspaper, written entirely by those confined in the institution. The prisoners may write and receive as many letters as they please, altho their mail is taken out only twice each week. Other features were the co-operative bookstore and general store, where the men may make purchases with the money they earn, at stated hours.

Members Punished.

We asked one man what he had done. He was under a ten-year sentance. We expressed astonishment to the director that for a crime of his nature so severe a sentence should have been imposed. The director informed us that the man had been a Communist. Sentences as a rule are not severe in the Soviet Union. But when a Communist commits a crime punishment is many times greater than for other individuals.

Preserve Identity.

Talking in the office after our survey, the director attempted to impress upon us that this was one of the most strict prisons in the Soviet Union. He also impressed upon us that in Russia reform, not punishment, is the aim of the prison system. And after what we had seen we could very well believe it. The men confined within this institution preserved their identity as men. They did not have a number; they wore their own clothes, not a prison garb. All of them were happy. They talked to us without hesitation, and we did not encounter one bitter note in more than half a day that we spent there.

Those confined in solitary confinement have been abolished in the Soviet Union. The director showed us the dungeon where men had been confined in solitary confinement during the regime of the czar. It is now the drug department of the prison, where medicine is prepared for those in the prison who become sick.

Joliet Pen Guard Tells How Warden Was Made to Hand Over the Keys

JOLIET, Ill., Nov. 24.—How six convicts now on trial for the murder of Deputy Warden Peter M. Klein forced him to hand over the keys to solitary confinement cells was told in court today by Jacob Judnich, a guard at the Illinois state prison.

"Sam Oden, a trusty, and I were in the solitary row outside Klein's office," Judnich told the court, "when we heard a noise and went to investigate. We saw Klein lying on the floor, blood streaming down his face, and several of the convicts in the room.

"Sam Price ordered me to give him the keys. When I refused he struck me with an iron bar, while another prisoner slashed Oden. I managed to stagger out of the office and locked myself in the solitary row."

The witness then told how Klein was dragged from his office and shaken until he semi-consciously nodded to him as a sign that it was all right to hand over the keys.

Hall-Mills Witness Is Offered Bribe for "Keeping Mouth Shut"

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 24.—Mrs. Mary Demarest testified on the witness stand in the Hall-Mills murder case that shortly after the murder of Rev. Dr. W. Hall and Eleanor Mill, Peter Pelle Binartini came to her house and offered $2,500 if she would "keep her mouth shut."

Di Martini is the private detective who was employed by Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, one of the defendants, shortly after the murder.

The offer was made to Mrs. Demarest, she said, if she would forget "seeing" Mrs. Stevens and Ralph Gorshine and Minna Clark.

As Mrs. Demarest spoke of being offered $2,500 by Pelle De Martini to "keep her mouth shut" her right hand clenched and unclenched nervously. Her face, however, remained expressionless. Henry Stevens squirmed in his seat. Willie twiddled his mustache nervously.

A NEW NOVEL OIL! By Upton Sinclair

(Copyright, 1926, by Upton Sinclair)

The next afternoon, coming out from his classes, Bunny saw on a news-stand the familiar green color of the "Evening Boost-er," and his eye was caught—as it was meant to be caught—by flaring headlines:

POLICE RAID RED CENTER

So Bunny purchased a paper—as it was meant that he should do—and read how that morning a squad from police headquarters had invaded the rooms of the clothing workers' union, and taken off nearly a truck-load of documents which were expected to prove that the disturbance in the city's industry was being directed and financed by the red revolutionists of Moscow. The officials of the union were under arrest, one of those apprehended being Chaim Menzies, "self-confessed socialistic agitator."

X

So there was another job for Bunny. He didn't know quite how to set about it, and Dad was on the way to Paradise, and could not be consulted. Bunny went to see Dad's lawyer, Mr. Dolliver, a keen-witted, soft-spoken gentleman who had no sympathy with reds, but, like all lawyers, was prepared for any weird trouble his wealthy clients might bring along. He called up police headquarters and ascertained that the self-confessed socialistic agitator was to be arraigned the following day; he would be seen at that time, and it would be up to Bunny to have the cash on hand, or real estate to twice the amount. Bunny said he wanted to see the prisoner, and Mr. Dolliver said he knew the chief of police, and might be able to arrange it.

He wrote a note, and Bunny went over to the dingy old building which had been erected to serve a city of fifty thousand, and was now serving one of a million. The chief proved to be a burly person in civilian clothing, smelling strongly of civilian whiskey; he requested Bunny to sit down and summoned a couple of detectives, and began an obvious effort to find out what Bunny knew about Chaim Menzies, and Bunny's ideas, and Chaim's ideas. And Bunny, who was growing up fast in an ugly world, gave a carefully phrased exposition of the difference between the right and left wings of the Socialist movement. Plainly that he could not be trapped into indiscretions and knowing that he was a millionaire's son, and could not be thrown into jail, the chief gave him up, and told one of the detectives to take him in to see the prisoner.

So Bunny got a glimpse of his city's jail. The old building was cracked, and had been condemned as a menace to life by half a dozen successive commissions; nevertheless, here it was a monument to the greed of real estate speculators, who care nothing about a city's good name, provided only its tax-rate was low. The moldy old place stank, and if you looked carefully you might see vermin crawling on the walls. The prisoners were confined in a number of "tanks," which were steel barred cages, holding thirty or forty men each, with no ray of daylight, and not enough artificial light to enable anyone to read. This city, proudly named "Angel," appeared anxious to cultivate all possible vices in its victims, for it provided them no reading matter and no exercises or recreation, but permitted them to have cards, dice and cigarettes—and the jailers secretly smuggled in whiskey and cocaine to such as had money for bribes.

In one of these tanks sat Papa Menzies on the floor, since there was no other place to sit. He appeared quite contented, having gathered round him the entire congregation of the cell, to hear about the struggle of the clothing workers, and how it was up to the toilers of the world to organize and abolish the capitalist system. When Bunny appeared, the old man jumped up and grabbed him by the hand, and Bunny said quickly, "Mr. Menzies, you should know that this gentleman with me is a detective."

Papa Menzies grinned. "Sure, I got nothing to hide. I been a member of de Socialist party for twenty years. I believe in de ballot box—dey vill find nothing to de contrary, unless dey make it. I have been telling dese boys vat Socialism is, and I vill tell dis gentleman, if he vants to listen. I have been helping de clothing workers stand together for decent conditions and I am going on vid it de day I git out again." So that was that.

And in the evening Bunny phoned to his father and told him the situation. Bunny had been accustomed to sign his father's name to checks of any size, and had been careful not to abuse the privilege; but now he was proposing to draw fifteen thousand dollars, because they would probably fix the bail very high, in the hope of keeping the old man in jail until the strike had been broken. There was no risk involved, Bunny declared, for Menzies was the soul of honor, and would not run away.

Dad made a wry face over the telephone, but what could he do? His dearly beloved son was ablaze with indignation, and insisted that he knew all about it, there was no possibility whatever that this old clothing worker could be a secret agent of the Soviet government, deliberately planted in Angel City to destroy American institutions. How Bunny could know such things Dad couldn't imagine, but he had never known him to be so wrought up, and finally he said all right, but to have Mr. Dolliver send somebody to court with the money so that Bunny would not get his name into the newspapers again

A New Threat Against Mexico

"Nervous Nell" Kellogg, our unlettered secretary of state, in the language of a bar-room bully, serves notice on Mexico that relations between that republic and the United States will be severed unless Mexico refrains from putting into effect the laws relating to oil and landed property passed by the Mexican congress.

Mexico refuses to be hullied and emphatically states that the government will not modify its laws to suit the interests of American exploiters. It is reported that Mexico's firm stand has rallied most of the Latin American republics behind the Calles government with the exception of a few puppet governments like that of Nicaragua which is on Wall Street's payroll.

While Kellogg is penning blustering notes to Mexico, American marines are protecting the Diaz dictatorship in Nicaragua and United States warships are patrolling the Mexican coast ostensibly looking for Mexican filibustering expeditions in aid of the Nicaraguan revolutionists, but more likely looking for an excuse that would give Kellogg the pretext to break relations with our southern neighbor.

It is not necessary to stress the fact that Mexico is entirely right in her decision not to surrender her sovereignty to the Wall Street government of the United States. The stand taken by the Mexican government is a brave one and cannot fail but challenge the admiration of every worker, and indeed every American who has yet escaped the contaminating influence of imperialism.

No doubt the catholic church will take advantage of the fresh attack on Mexico to open its mad guns and to arouse popular opinion in behalf of military intervention. That the church is secretly working hand in hand with the government is almost a certainty.

If, as reported, the Latin American countries back up Mexico in this crisis our Wall Street statesmen might think twice before they risk the loss of their American markets by buckling on the sword for a war in behalf of the oil and land robbers of this country.

The voice of the American working class must be heard in Washington in protest against the threatened war against a friendly nation. And it must say to Wall Street: "Hands Off Mexico!"

Why Thompson Did Not Speak

Colonel Carmi Thompson, presidential investigator in the Philippines was scheduled to deliver a speech on the situation in Wood's potential rubber Klondyke, before the reactionary members of the Hamilton Club of Chicago, last Tuesday night.

Thompson did not talk about the Philippines. The subject was too warm. Why?

The reason can be found in Thompson's undiplomatic utterances on his arrival in Seattle. Thompson went to the islands with the conclusion already formed that the United States must stay in the Philippines, for the benefit of the Filipinos, of course. What imperialist power ever admitted having any ulterior motive in stealing something?

Despite this inelastic conclusion, however, Thompson found so many flaws in the regime of General (Ivory Soap) Wood, the governor-general, that he could not refrain from commenting unfavorably on his administration. Wood's rule must be bad indeed when such a loyal servant of imperialism as Colonel Thompson is forced to speak out in public and condemn it.

Thompson gave the impression that Wood is administering the affairs of the islands with a gatling gun. The general has surrounded himself with a "cavalry cabinet." The resentment of the Filipinos was brought home forcibly more than once to Thompson. The president's investigator thinks that the best interests of American imperialism will be served by a more diplomatic tool than Wood.

The expression of those ideas accounts for Thompson's failure to mention the Philippine question at the Hamilton Club. Thompson claimed that American imperialism is a good thing for the Filipinos. But the administration of the same imperialism is bad. This is just the end of the imperialist stick that touches the Filipino head. How can this contradiction be reconciled? It would never do for the Hamilton Club to sponsor such a presentation of the Philippine problem.

Thompson's recommendation to the president will undoubtedly suggest that General Wood be advised to develop malaria and that some college professor who is not accustomed to drinking brandy for breakfast should replace him. But whether the Filipinos get tickled under the chin by a saccharine professor or prodded by the bayonet of a swashbuckling militarist, Firestone will squeeze his rubber out of them and that is the object of imperialism.

Reaching the Youth

The capitalists, thru numerous organizations, social, athletic and religious, are assiduously poisoning the minds of the youth of the country with capitalist dope. Boy scouts and girl scouts, camp fire girls and similar organizations have for their object the creation of an ideology in the minds of the youth that will turn them into convinced supporters of capitalism.

Hundreds of capitalist papers cater to the youth. Every capitalist daily has its children's page. In comic strip, in poetry and in story, the ruling classes cleverly turn the youthful mind into the channel that will be most remunerative to the interests of capitalism, whether it be in the factory during times of peace or on the battle field in time of war.

Against this barrage of propaganda the working class have been able to present only a feeble opposition. But feeble as it is at present, it contains the germ of a mighty educational weapon in the future.

The foremost expression of the working class youth in this country is the Young Worker, organ of the Young Workers League. Every adult worker should see that a copy of this live weekly comes into his home. Workers who do not want to see their sons brought up only to be mowed down by machine guns in a capitalist war should support the Young Worker.

Signs of Crisis in Italian Fascism

Fascism Carries Out the Work of Italian Finance—The Petit-Bourgeois Founders of the Party Are Kept Alive Only by Nationalist Phrases—The Workers Are Enslaved and Face an Economic Crisis of Serious Proportions—The Fascist Party Is Breaking Up from Conflicting Class Interests.

By ERCOLI (Roma).

THE introduction of the death penalty in Italy is as act of fear which is determined by the constant succession of attempts on Mussolini's life. In the course of nine months three attempts have been made to assassinate the "Duce." The first attempt has not yet been explained and there still exists some doubt as to whether it was not a case of provocation. On the second and third occasions Mussolini had an extremely narrow escape. Since the attempts are beginning to follow one another in such regular succession it is difficult to say that any one of them will be the last. On the contrary, we may assume with considerable certainty that the first three attempts will be followed by others. Anyone who knows what fascism in Italy has been and what it has on its conscience will easily understand the grounds for this certainty. Fascism has sown so much abhorrence and hatred that it is quite natural if "avengers" arise from the masses of the embittered people. Italian people anyhow look to act individually. The introduction of the death penalty is thus a kind of "legal terror" with the purpose of counteracting this danger. It is, however, extremely doubtful whether these measures will have the desired effect.

After the third attempt on his life Mussolini spoke for the first time, in an address to the black shirts, on dangers threatening the fascist regime. Never before had he spoken of such words. Always, and especially after the attempts on his life, he had made a point of proclaiming loudly that the regime was secure, "more than established," "most firmly established," "indestructible," etc. As a matter of fact, however, there are today unmistakable signs that the situation, not only in Italy in general, but also in fascism, is becoming more and more acute.

Serves Financiers.

SINCE fascism came into power, but especially in the last two years, it has carried on a policy exclusively in the interest of a block which financial capital, the great industrialists and the agrarians, have formed round fascism. The policy of fascism has been not only a policy of class but a policy in the interest of the most greedy and parasitic strata of the bourgeoisie. The consequence of this policy seemed at first to be a development of production. Capital, freed from all barriers, threw itself into industrial undertakings, hoping to achieve profits far beyond the usual rate. The investment of capital increased in an extraordinary measure.

It was, however, only a case of delusive bloom and of a purely external growth. As a matter of fact, both were to a certain extent a consequence of the progressive depreciation of the currency, and moreover, if they were to be effective, demanded large contracts. The home market of Italy, however, has been brought to the brink of ruin by the action of fascism itself—which, in order to stabilize state finances and to achieve a redistribution of wealth in favor of the plutocratic groups, has brought distress on the middle classes and thrust the poorer classes into a condition of despair by giving the industrialists a free hand to reduce wages and lengthen hours of work. Foreign markets, on the other hand, have yet to be won by Italy.

THE chief branches of industry are faced by a crisis. It is anticipated that within a few months enormous masses of workers will be turned on to the streets. Bankruptcies are multiplying at a catastrophic rate. The process of expropriating the middle classes for the benefit of the plutocracy is continually systematically. The masses of the people are compelled to restrict their consumption more and more and have to eat black bread as in war time. What is left of the reconstruction which fascism has tried to effect?

Nothing remains on the one hand but the system of blackmail and intimidation which was introduced in order to suppress all freedom of movement among the working class and, on the other hand, the phrases and plans of imperialist expansion. Both of these are indispensable to fascism.

A MATTER of absolute necessity is the enslavement of the working class and the peasants by suppressing class organizations, by prohibiting strikes, by abolishing the independence of the municipalities, the freedom of the press, the right of assembly, etc. Nothing but the enslavement of the working class enables the large industrialists and the large agrarians to develop their policy of stabilization. But this is not all proceeding smoothly. The pressure which is exercised on the masses calls forth a reaction from them, a very perceptible trend towards the left. For the moment there is certainly no immediate danger of movements on a large scale, but nevertheless the outlook for fascism is anything but promising.

A second necessity is that of making use of pompous nationalist phraseology and of proclaiming great plans of expansion. Imperialistic braggadocio is a necessity which has been forced on fascism by the petty bourgeois origin and by the precarious situation in which it finds itself at present. While carrying on activities which are entirely for the benefit of the large bourgeoisie it must keep the masses from which it originated attached to itself by deping them with high-sounding phrases. How long will the nationalist intoxication be able to prevent the petty bourgeoisie resisting a policy which deprives it at the same time of comfort and of the illusion of power?

Fascist Party Divided.

THIS brings us to one of the most delicate questions, the crisis in the fascist party itself, a crisis which continues incessantly in spite of Mussolini's efforts. Fascism, having made it impossible for any opposition group to express itself, and having made itself the only political organization in the country, is now experiencing the revival of opposition within its own ranks. On the one side is the large industrialists, on the other the petty bourgeoisie. On the one side are the fascist heads in the service of the agrarians and the plutocracy, on the other side are the old fascist groups with their old fascist tendencies. On the one side are the industrialists and on the other side the so-called corporations of workers. On the one side is a group of bankers, on the other side the group of their opponents.

The first clash developed so far that within the fascist party itself all system of democracy has had to be abolished. Even in its local bodies the party officials remain on the one hand are nominated by the government. The meetings of members have been deprived of all right of action. The opposition, however, is assuming new forms. At the time of the last attempt on Mussolini's life the two branches of fascism came to an armed conflict with one another in Trieste which lested for two whole days and made it necessary to proclaim martial law in Rome the fascist heads of the opposition made an attack on the premises of the police administration.

THESE are in brief outline some of the factors in the Italian situation, which undoubtedly prompted Mussolini to announce that the fascist regime is threatened by dangers. Has Mussolini any plan for removing these dangers? There can be no doubt that he has one and this plan is being carried out. It consists in reinforcement of the regime of terror, of suppression of the systematic application of force against the masses in order to prevent them taking decisive action for the purpose of altering the situation. The reintroduction of capital punishment is part of this plan. It is characterized by the terror which is assuming legal forms.

The proletariat and the peasants of Italy are becoming more and more convinced of the fact that the death penalty must be executed on the fascist regime and that they have received a call to energetic action. The vanguard of the working class, the Communist Party of Italy is steeled and strong enough to pursue its path resolutely even in the face of the new threats.

Amsterdam Splitters at Work Among the Teachers

Information was given in the press that Amsterdam was to convene a conference of teachers' organizations in Paris on August 1, for the purpose of creating a new international to cater for educational workers. Later the press stated that the conference had met, but what it had decided on remained in the dark. Only quite recently have we obtained news of the conference proceedings which throw some light on this fresh disruptive plan of Amsterdam directed immediately against the existing federation of workers' international with headquarters in Paris.

At present the teaching profession is organized as follows, internationally:

Trade Union Interests.

To the first group belong various pedagogic internationals of a pacifist and clerical nature, closely linked up one way or another with the league of nations and in dependence on the ruling classes of the bourgeois states such as the San Francisco International subsidized by American millionaires). These internationals do not aim at defending the trade union interests of the teaching profession, nor do they in any way fight to better their members' material position and status. They are mere tools in the hands of the ruling classes, deprived of any chances of conducting an independent policy.

The only genuine international trade union body standing on the class proletarian viewpoint and effectively working for the improvement of the position of the teaching profession is the Educational Workers' International. The E. W. I. is affiliated to neither Amsterdam nor the Red International of Labor Unions, since it contains in its ranks teachers' organizations belonging to both internationals as well as organizations without other international affiliation.

Establishing Unity.

The E. W. I. has, during the course of years, demonstrated the practical possibility of establishing trade union unity among the various teachers' organizations, and it would seem that it has fully justified itself as a real and growing force.

However, Amsterdam regards the present state of the international as far as the teachers are concerned, somewhat differently. The Educational Workers' International's success in obtaining the practical realization of the united front among the teachers it regards not as a virtue, but as a vice, and is trying to fight the E. W. I. by setting up its own teachers' international.

Amsterdam's present attempt to split international organisation among the teachers is by no means the first; as far back as 1922 it appointed a special commission to call together a teachers' international, a step that was put off again and again.

No Teachers' Organization.

Finally, two years ago, the Amsterdamites set up a civil servants' and teachers' international to which, as the same Seasenbach admits, not a single teachers' organization is affiliated.

It can thus be seen that this last Amsterdam plan is merely a continuation of its old policy of sabotaging any united front the teachers may form.

The Paris conference of August 1, presided over by Sassenbach, was attended by the Nationale Syndicat of France, the Vienna Teachers' Alliance, the Austrian Teachers' Alliance and the Elementary Teachers' Union of Germany.

Both the British and German teachers' unions declined to participate.

Adopted Resolution.

The conference adopted a draft constitution of the future international, the first clauses of, which places obstacles in the way of entry for bodies not sharing like views, reading: "The international may be joined by all educational workers' organizations from all branches of educational activities, providing they recognise the principles and methods of the educational workers' international federation." Of course, the international is prepared to enter into relations with organizations, " . . . if and provided they do not adhere to principles contrary to those held by the E. W. I. F."

If, for instance, any teachers' organization does not share the principles of collaboration with the bourgeoisie and is in favor of a genuine united working class front, then it need never hope to get into the international the Amsterdamers have set up, since at bottom such views will be contrary to the tasks of the said international.

Baring from Within.

Cautious voices speaking at the conferences (which was, it ought to be noted, attended by Amsterdam's "own folks"), thought that some danger might attend the setting up of the new international: the Communists might charge them with splitting the movement, and perhaps it might be better to join the Paris E. W. I., where they again might have the majority with them.

It was suggested that the Belgians and Luxemburgers should not meanwhile leave the E. W. I. it being recognized as permissible for a union to belong to two internationals. Observing the hesitancy of the delegates and anxious to mask this plainly disruptive step, Sassenbach moved an elastic formula to the effect that "the conference recognized the necessity for establishing international connections between teachers' organizations affiliated to the E. W. I. F." the form these connections are to take to be decided on in the autumn when the conference is to meet again.

Little consideration of this criminal plan being hatched by Sassenbach is enough to make one realize what incalculable harm it is likely to cause the work of establishing unity and of welding the ranks of the men and women engaged in the teaching profession, who, to an even greater extent than is the case among the workers in capitalistic industries, are divided into different crafts and corporations. This fresh effort on the part of the Amsterdam international Federation of Trade Unions to smash the already existing international teachers' body constitutes a direct attack on the united proletarian front. This small but clear example demonstrates fully the true nature of the Amsterdam international with its limited outlook and fanatical attitude towards any display of real working class solidarity.

OUR MEXICAN LETTER

(Special to The Daily Worker)

THE religious question is a thing of the past so far as the Mexican people is concerned. It was only a good contender when Wall Street could arouse the anger of the Knights of Columbus, the catholic church representatives in the United States, against the laws and laws enacted by the Calles government.

No one that knows Mexico, its inhabitants', religious feelings, doubted that the so-called regulation of the 130 constitutional article would bring some trouble, but at the same time it was understood that the trouble would be more likely to come from across the Rio Grande than from the Mexican church-goers.

ALSO that it would be a fine mask for the government, which was preparing almost at the same time to fill out the national chamber of deputies with a large majority of the "Socialist alliance" allied with the Morones "labor party," while the true representatives of labor and agrarian parties, conducted more political merit out, in spite of the fact that some of the new (nor)ressional representatives, allowed to get in had not even presented themselves as candidates and a good many of them might have the places or districts for which they were "elected" in Mexico City.

Otherwise it was a good stunt to be displayed as the schismatic catholic church had failed miserably, not having strength enough to distract the labor movement from its activities for betterment as a class.

THAT'S the action of the government to enforce the church regulation could not bring difficulties from inside, from the Mexican people for it is well known that religious feeling, strong only in Central Mexico, is being so on the coasts near and south border states, and the government is powerful enough as proved by the isolated few cases of fanatics stirred up against the law by the priests in Puebla, Jalisco, Coahuila, Michoacan and Mexico City to "placate" them one way or another

THE political situation as outlined above is completely in the hands of the government. Calles is playing wisely with the political forces at present. The so-called alliance of labor-agrarian parties is an hybrid amalgamation of reactionaries and social reformers a la U. S. Bolshevism. Its core is made up of the former peonista and cooperatista parties that gave place to the delahuertista last counter-revolutionary party and uprising of 1923-1924.

And these gentlemen have a close understanding with the laborista party —Morones party—the political expression of the C. R. O. M., the biggest organized labor party in Mexico, but a mere government department and nothing else.

NOW, with more than two years from this date to election time for president of Mexico, these political forces are moving fast ahead in order to get a firm hold on the political field, to fight successfully against the army of Obregonista forces which everybody knows in Mexico by this time.

The incoming new national bourgeoisie, big and small, the thousands of army officers and government employes discharged by the Calles regime following his plan of economy to pay the foreign national debts, the bigger part of the army, the peasant masses, and the defeated Partidos Conlignides Regionales in the last electoral campaign

THERE is a third party which will play the villain role in the whole Mexican political film. That is the fully reactionary party with its forces already in line, the catholic church, the big old national land and industrial capitalists and foreigners, mines and transports part of the mercenary officers of the army, at whose head will be General Arnulfo R. Gomez, the fascist militarist candidate of all these powerful reactionary forces for president of Mexico, now commander in chief of the tenth army zone, with headquarters in the city of Vera Cruz.

The most dangerous part of the game could be the case of an alliance of the laborista party with the social-democratic combination against the (Obregonista) party, no very doubtful combination will not have the support of the masses. More over Calles, not Gomez, an ace fascist, is the man who will be able to make an alliance unless he is chosen as candidate for president, and that would be a hard job to fill for the laborista party.

The possibility for everyone who knows the political position in Mexico nowadays that there will be a revolution to elect the next Mexican president. Any one already as candidate of the anti-government party is supported by General Francisco R. Serrano, secretary of the federal district.

The most remarkable thing he is only known for a political historian who has taken part in the movement that the nation needs his services to regain peace and consequently he will be the government seat for the second time in the 1917 constitutional period or not.

The so-called laborista "alliance" will make a united effort to name a candidate to get support from both the fascist leaders, Campillo Seyde and Flores, are out of the question.

Here are some of the names mentioned that cannot be included: Treinda the crafty Calles intimate friend, and Delnegri. The former Obregon minister in the Calles government is a Mexican diplomatic representative at this time.

THEN there is the remainder of the whole conservative forces in Mexico, grouped around Arnulfo R. Gomez, and who will head the revolt against Calles under the assumption that he cannot be strong to impose another candidate to succeed him under the will of the Mexican people.

I can now say what I said before that "Politics in Mexico is the same game"

BUT the worst part of the whole thing is the way what is to happen next must probably among the Mexican people as a result of a real work in and farmers' political organization opposed to the ones described. Just a slowly beginning of such a tendency is to be noted in some parts of the country, but yet without any definite relation among them.

The strongest local parties in some states as Yucatan, Coahuila, Puebla, Mexico and others are under the rule of one of the named national political movement.

THE old national agrarian party is dead. Its chief leader, Soto y Gama, had to compromise to enter as a congress representative with the victorious socialist laborites, and yet he entered the socialistic as a laborite representative that is. Soto y Gama did not enter as an agrarian leader.

It is to be hoped that the stirring events that will take place within the next two years will be full of advantage of by creating a real strong workers' and peasants' political party under the guidance of the Mexican Communist Party.

A Mexican Communist.

Will Block Returning of Alien Property to Expose Custodian Deal

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—No German property will be returned to its owners until a report is had on the investigation into the conduct of the alien property custodian's office, Representative Wm. A. Oldfield, democratic whip of the house, told the ways and means committee at a hearing to determine legislation on the project.

Oldfield declared Comptroller McCarl has made an exhaustive investigation of the office, which, it has been hinted, might contain sensational disclosures. Until that report is available Oldfield indicated the democrats will not permit the property to be returned.

Mexican Trouble Not Religious, Involves Politics and Schools

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The present struggle in Mexico is not religious, but political and educational, declared Carlos Barren, Mexican author and dramatist, speaking in Town hall here under the auspices of the League for Political Education. "The constitution of Mexico, he said, merely did the same thing that the constitution of the United States does—provide for separation of church and state.

"In 1910 80 per cent of the population was illiterate. Today the percentage is only 62 per cent—surely a good record of progress in 16 years. Before the revolution public education was in the hands of the catholic church, which in 300 years failed in its task," he said.

Electric Companies in Hook-up Test.

Electric power from Chicago was used in Boston in a test of the possibility of linking up lighting systems. More than a dozen light and power companies were linked up in the 1000-mile hook-up. All of the towns and cities on the line of this test were for a short time served with electricity from the Chicago load center.

Entered as second class matter Oct. 6, 1921, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

H. L. MENCKEN tells us in his "Americana" how a bevy of Nordics in a Maine village cut loose and spit the air with sounds of bawdy revelry in honor of a cow that was given a free trip to the town by the local chamber of commerce, presumably for the encouragement of bovine pulchritude. But the politicians from the odoriferous stockyards of Chicago vied with the perfumed citizens of Lake Forest last Saturday in putting on their best babbitarian big and tucker to hail a combat between two arms of American imperialism's war machine, on the gridiron, the object of the struggle being to kick, push, throw, or by any other legal means to advance a piece of inflated pigskin from one side of a designated area to another.

AS many otherwise quite normal and partly intelligent persons of my acquaintance show unusual cerebral animation on the occasion of such a conflict I am not trying to convey the impression that athletic events are to be sneered or sneezed at. What I would like to succeed in doing is to draw the analogy between the Nordic orgy and her utilization by a chamber of commerce for the encouragement of cattle breeding among the farmers and the transportation of West Point cadets and Annapolis midshipmen for the encouragement of cannon-fodder breeding among the inhabitants of the middle west.

UNDOUBTEDLY both efforts were successful. The cow had a good time and so had the gridiron warriors, the had others if we are to give credence to stories of wild times in the big hotels. No honest lover of football—if there yet breathes such an individual—could consider last Saturday's game a sporting contest between

GET FINES FOR POSTING BILLS ON CELEBRATION

Workers Made Victims of Dead Law

Arrested on Nov. 6 charged with violating a city ordinance, which is never enforced, against posting leaflets on city poles, two workers were fined $10 each in police court Monday morning. The posters they put on the poles were those advertising the Chicago celebration of the Russian revolution anniversary.

In spite of the fact that on the same poles the workers used to advertise the workers' affair, there were posters advertising political candidates, the two were arrested by police.

The workers fined were Denois Piarino and Nick Stevens, International Labor Defense, thru Attorney David J. Bentall, handled the defense.

The judge fined the two the minimum and remitted court costs, declaring that was the "best" he could do. When Attorney Bentall pointed out that the law is never enforced, the judge said that he could not consider that, but must assess the fine when the law is enforced.

O, BE JUBILANT! POPE GRANTS WAGE INCREASE TO HARD-UP CARDINALS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, Nov. 29.—Due to the increased cost of living the pope has doubled the salary of cardinals, from 20,000 to 40,000 lire a year, approximately $960.

It has been maintained that many of the cardinals were unable to secure more than a bare existence upon their salaries.

BRITISH FIRMS SIGN MEXICAN LAND DEMANDS

Play Own Game in the U. S.-Mexican Fight

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—The Mexican embassy has made public telegrame from its government announcing that all British oil concerns in Mexico have agreed to apply for concessions in compliance with the oil and land laws which go into effect Jan. 1. The total acreage upon which confirmation was asked by the British companies is 200,000,000 acres. Some of the smaller American companies are included.

This fact is going to make the pressing of the State Department for a suspension of the Mexican laws, which it calls "confiscatory," extremely embarrassing. The action of the British companies is plainly a strategem being employed by them in the world-wide struggle for oil that exists between that country and the United States.

British Strategy.

Britain does not stand to lose much it has applied for the 50-year concessions from Mexico and will be able to operate after Jan. 1. The United States, on the other hand, has made known its intention of breaking off relations with Mexico over this question. In all probability, American oil operations will come to a stop if this course is pursued.

While the United States will be fighting strictly for Wall Street interests by using state pressure to force Mexico to suspend the oil laws or its penalty them, if the state department succeeds, and this is doubtful, the British companies will also benefit by having their titles maintained under the "American" if the fight continues between Mexico and the United States over a long period of time, the British companies will benefit by having the U. S. companies eliminated from competition with them in Mexico.

Boylan Bill to Come Up.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—Representative John J. Boylan of New York made the announcement today that he would demand action by the foreign affairs committee in the house on a bill he submitted and which simply include the present situation, with regard to Mexico.

The bill advocates the breaking of relations with Mexico over the question of "religious liberty," with reference to the catholic controversy. Boylno said he would enlarge the bill to give as additional reasons for the proposed break, the enforcement of the oil and land laws by Mexico.

Boylan charges the Mexican government with being "bolshevik" and under the control of Communists.

Congress May Limit Doctor, But Who Will Control Bootlegger?

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—Congress has the right to declare how much medicinal liquor a doctor can prescribe for his patient, the supreme court held, in effect, today.

The court declared valid that part of the Volstead law which places a limitation on the prescription of liquor for patients.

The decision was handed down to an appeal case brought by Dr. Samuel W. Lambert, New York, who contended congress exceeded its powers in limiting doctors to one pint every ten days.

POLISH PARLIAMENT IS SHORN OF ALL POWERS BY PILSUDSKI REGIME

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WARSAW, Nov. 29.—Marshal Pilsudski's dictatorship over Poland is now so complete that the Sejm, Polish parliament, is nothing more than a name. Pilsudski is now riding rough-shod over the wishes of the representatives and is completely ignoring parliament.

Realizing its position the Sejm attempted to dissolve itself on motion of the left parties, but even this was prevented. Pilsudski does not want the parliament to dissolve now, since he feels he has complete control.

The government's efforts are being conducted secretly, and the Sejm learns nothing except about budgetary and routine matters.

STRIKERS BALK RUSE OF BOTANY MILL OFFICIALS

Ask Green to Support Stand for Union

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PASSAIC, N. J., Nov. 29.—Countering the attempt of the Botany Mills to break the ranks of the textile strikers by announcing a ten per cent increase in wages to workers in its mills, fifteen hundred strikers who walked out of the same mill ten months ago, met in mass meeting and adopted a public letter to William Green of the American Federation of Labor, declaring that their ranks were solid when and asking the wholehearted support of the labor movement.

The workers immediately saw the move of the Botany bosses for what it is. The ten per cent increase was to have been a bait to lure the workers back into the mills individually as a method to do on recognition of the union. The letter to Green, adopted by the workers with great enthusiasm, exposed the bosses' ruse and reiterated the determination of the strikers to fight for recognition of their union.

To Send Committee.

Another meeting is to be held Monday night at which the strikers will elect a committee to visit the bosses and lay the demands of the strikers before them. The demands are that the ten per cent increase be granted with no discrimination to all workers and that the strikers be allowed freely to elect a grievance committee from their union to negotiate with the Botany officials.

Gustave Deek, president of Local No. 1603, United Textile Workers of America, issued the following formal statement:

Must Have Recognition.

"The union considers the restoration of the wage cut as a concession forced upon Botany management by the splendid fight of the strikers. The major demand of the strikers, however, is the recognition of the union and no satisfactory cessation of the struggle can be had until this demand is met.

"The executive committee of the union has already had this matter under advisement and a special sub-committee was elected to visit the office of the United Textile Workers of America and there confer with President McMahon."

ALBANIAN REVOLUTION IS NOT ENDED; ITALIAN WARSHIPS MAKE THREAT

(Special to The Daily Worker)

VIENNA.—The revolution in Albania is far from an end, according to reports of travelers. All communication with Scutari is cut off and it is believed that the city has been taken by the rebels.

Five Italian destroyers and one cruiser have arrived at Brindisi, Italy and others are expected. Without official announcement on the subject from Mussolini's government, it is believed their presence is due to the Albanian situation.

FALL DEFEATED IN IMPORTANT LEGAL BATTLE

Senate Testimony Will Be Admitted

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—The government scored a decisive victory today in its first big test of strength with the "million dollar" legal defense of ex-Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall and Edward L. Doheny, on trial for alleged conspiracy to defraud the government out of naval oil reserves.

Justice A. A. Hoehling, in a lengthy opinion read at the opening of the trial this morning, held that Doheny's testimony before the special investigating committee three years ago concerning the $100,000 he "loaned" to Fall was admissible as evidence in this present trial.

Doheny testified before the senate committee that he had let Fall have the $100,000, instead of E. B. McLean, the Washington and Cincinnati publisher, whom Fall had said loaned him the money.

Defense Fights Evidence.

Defense counsel bitterly contested the admissibility of this evidence before the jury that is now trying Fall and Doheny on criminal charges. They contended that to allow Doheny's story to go before the jury constituted grounds for "a reversible error" when and if the case is appealed. Their argument was based on that part of the federal code which says that the testimony of a witness before a committee of congress shall not be used against him in a subsequent criminal proceeding.

Was Voluntary Witness.

Government counsel contended the statute did not cover this particular case, as Doheny had been a voluntary witness before the senate committee, and had given the story to the committee by his own volition.

Is Blew to Defense.

Had Judge Hoehling ruled in favor of Fall and Doheny the government's hands would have been tied by a legal technicality preventing it from submitting any direct evidence showing that Doheny bribed Fall. Without submitting Fall's testimony before the senate committee two years ago there would be no way of bringing into the trial the story of the "little black bag." The defense is now considerably

UNEMPLOYMENT SPECTER IS NEW FRENCH MENACE

Lay Workers Off in the Metal Industry

PARIS, Nov. 29. — The specter of unemployment is beginning to raise its head in France following a long period of inflation in which industrial activity has managed to keep out only French, but many additional foreign workers on the job. Beginning to appear several weeks ago in an alarming manner in the Paris region, unemployment is now showing rapid growth.

It is in the metal industries, particularly the automobile that lay-offs are occurring in large numbers. The reason for it is lack of orders. There are no prospects in sight of a recovery of business in heavy metals and the menace of unemployment that accompanies a recession is becoming greater day by day.

A bill for unemployment relief has been pending before the French chamber for two years but has been allowed to hang. Very few firms have unemployment insurance or funds and the reaction, as the crisis grows, is bound to be sharp.

The foreign workers, of whom large numbers are at work in France, are likely to receive the brunt of the blow. It will doubtless be the policy of the French bosses to lay off these workers first.

There is much alarm over the balance of trade in France which is just one more indication of the speed with which the crisis is approaching. Germany, in the past year, has more than doubled her exports to France while export of French goods to Germany are proportionally much smaller. The same applies to the foreign trade with the U. S.

SOVIETS AND TURKEY MADE NO AGREEMENT FOR PAN-ASIATIC LEAGUE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Nov. 29. — "We made no agreements against any third power. We have no time to threaten anybody," declared foreign minister, Chicherin, today in a statement recapitulating the results obtained from his recent meeting at Odessa with the Turkish foreign minister, Tewfik Rusdi Bey.

"We created no Pan-Asiatic or any other leagues," the foreign minister added.

PEKING CABINET, WAR LORD TOOL, GIVES UP GHOST

Canton Power Grows as Militarists Weaken

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, Nov. 29.—The Peking government is broke and has resigned. The resignations have been forwarded to the five northern war lords, the most important of whom are Chang Tso Lin and Wu Pei Fu, the real powers in the direction of Peking affairs whose troops are in control of the capitol.

It is well known that the Peking "shadow" government has been operating for many months on the slenderest resources. Government revenues are actually in the hands of the militarist chiefs and the Peking cabinet has been progressively starved until it could carry on no longer.

Kao Ting Orders Out.

Wellington Koo, former Chinese ambassador to the U. S., and two other ministers are the only ones left to carry on the so-called government. The powers have been aware for a long time of the extreme weakness of the Peking cabinet and have, while observing certain formalities, negotiated directly with the war lords of the provinces.

But mere is not the only reason for the resignation. The march of the Cantonese down the Yangtze valley has much to do with the governmental panic that reigns in Peking. Reports from Amoy tell of another important city falling to the revolutionaries. Foo Chow, an important treaty port of 700,000 population, has been captured from Marshal Sun Chuang Fang, who continues to retreat.

The Cantonese are new in control of seven large provinces with a population of over 200,000,000. Their activities extend to all parts of China and the sympathies of the masses are unquestionably with Canton. There seems to be no prospect of stopping the revolutionary determination of the Southerners, who have set as their goal the conquering of the whole of China for the republic on anti-imperialist and anti-militarist platform.

Powers to Stay in China.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—The report of thirteen large nations, whose representatives met under the chairmanship of Silas Strawn, of the United States consulted in China for many months on the question of extra-territorial rights, has been made public and declares that the powers have decided not to relinquish their hold in the various parts of China to which they have established concessions.

The commission report gives as the chief reason for the refusal of the powers to withdraw the extraordinary powers they have assumed on Chinese territory, the inability of the Chinese

F.-L. P. SENATOR AT WHITE HOUSE WITH OLD GUARD

Accepts Cal Coolidge Invite to Breakfast

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 29.—The "old guard" in the republican party le happy here today over being lured Hendrik Shipsted, the nasete farmer-labor senator, to breakfast conference held at the vitation of President Coolidge at White House.

The charges of bribery and corruption hurled at the republican forces in Maine, where an election is held today, created a situation w Shipsted's vote may be the deciding factor between the democrats and republicans when the senate convenes a week from today.

Seek G. O. P. Unity

The ostensible purpose of the breakfast table was to afford the executive an opportunity to confer with the republican leaders of the senate the legislative program for the short session, beginning next Monday.

Actually it was regarded as another administration step toward the elimination of the liberal factions ism, and the establishment of party harmony against the time in the fortieth senate when republican supremacy will be sorely needed.

Shipsted's inclusion among the breakfast guests caused considerable comment in political quarters. It was said to be the first time the farmer-laborite has ever sat at the White House table. Recently he was invited by republican leaders of the senate, informally, to become affiliated with the republicans of the Senator Couzens declined to offer any comment as he frequently has been on the "outs" with the administration, and has many times sensational battles with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon. He has been in

NAVY ACTS PART OF 'ARBITRATOR' IN NICARAGUA

Rebel Leader Boards U. S. Flagship

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Nov. 29.—For the second time during the period of the United States occupation of Nicaragua, the presidential election and the consequent rebellion of the liberal forces in the interior has called upon the American navy to act as arbitrator. Benjamin Mongada has been called aboard the flagship of Rear Admiral Julian Latimer with a view to forcing Jose Bilbao to lay down their arms and accept the Diaz regime.

Navy Lands.

Just after the fake election of Diaz by the machine-controlled chamber of deputies and the arrival of the United States naval forces off Bluefields, Mongada and a number of liberal leaders were brought aboard the cruiser Rochester. They refused to accede to Rear Admiral Latimer's request that they support Diaz and left the warship with the declaration that they would fight.

In the meantime, more troops were landed from the U. S. ships and U. S. naval authorities issued statements in which they implied their determination to wipe out the rebels. They blockaded the coast and on several occasions held up boats being used by the liberals in their campaign against Diaz.

Rebels Overwhelmed.

The appearance of Mongada on board the Rochester again is evidence of the fact that the liberals are realizing the hopelessness of their fight against Diaz because it means as well a fight against the United States navy which is the real power here.

rival teams. It was a splendid advertising campaign, as obvious as the Eucharistic Congress was a piece of political ballyhooing on the part of the catholic church. Of course the masses did not take it that way. The politicians who peddled tickets at a premium and the ticket brokers who were caught in a snowstorm knew what it was all about. They tried to make money out of the game and the politicians succeeded.

But beneath the intrigues of rival reactionary politicians and the illness, real or alleged, of her imbecile husband, there is reason to believe that the oppressed masses of that unfortunate country are straining at their fetters.

IT is quite possible that the $100,000,000 loan which the queen wanted to jimmy out of the safes of the American bankers was specifically needed to purchase poison gas for the next revolt of the Roumanian workers and peasants. But much the our bankers hate the working class, they love their money more and will not lend it even for such a worthy cause without a reasonable assurance that it will come back like the scriptural bread cast upon the waters.

THIRTY one Iowa banks have closed their doors during the last three weeks. This is written on flunday, and it is reasonable to assume that half a dozen more scalps are now hanging in the wigwams of the Iowa bankers. We have often stated in this column that the most dangerous bank robbers in the country are the bank officials None of those institutions were broken into by liberal robbers. Yet several combinations of bankers are always howling for armed vigilantes to stop bank robberies. It is well for them that their pleas remain unheeded—provided the vigilantes would shoot the chief culprits.

BANKERS are a favored species. The state banking commission of Iowa conducted an investigation into the closings, and heavy shipments of reserve funds being rushed to the stricken banks. And in view of the financial epidemic this statement issued by the commission makes one like to know how many Iowa banks closed their doors during the past six years. Here is the gem "Banking conditions in Iowa are far better than they have been for six years and there is no occasion for any extended comment generally, for conditions are good." Perhaps, for the bankers!

MAKE MUSSOLINI REMOVE BANS ON SPEECH FREEDOM

Threat of Disruption Forces Action

ROME, Nov. 29.—Realization that his grip on the fascist party is weakening has forced Premier Mussolini, who is avowedly opposed to everything smacking of "democracy," to repeal his orders of the governor.

Vice Governor D'Ardesia and 10 rectors are said to have joined in the battle, and all have presented their resignations which have been accepted.

ROME GOVERNOR BREAKS WITH MUSSOLINI OVER GOVERNMENT AUTHORITY

ROME, Nov. 29.—Premier Mussolini has "accepted" the resignation of Senator Filippo Cremonesi as governor of Rome and will probably appoint Prince Boncompagni to the office.

The resignation of the governor follows a free-for-all rumpus in the capital, which is said to have grown out of a dispute as to the authority of the governor.

Victory for Opposition.

This is seen as a victory for the "fascist-democrats," who have proved troublesome to Mussolini. It came because complete disruption of the party was imminent as a result of Mussolini's denial of the right of members of the party to express their ideas freely.

Coercion Failed.

Mussolini tried to curb the democratic first by abolishing all discussion of policies and second by abolishing local elections. But party ante chafed so much under the prohibitions that the premier was forced to retract to avoid a collapse of the black-shirt movement.

The new action does not give the party members any more actual control, however, all of it remaining with Mussolini.

Letters Confound Defense.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29. — Two phanton witnesses stepped out of the past to confound the defense in the conspiracy trial of Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, and E. L. Doheny, millionaire oil operator.

The first of these came in the form of a letter written by Fall on Dec. 20, 1921, in which he told a senate investigating committee he had borrowed the $100,000 with which he had acquired a new Mexico ranch from E. B. McLean, Washington and Cincinnati publisher, and had never sought money from Doheny or any other oil man.

The second came in a baby doctaphone transcript of the testimony of Doheny on Jan. 24, and before the same committee in which he repudiated Fall's statement and admitted it was he who made the loan—and made it without security and minus any interest charge.

to grant adequate protection to foreigners. It outlines the weaknesses in the judicial and enforcement branches of Chinese government and declares that the administration of justice in China is non-existent for both the Chinese and foreign nationals.

Based On Worth.

The fact that extra-territorial rights have been achieved by foreign nations by armed power is not mentioned in the report. It is also confined to the northern part of China and bases its complaint upon the maladministration of the governments of the north by the militarist generals. It makes no mention of the situation with regard to the Canton government, now in control of half of the country and likely to be in control of it all.

The contradiction of basing the report on the bad actions of the militarists when the larger powers are openly supporting against the Cantonese, whose system of government is not referred to, does not seem to trouble the commissioners. Summed up, the decision to retain extra-territorial rights, is tantamount to a decision to extend the growing imperialist domination of foreign capital. In view of the collaboration between the foreign powers and the militarists on the one hand and the enmity between the powers and the Cantonese on the other—with the Cantonese leading the militarists—the upshot of the report can only be that it is directed against the nationalist movement represented by Canton.

Strike Against British.

WUCHANG, Nov. 29. The strike of Chinese labor unions against the British concession in Wuchang is having the effect upon the British whose panic has caused them to dispatch a radio appeal to London for 500 marines to be dispatched up the Yangtze to their aid. They are in no danger of physical harm as the Canotonese government has efforts well in hand But the British are faced with great inconvenience due to their inability to get food and service.

Servants, washermen, shop assistants, rice dealers and railwaymen have already struck and British business men are in a quandery. The strike is spreading to Kinkiang and other cities where the British have concessions.

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

NEVER let an item favorable to the Union of Soviet Republics get into our columns."

This is reliably reported to be one of the many editorial regulations under which the Chicago Tribune, that styles itself "The World's Greatest Newspaper," is issued.

But this isn't all. Instead its columns are filled with the worst political propaganda against the workers' republic, falsehoods that parade as the truth and are accepted as such by hundreds of thousands of readers.

All the indications are that The Tribune has adopted the same policy against the Mexican republic, especially since the war against the oil and rubber profiteers and the landlords has developed into a struggle with the catholic church.

Arturo M Elias, consul general of Mexico at New York City, has just exposed two of the most flagrant instances of the carrying out of this Tribune policy.

In the November 6 issue of The Tribune's weekly magazine, "Liberty," edited by Joseph Medill Patterson, there appears a picture with this caption: "Catholics withdrawing deposits from the Bank of Mexico in protest against the seizure of church property." The picture is part of the anti-Mexican propaganda contained in a series of articles by Carleton Sutherland entitled, "The Machete Versus the Cross." The nature of the rest of the material appearing in these articles may be judged from the facts concerning this faked illustration.

Consul General Elias presents the picture of the bank's opening, more than a year ago, containing no line back the official stamp of the bank and the data, "Sept. 1, 1925." It is identical with the picture that appeared in Liberty Magazine. Mr. Elias points out:

"The pictures are the same. In reality, in place of being a picture as claimed by 'Liberty' of persons taking funds OUT of the Bank of Mexico, it is a picture of persons waiting to put funds IN the new bank after it had been officially declared open by President Calles who and the government officials were present within.

"On Sept. 2, 1925, the morning of the day following the opening of the Bank of Mexico, "El Democrata," a paper then publishing in Mexico City, published the same picture of the inauguration of the new bank that 'Liberty' the magazine owned by the Chicago Tribune, tricked a portion of the American public into believing was a picture of something entirely different."

It is pointed out that there was another faked picture in this series of articles A United States engineer operating mines in Mexico, Mr. E. R. Torsler of Cleveland, Ohio, had a letter in the New York Times of Nov. 14, charging that a picture which 'Liberty' claimed depicted the hanging of peons in Nayarit as a result of a religious riot was in reality a hanging of bandits two years before and that he had in his possession for over a year the identical photograph that 'Liberty' had claimed was a picture of a recent happening."

This is merely a repetition of pictures faked in an effort to stir up prejudice against the Bolshevik revolution and the Soviet Union. Thus, in 1921, the Chicago Tribune published a picture that purported to show soldiers shooting down breadless rioters in Leningrad. The fraud perpetrated by The Tribune was clearly evident, since other American newspapers had published the picture two years before, pointing out that it actually depicted the czarist soldiery shooting down workers before the Bolshevik revolution was triumphant. This is the kind of stuff the workers and farmers jam into their brains, when they go far forzet themselves as to spend their money buying capitalist sheets like The Tribune, and its foul offspring, the so-called Liberty Magazine.

The Mexican consul general, Elias, exposing this condition, appeals to "Americans who cherish the ethics of his profession to protest against such a deliberate attempt to deceive the public of North America as to happenings in Mexico."

"As the consul general of Mexico, I take the only means open to me," he says, "to reach the people of this country in an attempt to expose such sinister methods to place Mexico in a false light before the great American people And I know that the vast majority of editors will resent this outrageous violation of fair play as strongly as myself."

The Mexican consul general, however, will learn thru bitter experiences, often repeated, that he is wrong about the editors of the American capitalist press Practically all of them, almost daily, perpetrate similar fakes. That is part of their business of injecting fraud and hoax into the news, in support of the propertied interests and against the working class.

Mexico seeks to retrieve its natural resources, to some extent, from the grabbers and the Calles regime. That is a crime in the eyes of Washington and London. The frightened imperialists cry that Mexico is going Soviet. Even the lackeys of great business, who have wormed their way to the top in the councils of the labor movement in this country, shout "Bolshevists!" against the workers of Mexico. Thus the drum fire of the whole capitalist attack draws in every ally of the exploiters, with the press and the pulpit most active.

One hundred per cent of the kept editors of the American capitalist press will fail to resent in the least the fake perpetrated by The Tribune. The guilt of The Tribune merely consists in getting caught at it. That cannot be forgiven. If the bought press is caught in too many frauds then the readers may get suspicious.

Consul General Elias can help the workers of the United States, and the workers and peasants of Mexico by exposing the frauds of The Tribune and also pointing out that this grows out of its subservience to the American dollar, and that this practice is inherent in the whole capitalist press. That will help exploited toil in both countries, a little, in more ably fighting the enemy capitalist class.

KIRBY PAGE, WHEN QUESTIONED BY HIS AUDIENCE, BRINGS OUT POINTS FAVORABLE TO SOVIET GOVERNMENT

What started out to be the drawing of a deadly parallel between the two "dictatorships" of Italy and Russia, on the part of Kirby Page, editor of The World Tomorrow, before the Chicago Forum at Erlanger Theater, softened off at the end and brought a round of hearty applause, when the speaker said: "Balancing the evils of the Bolshevist government against the good, I feel that the good far outweighs the evil. I believe that the present government of the Soviets is far better than that of any of the czars and that the great majority of the Russian people would say so."

Than in the question period which followed, much that the speaker had omitted in his comparative analysis of the two countries was brought out. He said that the national minorities under the Soviets had more freedom than anywhere else on earth. He said that the new regime had done much to improve the position of women. He said most decidedly that the United States should recognize the Soviet government.

Page, in reply to other questions, spoke of the new spirit that has sprung up in the workers and peasants since the revolution, of the prodigious worship of science, which exceeded that in any other part of the world.

Very frankly, in reply to a question as to why the United States recognized Italy and not the Soviets, he said it hinged entirely on the relative attitudes toward private property.

Asked if the Bolsheviks had a standard of morality, he replied: "Most decidedly they have. It is to work for the common good. It does not, as in this country, concern so much the sex relations. It concerns itself more with honesty, corrupt officials have been shot in Russia."

When at five o'clock the flood of questions was stopped by the chairman, Fred Atkins Moore, who called time, the affair had evolved into quite a pro-Soviet gathering.

Teigan Issues Statement.

Note:—The DAILY WORKER publishes the accompanying statement by H. G. Teigan, secretary of the Minnesota Farmar-Labor Party, sent out by the Federated Press. Teigan declared that Shipstead will not desert to the republicans. This is more than Shipstead has said for himself, in fact, he sabotaged the recent campaign in Minnesota before the elections, and has been flirting with the republicans ever since. Participation by Shipstead in the socalled "breakfaste" at the White House, an invitation of Coolidge, with only republicans present, indicate that Shipstead is developing a strong republican appetite. The DAILY WORKER endorses everything that Teigan has to say about maintaining and strengthening the Farmar-Labor Party in Minnesota. Its statement follows

By H. G. TEIGAN, Secretary, State Central Committee, Farmar-Labor Party of Minnesota.

A few years ago when the non-partisan league was attempting to capture the machinery of the old parties, he politicians and the newspapers cried out "Why do you socialists try to steal the republican party? Why don't you organize a party of your own and sail under your own colors."

In Minnesota the non-partisans and organized labor did that very thing, and contrary to the expectations of the enemy the party of the non-partisans and organized labor proved quite successful.

In spite of the apathy of the rotters, lack of campaign funds, the pressure of economy and efficiency on the part of the present republican state administration, the Farmer-Labor party candidate for governor of Minnesota polled more than 225,000 votes Nov 2. This represents nearly 40 per cent of the total vote cast

Party Stronger Than Ever.

Moreover, the farmer-labor folks elected two congressmen by large majorities, more than twice as many senators and approximately twice as many representatives. Judged by the vote for legislators the party is stronger than ever.

Notwithstanding these facts, the cry of the politicians now is that the party cannot weather another election. Arthur Sewall Henning, the highly paid dopester of the Chicago Tribune Press service predicts Sen Shipstead's return to the republican party. Now that his party has been "resolved". The wish is father to the thought.

The farmer-labor party will win in Minnesota in 1928. Shipstead will be returned to the United States senate as a farmer-laborite, not as a republican. What is more, the law of Minnesota prevents any farmer-laborite now holding public office from filing for reelection as a member of another party. Shipstead could not legally file as a republican and it is equally certain he would not be displayed to do so.

The progressives of Minnesota have achieved far more success thru the farmer-labor party than they ever achieved thru the old parties. In the short period of four years, the party has elected two United States senators and three congressmen

That the progressives of Minnesota cannot hope for success thru the republican party can be shown by the results of 1922. In that year a straight candidate filed for the republican nomination in opposition to U. S. Sen. Frank B. Kellogg. The farmer-labor slate was nominated in its primary without opposition. There was plenty of opportunity offered the progressive voters to participate in the republican primary. Notwithstanding this fact, Kellogg won the nomination by 23,000 plurality.

But at the general election of that year, Hearik Shipstead, farmer-labor, defeated Kellogg by more than 53,000 plurality, and Kvale and Wefald were elected to the house as third-party men.

The farmer-labor party of Minnesota has not dissolved. It does not expect to accommodate the politicians or the interests by doing anything of the sort.

Except for a few immature-minded folks in the party, there is no disposition on the part of the farmer-labor party people to resort to a form of political opportunism that has been repeatedly proven inopportune.

A brief review of the work of the party in this district during the last year was made, various shortcomings pointed out and a number of concrete organizational measures outlined for future work.

Stress Organization.

Questions of organization received most of the attention and the problem of forming functioning fractions in the trade unions and fraternal societies was discussed at length. All resolutions and decisions were adopted unanimously, showing the progress the party made in unifying its ranks.

The conference adjourned determined to take full advantage of the present favorable situation in the district in order to build the party and the Young Workers' League.

Comrade Gitlow's report on the last meeting of the plenum of the central executive committee was most interesting and instructive and was approved unanimously by the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolution on C. E. C. Report.

"The conference adopts the report of Comrade Gitlow on the deliberations of the last plenum of the C. E. C. of our party and expresses full confidence in the C. E. C. that is leading our party to success. The conference pledges its full support to the leadership of our party in building up a mass Communist Party in America.

"The conference calls upon the membership to do all in their power to see to it that the work outlined by the plenum is put into life."

Organizational Problems.

"The report of the district organizer establishes the following facts:

"1. The objective conditions in this district are favorable for Communist work. This is seen by the general discontent among the workers with existing conditions, from the response to the various united front campaigns initiated and directed by the Workers Party, from the intensive struggle between the progressives and reactionaries in the miners' union, from the influence of the party in various labor organizations.

"2. Against these favorable objective conditions stand the persecutions against the Communists and their sympathisers on the part of the government, followed by blacklists and discharges from jobs of the workers suspected of being radicals and intimidation of workers by company gunmen and spies. Also the shutting down of a number of large mines, which enrolled many workers to remain idle for months and months and to move to other more favorable districts. The conditions amongst the miners have temporarily changed during the last several weeks.

"3. The Workers (Communist) Party is at present the only labor organization that is leading the workers and their organizations along militant and progressive lines. The party in this district has during the last year carried on an enormous amount of work thru a number of united front campaigns; by participating in the elections and by carrying on various other activities of a political nature. The party is at present in close contact with larger masses of workers than ever before.

"4. While the party is engaged in numerous activities its membership shows a serious decline. That is due to numerous reasons—closing of mines where we had functioning units, expulsion policy carried on by the miners' and steel workers' unions, government prosecutions, and partly because of the reorganization. The decline in membership and failure to get in a number of new members was also partly due to the failure of the party machinery to devote sufficient attention to organization work.

"5. The reorganization of the party, while partly responsible for the loss of a certain number of members, has improved considerably the character of the party work and increased the efficiency and militancy of the party. While the first steps of the reorganization were carried thru it is now necessary to make an effort to overcome the difficulties with which many nuclei are confronted and to build a better and stronger party on the basis of shop and street nuclei.

"In order to achieve this the conference recommends that the following steps be taken by the D. E. C.:

"1. That a well functioning organization department be established in all units of the district beginning with the D. E. C. and ending with the street and shop nuclei.

"2. That sub-district conferences be held thruout the district within one month's time where new sub-district committees will be elected.

"3. That each sub-district organizer be instructed to submit regular monthly reports to the district organizer. These reports to be carefully examined by the district organizations' committees.

"4. The district organizer or other representative of the D. E. C. shall regularly attend the meetings of the sub-district committees and help them to direct their work.

"5. That in the immediate future the district organizer shall make a tour over the district, visiting at least the leading party committees and the most important shop and street nuclei, with a view of making a thoro study of district situation and of instructing the comrades of the work of the party.

"6. That the street and shop nuclei be responsible for the work of their membership and that all important activities be carried on thru the nuclei and not thru individual members.

"7. That the work of the party be so organized as to make it possible for each and every member of the party to take active part in it.

"8. That a serious effort be made to have the shop nuclei of important shops, mills and mines to issue shop bulletins, the district office to assist in this work as much as possible.

"9. That a drive for new members be initiated in the shops and a special campaign be started to organize new party units, especially in places where there are a number of readers of party papers and where good connections were established thru the miners' campaign. A group of leading comrades be mobilized for this work in addition to the regular field organizer.

"10. Serious steps to be taken to revive the party organization in the non-union territory, such as West Virginia, coke region and western and mid-western Pennsylvania.

Resolution on DAILY WORKER.

"Keep The DAILY WORKER and build it into a powerful fighting weapon of the working class. This is one of the most outstanding problems confronting our party in this district at the present time.

"Every comrade in the party must take immediate steps to overcome the present situation.

"The following organizational measures must be taken:

"1. Every comrade must sell The DAILY WORKER coupon books and turn in $5.00 for same.

"2. Every unit should visit workers and workers' organizations outside the party and by this means secure a wider support for Keep The DAILY WORKER Fund.

"3. Every unit must select a live DAILY WORKER agent who shall be responsible for building up the machinery for the support of the daily and for increasing its circulation.

"4. The comrades must keep The DAILY WORKER with news and then use the news and stories as a means of increasing the circulation of The DAILY WORKER.

"The comrades must be made to realize that The DAILY WORKER is one of the strongest weapons in the workers' struggles and must do every-

CITIZENS' UNION JOINS FIGHT ON SCHOOL ACTION

Flays Barring of Civil Liberties Union

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—The Citizens' Union has joined the fight of the American Civil Liberties Union against the action of the New York City board of education denying permission for the holding of a meeting in the Stuyvesant high school building for the purpose of discussing "Old-Fashioned Free Speech." The school board refused permission for the meeting on the grounds that the Civil Liberties Union was a "radical organization." The board claimed that it reserved the right of censorship "to insure definite support of American institutions and truthful and moral teaching."

Brands Action Bigotry.

In a letter to the state commissioner of education, the Citizens' Union declared that "the board's action smacks of personal antipathy and bigotry."

"Public property should be open to the use of all persons desiring to use it on equal terms. If speakers and organizations are permitted to speak in the schools on certain points of view, the expression of the opposite views cannot in fairness be banned," the letter stated.

Hypersensitive Imagination.

"Nothing could be more consonant with American institutions and truthful and moral teaching than a discussion of the subject, 'Old-Fashioned Free Speech,' and it is equally obvious that it was only an inflamed and hypersensitive imagination that could conclude that Rev. John Haynes Holmes, Arthur Garfield Hayes, John Nevin Sayre and James Weldon Johnson, in discussing the subject of 'Old Fashioned Free Speech,' intended to be or would be guilty of violating the criminal law.

"The organization in question, the American Civil Liberties Union, is a reputable organization whose member ship includes many of our leading citizens and whose purpose and work receive commendation from a large number of the highest type. Indeed, many of them are among our very best citizens, who are active in public matters from all over the country."

"GREATEST MOVING PICTURE EVER PRODUCED", IS DESCRIPTION OF "BREAKING CHAINS", BY CRITICS

"The greatest moving picture I have ever seen," was the unanimous comment of the press representatives who saw "Breaking Chains," to be shown in Chicago on Dec. 3, at a special showing arranged for them a few days ago. The acting, light effects, setting and general technique is a good if not better than any picture that Hollywood has ever been able to turn out.

Child Actress Good.

The child actress in "Breaking Chains" is a feature by herself. She is called upon to do high-pitched emotional stuff when her father, after having been killed on the barricades, is brought into the house. And this child of not more then 10 years plays her part in a manner that puts her high above a Jackie Coogen or any other juvenile actor that is known to us. Douglas Fairbanks, who recently returned from a lengthy visit to Russia declares that the Russian pictures are the best in the world, and when you see "Breaking Chains" you will agree with him.

Romance.

"Breaking Chains" is a picture of a romance coupled with the revolution and reconstruction. In it one sees the soul of the Russian worker and peasant; their hopes, aspirations and determination to rise not only in the realm of economics but art as well.

The demand for "Breaking Chains" in other cities is great. In all probability those who fail to see it in Chicago on December 3 at the Douglas Park Auditorium Ogden and Kedzie Aves. will forfeit their opportunity of seeing it at all. The tickets should be bought early at the places listed below and to be sure of a seat come early. Tickets are procurable at the following addresses:

Ravinia Musicians to Get Increased Wage

The Chicago Federation of Musicians announce that an agreement has been signed with the company which produces summer grand opera at Ravinia, covering the next two summers, under the terms of which the symphony players are given a $7.50 raise over the present rate of $80 a week, for the first summer, and an additional increase of $7.50 for the following season. The weekly scale provides that nine performances shall be played. The rate of $6 for four rehearsals remains unchanged. The agreement affects about fifty members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra who accept

'99 TO THOSE WHO HAVE GOT IT, AND GET IT' TO HELP THE DAILY WORKER

Dear Comrade! I am sending herewith $100, the mount expected of District No. 10 by the first. You may rest assured that the entire $1,000 expected of this district will be raised. While we were fortunate enuf to get this $100 thru the kindness of Comrade Hollman, we are getting our forces in action for a drive that will put us over the top.

In a letter that I received from you some days ago you requested that I write a brief statement as to the methods used to raise this money. In justice to Comrade Oehler, our district secretary, it is correct to state that he has done the lions share of the work. Others, of course, are supporting him, but to him should go the greater credit. We organized our work along the lines submitted in a letter from Comrade Levzstone and followed that work by personal contact with all friends of the cause. There is only one way to get money, JUST GO TO THOSE WHO HAVE IT and get it.

I am yours for the cause,

Technical Aid Society to Sovet Russia Now in Increased Activity

NEW YORK, Nov. 29. — After a comparative lapse of activity in the New York branch of Technical Aid Society for a short time, the branch has again renewed its activity, particularly in helping to organize industrial co-operatives for Soviet Russia.

In the past the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia concerned itself only with organizing agricultural communes, but as a result of the industrial development in Soviet Russia, there has arisen an urgent need in industrial co-operatives organized by the workers themselves, for all necessary equipment and machinery; this will enhance the development of industries in Soviet Russia.

Workers and sympathizers of Soviet Russia that wish to come to the aid of Soviet Russia, have now the opportunity to do so. They will not only help the Soviet government, but they will themselves get the full benefit from their own labor.

Join the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia. Everyone can become a member even tho he may not belong to any of the co-operatives.

A NEW NOVEL

By Upton Sinclair

(Copyright, 1926, by Upton Sinclair)

"The Devil's Deputy" was to have its "world premiere" at Gloobry's Million Dollar Melanesian Theater; and these "world premieres" are, as you may know, the great social events of Southern California. Searchlights search the clouds and bombs boom in the sky; red fire make an imitation Hades in the streets and klieg lights make day in the arcade which the million dollar Melanesians hold upright upon their naked shoulders. The crowds pack the streets, and swarms of burglars invade the city because all the police department is required to make a path for the movie stars as they move in their appointed courses, for their shining ten thousand dollar limousines, across the walk and through the arcade and under the million dollar palm tails. The klieg glare upon them, and a dozen moving picture cameras grind, and flashlights boom, and the crowd surges and quivers and murmurs with ecstacy.

Never in all human history has there been such glory; never have the eyes of mortals beheld such royal pageantry! Traders and hunters have perished in the icy wastes of the arctic to bring the ermines and sables in which these queens are robed; divers have been torn by sharks to bring up their pearls from the depths of tropic seas, and miners have been crushed in the deep earth as they dig their blazing diamonds; chemists have blown themselves to bits in search for their cosmetics and dyes, and seamstresses have grown blind embroidering the elaborate designs which twinkle upon their silken ankles. All this concentrated in one last glory-march—do you wonder that heads are high and glances regal? Or that the crowd surges, and rushes wildly, and weeps and faints, and ambulances come clanging?

Inside the theater, over the head of one of the million dollar Melanesians, is a huge megaphone; and as the great ones descend from their cars, a radiant's voice acquaints the audience with their progress. "Mr. Abraham Schmolsky is coming through the arcade. Mr. Schmolsky is accompanied by Mrs. Schmolsky. Mrs. Schmolsky wears a blue satin opera cloak trimmed with chinchilla, made by Voisin, just brought by Mrs. Schmolsky from Paris. Mrs. Schmolsky wears her famous tiara of diamonds. And Mrs. Schmolsky are now entering the theater. Mr. and Mrs. Schmolsky have stopped to talk with Mr. and Mrs. Peach Glory."

And so on and on, thrill after thrill—until at last, exactly the sacred hour of eight-thirty, the supreme, the superthrill of the evening:

"Miss Viola Tracy is descending from her car. Miss Tracy is accompanied by her friend, Mr. J. Arnold Ross, junior, discoverer and heir-apparent of the Ross Junior oil field, of Paradise, California. Miss Tracy and Mr. Ross are now entering the arcade. Miss Tracy wears a cloak of gorgeous ermine from her slippers are of white satin, trimmed with pearls. She wears a collar of pearls and a pearl head-dress, presented to her by Mr. J. Arnold Ross, senior. Miss Tracy and Mr. Ross, junior, are in the lobby, shaking hands with Mr. and Mrs. Schmolsky and Mr. and Mrs. Glooby"—and so on, until Miss Tracy and Mr. Ross, junior, are in their seats, and history is at liberty to [illegible]

So Bunny saw the Russian picture. His beloved was the beautiful bride of a grand duke; and he watched all the gestures, the kisses, the raptures of love, to which had been rehearsed upon himself, were now lavished upon a magnificent, sharp-whiskered personage in military uniform with many stars and orders. This personage was a haughty man hide-minded, and his grand duchess was the soul of charity; and oh, sweet to see! gentle peasants as she had to exercise her charity upon! How sweetly they courtesied, how charmingly they danced, and gathered to cheer and throw flowers after the grand ducal carriage! It was a beautiful, almost idyllic world—one was tempted really to doubt whether any world so perfect ever had existed on earth.

There was only one thing wrong with it, and that was a secret band of villains with twisted, degenerate faces, some of them with wild hair and big spectacles, others with ferocious black whiskers and knives in their boots. They met to conceive anarchist manifestoes, intended to seduce the sweet innocent peasants; and to make dynamite bombs to blow up noble-minded grand dukes. They drank in booze-dens and grabbed women by the arms and man-handled them, right out before one another. There was no wickedness these creatures did not do, and their leader, with the face of a rat and the arms of a gorilla, made evident to the dullest mind why the picture was called "The Devil's Deputy."

Then came the young secret service man, clean-cut, smooth-shaven, quick on the trigger. His job was to get messages from the American embassy to the American fleet, and later on to save the treasure of the embassy from the Bolsheviks. For of course you know what happened in Russia! How this band of villains with twisted faces rose up and overthrew the government, and killed the haughty but just grand duke with cruel tortures. It was, of course, the grand duchess that the Devil's Deputy especially wanted; and first he chased her about the castle, and battered in the doors, and the young secret service hero dashed with her from room to room. Blood ran down his face from a bullet wound, but he carried her out of a window of the castle, and away they flew on horseback, over hills and dales covered with the familiar Russian eucalyptus trees.

And then presently they were trapped in St. Petersburg, and the Devil's Deputy laid his foul hands on Vee, and tore her lingerie to shreds, as the billboards had promised you he would. But here came the hero with his automatic, and he held the mob at bay, while Vee behind her back made signals to a friend of the hero who was preparing one of the villain's own bombs to throw at them—could you imagine more poetic justice than that? Vee and her savior fled, this time in a motor-car, over roads of the well-known Russian concrete, through the well-known mosaic tiles of the suburbs of St. Petersburg, and came to the River Neva with its eucalyptus groves concealing a speed-boat. There was another mad chase, which ended in the capture of the appetized pair, and more tearing of Vee's lingerie by the Devil's Deputy.

But—don't be worried—at the most critical instant came the American Navy, that whole glorious flotilla which we kept in the River Neva during the war. Old Glory floated in the breeze, and the band played "The Stars and Stripes Forever," and the million dollar audience burst into enraptured cheering. A launch from a battleship came dashing up, the Devil's Deputy leaped into the water with one of his own bombs in his mouth, and Viola Tracy and the secret service man stood clasped in an attitude which was familiar to Bunny, and hardly less so to the million dollar audience.

All the time this story was unfolding, Bunny was perhaps to sit and hold the heroine's hand. Once she leaped to him and whispered, "Is it so very bad?" His answer was, "It is up to standard. It will sell." It was the formula she had used on Annabelle Ames; and Bunny felt a tight pressure of his [illegible]

GRANTS CONCESSION FOR AIRSHIP ROUTE, SPAIN TO ARGENTINE

MADRID, Nov. 29.—The first transoceanic air company is now an actuality.

The state council today gave its approval to a concession for a regular line of dirigibles to operate between Sevilla and Buenos Aires, with the provision that the company establish a regular monthly service within three years.

Under the terms of the concession the company is obliged to supply airships with a minimum capacity of forty passengers and ten tons of general freight. Two passenger reservations are to be made on each trip for the Spanish government.

The company announces that it will build three dirigibles to operate the service, at an estimated cost of $1,000,000 each.

Concessions were also granted to the company to operate a dirigible line between Spain and the Canaries, with dirigibles of a capacity of sixteen passengers and one ton of freight.

The Spanish government will advance 30,000,000 pesetas to aid the company in its project.

ENGLAND, FRANCE TO CLASH OVER GERMAN CONTROL

Britain to Inject China Into Arms Parley

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 29 — Discussion of disarmament restrictions on Germany, with England and France at near sword points on the issue, will form the main business of the meeting of the league of nations council at Geneva in December.

The matter directly affects France's desires to place the power of restricting Germany in the hands of the league. France objects strenuously, insisting that first Germany must comply with the minimum provisions of the Versailles treaty.

China Policy Enters.

Great Britain's Chinese policy will have a direct bearing on the negotiations. Among the demands to be submitted in Germany by Great Britain is one designed to prevent Germany exporting arms and munitions to the military forces in China. Great Britain will insist on this, it is understood, while France is inclined to view the demand as "insignificant."

Would Control Army.

Great Britain will also demand that legislation be passed subordinating the commander of the reichswehr to the minister of war, who is responsible to parliament. It these two demands are won Britain is willing to surrender all other control to the league.

Hold Secret Sessions.

The league principle of "open secrecy" is to be discarded, it is definitely understood, in dealing with the matter. Plans are now being made for a secret session between Sir Austen Chamberlain, British foreign secretary, Aristide Briand, French foreign minister, and Gustav Stresemann, German foreign minister.

Great Britain is extremely anxious that the matter be settled quickly so that English capitalists can feel "secure" in German investments

$35,000,000 OF IMPORTS TO U. S. ARE FROM RUSSIA

Exports to Soviet Union Are More.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 29. — American imports from the Soviet Union for the Soviet fiscal year ending Sept. 30, were about $35,000,000, according to reports of the American Soviet trading organizations in this country made public here today by the Russian Information Bureau. During the previous year exports reported by the trading organizations were about $20,700,000, and in 1913 they were $7,200,000.

$55,000,000 Exports.

Exports to the Soviet Union were close to $55,000,000, exclusive of exports by the Harrimen Georgian Manganese company and other concessionaries. The figure compares with exports of $87,088,022 reported by the trading companies in 1924-25 and $40,730,000 in 1913. The American imports increased nearly 70 percent and exports decreased about 37 per cent, as compared with 1924-25.

The trade turnover of $90,000,000 compares with $108,000,000 in 1924-25. This difference is accounted for by a decrease in 25 per cent in the cotton purchases here and by the fact that during 1924-25 American exports were increased by Soviet purchases of flour worth $21,000,000, necessitated by the poor harvest of 1924.

Cotton valued at $33,486,000 led the list of American exports to the Soviet Union, followed by agricultural machinery $8,038,000 (including tractors worth $6,099,328), industrial machinery $6,819,300, materials for transport, including trucks and motor buses, $2,295,400, non-ferrous metals $2,034,400, American typewriters to the value of $558,432 were exported.

Fur Imports Heavy.

Furs valued at $15,379,000 led the import list. Manganese (not handled by the trading organizations) is estimated at $15,000,000 as compared with $4,000,000 the previous year. Imports of flax and tow jumped to $1,175,904, as compared with $335,000 the previous year. Other imports included sheep casings $1,020,547, licorice root $590,725, bristles $539,396, hides and skins $467,334, mushrooms $154,763.

Chitcherin May Talk With Herrick in Paris Looking to Recognition

PARIS—Word comes from Moscow to the effect that M. Chitcherin, commissar of foreign affairs of the U. S. S. R., will on his visit to this city in December, approach the American ambassador to France, Herrick, with tentative proposals for the recognition by the United States of the Soviet government, either as de facto or de jure in power. The American embassy denies all knowledge of this intention.

It is understood that the basis on which Chitcherin would deal would be a recognition by the Soviet of Russia's pre-war debt to the United States, on condition that the amount is reduced to the minimum and a long moratorium granted. Indemnity to Americans for losses suffered by reason of the revolution, advantageous concessions to be granted to Americans

STRIKE THREAT BRINGS ACTION ON GRIEVANCES

Anthracite Miners Put Issue Squarely

By ART SHIELDS,
(Federated Press)

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 29. — The strike threat by the general grievance committee of Hudson Coal Co. employes, representing 23,000 workers in 22 local unions, will not be put into execution at present. Umpire Neill, who had been given a week to take up the grievance of the Grassy Island colliery workers about the cut in their rock prices, came to the bat in the scheduled time and a final investigation into the case has been ordered.

This case is three years old. The affair is interesting as showing how mine grievances can drag on indefinitely until the companies are faced with a little unpleasant action.

Three years ago the Grassy Island miners used to be allowed a time pay allowance for the labor of removing rock from the middle of the vein. They were allowed pay for 40 hours or five shifts, every semi-monthly pay, in addition to the payment per ton for the coal loaded. Five shifts at $6.90 per shift, the day rate, put more than $40 into their envelopes as an extra, above their tonnage pay. But three years ago Hudson Coal decided to cut down the rate and the men found themselves getting $5, $6 and $7 for the rock work, instead of the forty-odd.

It was a big slash and the union took the case before the conciliation board representing miners and operators on the grounds that the company had no right to change a rate during the term of an agreement. It went on in the umpire, who decided in principle in favor of the men, but failed to fix the rate. Again back to the local union and the superintendent it climbed up thru the conciliation board to the umpire. The custom calls for an umpire's decision in a month, but Neill had the case three years with out action. So the grievance committee speeded things up by the strike threat.

It came to Scranton and after scolding the grievance committee for its strike ultimatum, took up the case. Then his arrangige the management agreed to have a union committee go into the mine and measure the rock that has to be removed, for the purpose of agreeing again on a rate for this "dead work."

The strike threat did not have the sympathy of the district union executives. The Hudson Coal grievance committee, like all the anthracite company grievance committees, is made up of the combined local union grievance committees.

Detroit Auto Workers to Hear of Strategy of Strike at Passaic

DETROIT, Nov. 29.—Albert Wolsbord, the leader of the great Passaic strike, will make his first visit to the city of Detroit when he addresses a mass meeting on Wednesday, Dec. 8, at 8 p. m. at the Majestic Theater, Woodward near Willis.

The automobile workers of Detroit will get some first-hand information on strike strategy and the organization of a powerful union when Wolsbord relates the story of the Passaic strike and the tactics used to weld the 16,000 unorganized workers into the union which has already won one victory for the workers in Passaic.

On Thursday evening, Dec. 9, Wolsbord will be given a welcome banquet by the Workers Party and its friends and sympathizers.

Admission to the mass meeting will be 15 cents and to the banquet 50 cents.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION WINS HEARING BEFORE BOSS-OWNED COMMISSION AFTER HARD FIGHT

By ART SHIELDS, Federated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—(FP)—After officers of New York building trades unions had been grilled for two days' sessions of the New York Industrial Survey Commission at the Bar Association, and employers had been given a friendly hearing in their complaints about union rules, the labor movement finally swung into the offensive, Harriet Silverman, director of the Workers' Health Bureau, representing many New York labor unions, attacked the proceedings as an anti-labor show and a waste of the people's money—$25,000 having been appropriated for the survey.

Miss Silverman said the commission had been appointed by the legislature for the purpose of holding up important reforms in the state labor law and the Workmen's Compensation law, demanded by the New York State Federation of Labor. She denounced the commission for giving first consideration to employers' attacks on the labor movement, when the workers were being so shamefully neglected by the state's labor and compensation laws.

Interruption Fails.

Henry D. Sayre, former state industrial commissioner, and executive secretary of the Industrial Survey Commission, constantly interrupted the witness and attempted to defend the state's compensation law, but he was partly silenced as her recital of the gaps in the law proceeded. Sayre is connected with an insurance firm that represents employers in compensation cases.

Miss Silverman's statement dwelt on the lack of a blanket occupational disease law in the state—a reform that Connecticut, California, Wisconsin, the federal government, Porto Rico and Hawaii have already enacted. Only a few occupational diseases are compensated in the Empire State. Workers crippled or blinded by certain widely used poisons, dusts and gases are given no protection. Her statement cited the following among scores of basic occupational diseases ignored by the present law.

Deadly Poisons

Carbon Monoxide Poisoning, pronounced by Professor C. E. A. Winslow of Yale as the first of all industrial poisons is not covered, except in cases of outright death where the accident provisions may be invoked. But there is no compensation for chronic poisoning leading to paralysis, blindness and other forms of total disability. Garage workers are most liable to carbon monoxide, but employes in factories where gas is used as a fuel are widely affected also.

Silicosis, a widely prevalent and disastrous occupational disease, is not compensated. Silicosis is an injury to the lung tissue from quartz cutting dust and affects polishers and buffers, pottery and glass workers, stone cutters and men and women in many other industries cited by the witness.

Benzol Poisoning, affecting workers in 57 industries, is not included in the provisions of the present law owing to faulty wording of the statute.

Only a Beginning.

These three well-known causes are only a beginning. The witness named numerous other chemical poisons affecting the workers in scores of industries, in the laundries and bakeshops, in garages and print shops, in tanneries and machine shops, among fur workers, painters, hatters, stonecutters, textile workers, in metals, wood manufacturing, leather and rubber goods, in the food and tobacco industries, in light and power plants, in clothing and millinery, in paper goods, chemicals, oil and the manufacture of paints. In all representative New York industries, workers are now deprived of compensation for some occupational diseases.

As Miss Silverman talked on the small audience grouped about the biz committee table, forgot the complaints of the preceding witnesses, a former boss plumber, that the unions "ruin his business, and they saw, in steadi pictures of air hammer men with atrophied wrists, poisoned painters, bricklayers with lungs ruined by silicosis, dye house workers half dead from anemia.

Agents Commission.

Dr. Sayre attempted to have Miss Silverman ruled out of order when she protested against the appointment of the commission as a waste of funds, and against the present investigation as a method for attacking the unions, but the witness cut him short by reminding him that she had just been compelled to listen for two hours to an employers' attack on the labor movement, and that it was time now for a little plain speaking on the side of labor. She protested further in the name of the bureau's affiliated unions against the red tape that delays compensation payments when such are allowed, against the low $20 maximum for injured workers. She demanded the establishment of an exclusive state insurance fund to take the place of the private profiteering insurance enterprises that feed on workers' compensation today. She demanded that the profits of the large employing interests in the state fund for compensation insurance companies be investigated to the end that the public might have the facts on the ability of the industries in safeguard health and life.

Imitate Militancy of Debs, Not "Kindness," Seattle Workers Told

SEATTLE, Nov. 29 — Workers of all political beliefs attended the Eugene V. Debs memorial meeting here Nov. 21, arranged by the International Labor Defense.

Aaron Finterman, member of the Workers (Communist) Party, was the "keynote" speaker. "I should like to see Debs imitated not in 'goodness and kindness,' but in his militancy," he said. "Only by militancy can we progress. The mythical cloak of kindness in which the true character of Debs has been shrouded since his death is pernicious propaganda of the capitalistic press. We revere Debs because he was a militant revolutionist. Progress is not attained by kindness but by aftruzale and right."

Jean Stovel, secretary of the I. L. D. local, presided at the meeting.

Help Farmer First With Muscle Shoals, Coolidge Is Urged

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 —The chief objective of operation at Muscle Shoals should be to produce cheap fertilizer in the interests of farm relief, O. E. Bradfute, former president of the American Farm Federation, told President Coolidge today.

Power production should be considered secondary, Bradfute contended. He urged that congress take immediate action along this course when it convenes.

The quickest way to farm relief, Bradfute told the president, is to lower production and transportation costs. Fertilizer is one of the biggest items in the farmer's production costs, he said, and if its cost were lowered, farm overhead costs would come down proportionately.

SYDNEY —(FP)— Under a new order by the industrial court, employes in Australian bakery establishments fight: night work is prohibited, are to work a 44-hour week in daytirely and wages range from $30.60 to $32.10 per week. The weekly hours are reduced where double or triple

PAINT COMPANY ADMITS DANGER OF OWN PRODUCT

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 29.— When P. E. Calpin, Scranton painter, wrote the Glidden Co. of Ohio that he had been poisoned by a wond stnin produced by that concern, a company official admitted in his answer that the firm had had similar poison cases among its employes. Calpin is suing the Glidden Co. for $50,000 damages, claiming permanent impairment of his health.

The painter charges that the quart of oak stain contained toxic and poisonous chemicals, which caused him to suffer eruptions of the flesh, swelling of certain glands, pain in the eyes and other distressing symptoms. Calpin says he breathed the fumes of the paint and got some stain on his skin. Great itching resulted and he could not sleep for a long time.

Gets Answer.

Calpin wrote the Glidden Co. of his troubles and received an answer from Dwight P. Joyce, manager of specialties department. Joyce's letter says in part:

"We have found from our experience in our own factories that there are a few people who occasionally are affected in this same manner by the solvents. These solvents have a tendency to dry up the natural fats in skin, causing the eruptions you speak of. The stain ingriients themselves, if not removed from the hands after use, also have a tendency to irritate."

The painter resented the implication that he had not used proper precaution in handling the paint and filed suit for damages, requesting trial by jury.

Hits at Irish Republicans.

DUBLIN—Due to the recent activities of the Republicans, displayed mainly in raids on police barracks, the Irish Free State has practically declared war on them, by issuing a proclamation in which it is stated that a state of national emergency exists. The latest raid was on the barracks at Crumlin, a town three miles from

LEWIS' TOOL IN DISTRICT ONE OUSTS UNIONIST

Will Not Recognize New Checkweighman

By a Worker Correspondent

PITTSTON, Pa., Nov. 29. — At a recent meeting of No. 6 colliery miners of Pittston, they unanimously elected Alex Campbell, ex-member of the international executive board of District No. 1, as check-weighman, to take office December 1, 1926, for a period of two years.

Campbell has long been known as an enemy of Cappellini and Lewis, and has been very active amongst the miners of Pittston recently in behalf of the Brophy organization.

Notify Union.

The local union has been notified by Cappellini that he refuses Campbell permission to act as checkweighman at No. 6 colliery and that the election was illegal."

The men of Pittston have the sole say as to who shall serve them as checkweighman, and Cappellini has nothing to say, according to union law. It is generally understood that Cappellini is working hand in hand with the Pennsylvania Coal Co. to keep Alex Campbell off the tipple as the company hates him and so does Cappellini. Alex asserts he will be on hand December 1 to take over the job at the tipple regardless of Cappellini.

Headgear Workers to Get Bigger Unemployed Benefits from Union

NEW YORK, Nov. 29 — Two changes in the unemployment fund of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' Union have been decided upon by the committee in charge. The changes will be recommended to the membership as constitutional changes. One provides that unemployment benefits be increased from $10 to $15 for men and from $7 to $9 for women. The other is that lost time of laid-off or part-time workers shall be counted when it amounts to 22 hours or more during the respective week. The old provision was the time did not count for such workers until after 22 hours. Workers employed only a half hour or weeks during the slack season benefit by the latter change.

Chairman J. M. Budish of the unemployment committee reported on the fund activities to the union's joint council. The entire period of the fund's existence was covered by Budish, including the financial report of the certified public accountant. Payments by manufacturers to the fund started Sept. 12, 1924. A reserve was allowed to accumulate in the first 16 months of the fund. First payment of benefits began July 1, 1925. The reserve was then $56,601.80. The total income of the fund in the 22 months of existence amounted to $160,364.95, 3 per cent of payrolls from employers, plus interest on the reserve.

Total benefits paid out during the year July 1, 1925, to June 30, 1926, came to $65,383. Total administration expenses were $7,158.55 for the whole 22 months. The administrative expenses, slightly over 4 per cent of the total income, are remarkably small, the Headgear Worker, official union organ, points out. The net balance of the fund in the bank July 1, 1926, was $96,823.43.

Three books that will be an asset to every worker's library are to be given next week for the best worker correspondence story sent to The DAILY WORKER. The prizes are:

1—ELEMENTS OF POLITICAL EDUCATION, by A. Serdnikov and A. Svetlov. This is a new book of such great value that every worker should have it in his library.

2—POEMS FOR THE NEW AGE, by Simon Felshin. The work of a young revolutionary poet whose verse carries the courageous spirit of the coming new order. Cloth bound.

3—RUSSIA TODAY, the report of the British Trade Union Delegation.

Every worker correspondent should send in a story this week.

Workers in every section of the country are eager to learn of conditions in American industry. The worker knows them. We are counting on you, workers, to tell us about them. Send in that story, today!

WILL TAKE PICTURE OF WORKERS CORRESPONDENCE CLASS HERE TO SEND TO GROUPS IN SOVIET UNION

Worker correspondents in Russia and other countries are clamoring for pictures of worker correspondents in America. Russian worker correspondents have already sent group pictures to the United States and want the American workers to reciprocate. Because of this the Chicago class in worker correspondence at the last meeting decided that a picture should be taken of the class and sent to the foreign workers.

Join Class Now.

It is the desire of the class that as many worker correspondents as possible should be represented in the picture. So a call is sent out now to all Chicago workers who have delayed joining the class to do so at once to be represented in the group. The picture will be taken either this Friday night or next Friday night. But every worker who wants to join the class should come this Friday.

The class meets at 8:30 in the editorial offices of The DAILY WORKER, 1113 W. Washington Blvd. It lasts until 8:30 o'clock, which leaves enough time to members who have other meetings on that night to attend them also.

The purpose of the class is to train workers in writing for newspapers. Every worker who wants to receive this training should become a member.

HOW THE WORKERS ARE 'BENEFITTED' BY HOSPITAL IN GARMENT FACTORY

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—The National Cloak and Suit Co. has a hospital. Here is an example of how much good it is to the workers.

Two girls are filing the order sheets; the section head is there every five minutes to drive them ahead of time. In the afternoon one of them took sick. She called the section head and asked permission to leave for the hospital. The reply was that she has to ask the floor head.

The floor head was not in. At the same time the section head did not forget his usual order, "Go on, girls, do not get behind time."

The sick girl could not work. She kept on asking permission to go to the hospital. The head did not reply.

"He is one of hearing," another girl remarked, "leave the work and go down, now there is a hospital, let us make use of it."

The sick girl kept on asking the head. Instead of answering, he kept speeding her up. She sprang up, "I am going down, I cannot work," she cried.

In a few minutes the girl was back. When asked whether she felt better, she answered, "I could not take a proper rest, thinking how he would rush me afterward."

This is how we get to the hospital and the treatment they give us.

"Prosperity" of L. A. Seems to Be All Bunk, After All, Drives Show

By L. P. RINDAL
(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 29. — The "prosperity" of Los Angeles is so great that 154 charitable, relief and welfare agencies have been created here. The Community Chest drive, now going on, is so far a failure.

The mayor's proclamation for "Community Chest Day" says "It is a great humanitarian campaign to relieve the suffering of the sick and the crippled, to bring sunshine into the lives of thousands upon thousands of orphans, homeless old men and woman, working mothers, thus mending many a shattered hope and broken spirit."

At the Shriners' convention, a year or so ago, Mayor Cryer told the visitors that this city was an "oasis of abundance."

New York Workers Welcome Cline With Reception and Dance

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29. — Charles Cline, class-war prisoner, just released after serving time in a Texas penitentiary for 12 years on a frame up because of his labor activities, was welcomed by New York workers at a reception and dance given in his honor by the New York section of the International Labor Defense at Manhattan Lyceum.

Richard Brasler, a member of the New York district I. L. D. executive committee, was chairman and Cline himself was the main speaker.

EDISON WORKERS ARE VICTIMS OF COMPANY SPIES

Are Afraid to Commit Selves on Union

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Angel Morra, organiser for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, says he is handicapped in organising the New York Edison electrical workers. He claims it is due to two reasons, an efficient spy system and workers' fear of their jobs.

All means of organizational work, even when carried on under cover, are exposed by the spy system. Any worker who has even an indication in the union is found out by the company and discharged.

The spy system causes distrust between the workers, as they are afraid to commit themselves on the union.

This factor alone has restricted organization work. Morra also states that some of the workers, in addition to fear for this work, payable at their residence by a messenger.

Seattle Kuomintang Celebrates Birthday of Dr. Sun Yat Sen

By a Worker Correspondent.

SEATTLE, Nov. 29.—The birthday of Dr. Sun Yat Sen was celebrated here by the local branch of the Kon minchang party. Addresses were made by several students of the University of Washington, who are here under the provisions of the Boxer indemnity fund. Carl Brahnin of the Seattle Labor College extended greetings for American supporters of the Chinese nationalist movement. A program of Chinese music, pantomime and amateur dramatics followed.

Earlier in the evening a local radio broadcasting station put on an hour's program covering the life and work of Sun Yat Sen.

Denver Workers Open New Lyceum Building

By a Worker Correspondent.

DENVER, Nov. 29. — Sunday, the 21st, was a red letter day for the workers and their friends, especially the Jewish portion, in that they assembled to the number of 1,000 in their beautiful new lyceum building in West Denver.

A few years ago the Lyceum Association was organized by a handful of Jewish workers on the west side, and they soon purchased a lot on which an old church was standing. It was converted into a meeting hall. Then, about a year ago, the members decided that a new structure must replace the old and delapidated building, which had grown too small for the crowds that had been gathered there. Thru picnics, bazaars and various meetings money was collected for the purpose.

Most of the new building was erected by the members of the Lyceum themselves, who have worked day and night at the task. The structure, in completed, is valued at $30,000. After applying the $2,500 which was collected at the celebration on the 21st, the debt remaining on the property will be but $10,000, which the enthusiastic members claim will be paid off within the next few years.

The dedicatory celebration lasted from 2 p. m. until midnight and included a banquet, dancing and speeches.

Earl R. Hoage, president of the Colorado Federation of Labor, congratulated the members in the name of the 35,000 organized workers in his organization. He was followed in his talk by Wm. Dietrich, secretary of the Workers' Party, representatives of several unions, and Mr. Duboff of the Workmen's Circle. Wm. L. Tuschmann, president of the Lyceum Association, made the principal address of the evening.

CHICAGO LABOR, IN GREAT MEETING, PASSES RESOLUTION OF PROTEST AT LEGAL MURDER OF SACCO AND VANZETTI

At the meeting at Ashland Auditorium, held under the auspices of the Sacco-Vanzetti Conference of Chicago, the following resolution was adopted unanimously by a rising vote:

Whereas, the Sacco and Vanzetti case that has held the attention of the world for the past six years is about to come to a close with imminent danger of two innocent men having their lives snuffed out, and we believe this is a conspiracy to feed the appetites of labor baiters, and

Whereas, the American labor movement from coast to coast and millions of sympathizers throughout the world are not only convinced of Sacco and Vanzetti's innocence, but honestly believe that agents of the department of justice in Washington have lent themselves to help carry out this diabolical plot, and

Whereas, the attorneys for the defense have presented to the court new evidence upon which they base their demand for a new trial, to wit: One affidavit from Celestino Madeiros who in substance testifies that the Morelli gang of bandits committed the crime charged to the defendants; two affidavits from former department of justice agents—Latherman in the service of the department of justice thirty-six years, and Mr. Moyand, in the same service eight years. Both of these former agents testify in their affidavits that they made every effort to obtain evidence that would warrant the deportation of Sacco and Vanzetti. Failing to get this evidence, they were instructed to assist the frame-up to railroad Sacco and Vanzetti to the electric chair; therefore be it

Resolved, that the organized trade unionists and other Chicago friends in mass meeting assembled, pledge their individual support to the Sacco and Vanzetti defense and demand that a new trial be granted to these defendants. We further demand an immediate thoro investigation by congress into the part played by the department of justice. We believe the investigation will disclose a criminal plot against labor that has all the earmarks of a repetition of the Mooney case, and be it further

Resolved that we are in full accord with the program as outlined by our fellow workers in New York City at their mass meeting held in Madison Square Garden, November 17, 1926, and urge the organization of a representative delegation to present this protest fully to the governor of Massachusetts and endorse the plan to hold a national congress in New York City to further the ends of justice and early release of the defendants.

We further pledge ourselves to urge the congressmen and senators of Illinois to present resolutions in congress to investigate the participation of the department of justice in the Sacco-Vanzetti case. We are of the firm conviction that such an investigation will expose the conspiracy and hasten the freeing and release of these two defendants.

WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY GREETS WORKERS' SACCO-VANZETTI PROTEST

Great enthusiasm greeted the reading of the accompanying message of the Workers (Communist) Party to the Sacco-Vanzetti protest meeting held in Chicago:

To the Workers of Chicago assembled in support of the movement to save Sacco and Vanzetti.

The Workers (Communist) Party extends its greetings to the workers of Chicago assembled in support of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Sacco and Vanzetti are in danger of losing their lives because they dared support the revolutionary movement of the workers against the capitalist system. They are to be murdered by the lackeys of capitalism because they raised their voices in protest and organized the workers against the exploitation and oppression of the workers by the capitalists.

The Workers (Communist) Party has from the beginning supported the movement of labor to fight for the lives of Sacco and Vanzetti. It has used all its strength to bring before the workers the truth about their persecution and to mobilize the vast strength of labor in their defense.

The Workers (Communist) Party pledges itself anew to the struggle to save these revolutionary fighters. It calls upon all workers to rally to their defense. It calls upon all workers to demand their freedom with such a mighty voice, backed by the organized strength of the workers, that the capitalists and their lackeys will not dare to carry thru their purpose to judicially murder Sacco and Vanzetti.

Free Sacco and Vanzetti!
Save Sacco and Vanzetti! by mobilizing the whole strength of labor in the fight for their lives.

Fraternally yours,
Central Committee,
Workers (Communist) Party.
C. E. Ruthenberg, General Secretary.

'I Don't Care How It Ends, If It Only Ends,' Says Sacco After Spending Six and Half Years in the Old Dedham Jail

By JOHN DOS PASSOS, Federated Press.

DEDHAM, Mass., Nov. 29.—It was mealtime when I went to see Sacco. The other prisoners filed by us as we sat on the bench talking: young men mostly, walking heavily with their hands in their armpits. Dedham jail is a model jail, a bright clean polished bird cage. Thru the bars you can see trees and the sky and clouds.

Six and a Half Years There.

Sacco has been six and a half years in Dedham jail, six and a half years in a cell twenty-three hours of the day and six and a half years of walking in a pile with his hands in his armpits.

A prisoner awaiting sentence is given no work to do. The only break was when he was sent to the state hospital for the insane, when he collapsed after a 31-day hunger strike.

"I don't care how it ends, if it would only end," he says.

They had told me that Sacco was broken by the ordeal; but not at all. He is still able to laugh and joke and tell stories. There is still an occasional flush of color in his waxy prison cheeks. We talked about how amazing was the amount of agony a man could stand. A dog under the same conditions would have been dead long ago. But he didn't say much about the case. He was sick of talking about the case, of thinking about the case. He told me about when he'd been a kid in a little town in southern Italy before he'd come to America. His life before he had fallen into the ghastly trap in Brockton that May evening six and a half years ago had been pretty happy on the whole. He liked to talk about it.

Tells Background.

His father was a wine and oil merchant. Sacco worked for him when he was little in the vineyards and the dry sunny olive orchards. But more than school or work in the fields he liked machinery. When he was 15 he got a job stoking the donkey engine that was the big thresher that threshed all the wheat in the region. It was about that time he began to dream of coming to America, the land of machinery. When he was 17 he came to America with his brother. His first job was as water boy with a road gang. When they let him work on the steam roller he was absolutely happy. He loved the land of machinery. When winter came on he got a job in the Hopedale mills, and eventually, finding that an unskilled laborer was everybody's doormat, learned to run an edging machine in a shoe factory.

Drifted to Anarchists.

From then on he was pretty prosperous. He was married and had a [illegible] began to think about the people who weren't so well off as he was. He had been brought up in an atmosphere of political talk. His father, back in Torremaggiore, had been a republican; his brother, later mayor of the town, a socialist. When Sacco lived in Milford he went to socialist meetings. But he found more intelligent men among the anarchists. They were more awake, more anxious to improve themselves, he said.

Arrested for Speech.

So little by little he found himself allied with the local Italian anarchist groups, meeting Sundays and evenings at the Circolo de' Studia Sociale. He was active in the Hopedale strike, was arrested for making a speech during the agitation in sympathy with the Minnesota strike in 1916. So it was inevitable that he should have been one of the first to agitate for a protest against the arrest of Salsedo and Elia in the red raids of 1920. He had a draft of a handbill for a meeting of protest against Salsedo's murder when he was arrested with Vanzetti that May night in a Boston streetcar.

Since then[illegible]. . . six and a half years of jail. Twenty-three hours a day alone in a cell.

"I don't care how it all ends, if it only ends," he says.

"Commutation." Pardon? I didn't dare mention them to him.

"If we had been convicted of radical—in it would have been all right," he said. "But why convict us of murder!"

DETROIT SKY-PILOTS ARE DISTURBED AS GOVERNOR 'FORGETS' GOD IN THANKS

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 29.—What is thanksgiving with God left out?

This was the disturbing reaction of Detroit clergy to Governor Alex J. Grosebeck's omission of the word "God" from the annual Thanksgiving proclamation.

The proclamation is said to be the first in which a governor has not asked the people of his state to thank God for the various blessings enjoyed during the past year.

The Rev. Chester B. Emerson of the North Woodward Avenue Congregational church declared the resolution "the most arrogant message ever penned."

The Rev. Mark F. Sanborn of the First Baptist church and the Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones of the Central Christian church were other "men of the cloth" who criticized the proclamation.

"The recognition of God in Thanksgiving is historical," the Rev. Mr. Jones said. "Without thanks to God the holiday is meaningless."

The Rev. Mr. Sanborn said: "If the omission was intentional the proclamation is pathetic."

Reed Drops Probe in Reported Kansas City Slush Fund Exposure

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 29. — Senator Reed's one-man "slush fund" investigating committee failed to bring out evidence of charges that a $250,000 to $750,000 fund had operated in Kansas City during the recent election on behalf of the candidacy of Harry S. Jaxon Bemgrad, for the United States senate.

Harry R. Walmsley, republican precinct worker, who wrote to Senator Norris of Nebraska declaring it was "common gossip" in Kansas City that the Street Railways company had pledged such a fund in return for extension of franchise, was unable to give Senator Reed any definite information about the alleged fund upon which his letter was based.

After 45 minutes of questioning, divulging no tangible evidence, Senator Reed dismissed his "witness" and declared he would "wash his hands of the whole affair."

Illinois River Again at Flood Stage, Low Ground Families Flee

BEARDSTOWN, Ill., Nov. 29.—Families on low ground here were forced from their homes Tuesday morning as the waters of the rising Illinois river crept up around the foundations. The river was at a stage of 19.3 feet and is expected to reach 21 feet, which will flood many streets and cause many more residents to evacuate their homes.

Workmen were blocking sewer inlets in an effort to prevent flooding of streets.

Backing up of water on the state herd road thru the city is imminent.

A Lawyer Speaks

Charles S. Whiteman, president of the American Bar Associa- and former governor of the Empire State, urged the appoint- of judges in an address delivered before the Illinois Bar ciation.

In modern times lawyers play the part of the roving knight rant of feudalism, as the chief protectors of private property. gal acumen and despicability have, however, taken the place of e cruder battle ax and lance, while the necessary dirty work of gsical compulsion is done by hired servants—the police. Consid- ing the important part the legal profession plays as the chief kesman and apologists for modern capitalism, one must attach e significance to the statement of the president of the Bar sociation.

The plea for the abolition of the election of judges made by r. Whitman indicates a definite trend in the political thought of erica's ruling class. It indicates that the present limitations of pitalist democracy, great as they are, are still not sufficient to fectively check the growing power of the American working class. se contradictions within society are so intense that capitalist statesmen are now proposing to withdraw even that little "form thout substance" of democracy which they have reluctantly sided.

Mr. Whitman speaks with admiration of the federal governent, where "We've done very well so far with judges named for e, answerable to no one so long as their conduct is good. Never as there a better body in the world than the United States preme Court and this can be carried down into the lower federal orts."

Speaking in the same strain Chief Justice Clyde E. Stone, of Illinois Supreme Court said, "No court should lend itself to a ction of law or a refusal to enforce it as it exists, in order please public sentiment."

Here we find clearly expressed the political philosophy of the ling class of this country, its firm determination to enforce and tend its dictatorship and its utter contempt for the will of the sses of the workers. Under these circumstances labor must rn to place no faith or hope for justice in the capitalist courts. e fight for the freedom of Sacco and Vanzetti, and the fight ainst the use of the injunctions in labor disputes will not be won appeals to the fairness of the courts, no matter how convincing y evidence on how strong the tide of public sentiment. The ittler cases care not a fig for either. It will be won solely m the pressure of labor's own political power and strength. As pitalism prepares to tighten still further its fetters about the rking class, let us mobilize more energetically labor's political ght to break them.

The Lesson of Ware, Mass.

Again we are reminded of the transformation taking place in w England. The textile mills of Ware, Mass., have shut down remove to the South nearer the sources of raw material and ap unorganized labor. The 1,500 textile workers are thus left thout employment. This is but one of many such removals during last dozen years. Yet the significance of the change going on. s not yet been brought home to the workers of that region.

The official labor movement of New England concerns itself ely with the welfare of the skilled organized workers, the build- trades and the like. The fact remains that the dumping of usands of unemployed workers in the textile industry and the e industry (which is similarly affected) on the labor market a result of the steady shifting of industry from New England to South, will inevitably affect the skilled workers of that section the country. The building industry, which depends chiefly upon al demand, is already on the downgrade. Other industries will forced to follow to an ever-increasing degree. The entire labor vement of New England will suffer the consequences of its lack foresight and preparedness.

The New York Times offers a sorry consolation to these rkers. The "back-to-the-farm" movement is held forth as a pana . The New England farmer has already shared in the general icultural crisis. The prospect of future unemployment and linking home markets offers little guarantee of any improvement.

The development of small manufacturing concerns and the em- yment of skilled labor on articles of luxury is the next offering the Times' economic expert. To give the impression that New gland can now build up a new group of industries of this kind compete with Japan, Germany and France, who are specialists these fields and who have the advantage of better access to aper labor than even the South can boast of, is to propose to workers of New England that they descend one step lower in scale of the world's labor. This is the future which capitalism do out to the workers of New England. It is for them to say ether they will meekly accept it, or whether they will bestir mselves to action.

The chief task before the workers of the New England states that of organization into powerful trade unions to meet the ing onslaughts of the employers. The prospect of a coming iod of unemployment, which would make it more difficult to ry out this task, makes it necessary that labor take up at once question of building a political weapon as well—a labor party. will serve as a powerful right arm in the struggles of these kers against the employers, that will raise the cry of unemploy- t relief when it is needed and go even further for the socializa of the industries of New England as a remedy for the present asing chaos. Ware, Mass., should offer food for much thought.

Organization of the Unorganized and Work in the Trade Unions

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, Gen. Sec'y-Workers (Communist) Party.

[Editorial Note! This is the third of a series of articles on the discussions and resolution of the meeting of the central committee of the Workers (Communist) Party announced in The DAILY WORKER a few days ago.]

THE summary of the discussions and resolutions of the central committee in regard to the opportunities for developing the revolutionary movement and building the Workers (Communist) Party made in the previous articles, shows clearly that the greatest opportunity for Communist, work in the present period of imperialist development and "capitalist prosperity" is among the unorganized, semi-skilled and unskilled workers in the mighty developed machine industry.

The most favorable basis for approach and contact with these workers is thru the program of struggle for higher wages and better working conditions—the winning of such demands thru organization of these workers. This makes the work of organizing the unorganized workers one of the major tasks of the party at the present time.

The importance of the work among the unorganized in relation to the Communist work to make the trade unions organs of militant struggle against capitalism, was emphasized in the resolution on trade union work of the last convention of the party which declares:

"The condition existing in the United States, so far as the trade unions are concerned, is to a considerable degree, parallel to the conditions which existed in Great Britain a quarter of a century ago. There, too, a highly reactionary trade union bureaucracy was in control of the trade unions and opposed all progressive measures in the struggle against the employers. It was only the advent of "new unionism" which came into existence thru the organization of the great masses of previously unorganized workers that the trade unions changed their policy and the labor party was formed and industrial unionism developed.

"The organization of millions of workers in such industries as the steel industry, the rubber industry, the automobile industry will bring into the American trade union movement, new and more militant spirit and will greatly increase the influence of our party and aid materially in achieving that end of winning the organized masses for the revolutionary Communist struggle."

The organization of the Passaic workers and their entry into the American Federation of Textile Workers, in affiliation to the United Textile Workers, thus creating a strong left wing within the latter organization, is a concrete example of the working out of the policy formulated in the above quotation from the convention resolution.

How to Carry on the Work of Organizing the Unorganized.

The work, in the field of organization of the unorganized must be carried on by the party in two ways. First, thru direct work in the shops and factories for organization of the unorganized workers and second, thru stimulation of the existing trade unions to take up the work and carry on the campaign for the organization of the unorganized.

The reorganization of the party on the basis of the shop nuclei has given us the instrument for direct contact with the workers in the factories thru which we can initiate the campaign for organization of the unorganized workers.

The party now has direct contact with the workers between two and three hundred factories thruout the country. It is already publishing shop papers in some twenty-five to thirty of these factories.

While the shop nucleus is a political unit of the party, and must carry on the work in support of all of the party activities in the factory, it is a particularly strong weapon of our party in the work of organization of the unorganized.

It is the task of every shop nucleus which exists in an industry in which the workers are not organized to begin systematic agitation for organization as part of their work. This agitation must be based upon the grievances and grievances of the workers in the factories, thru taking up the demands for higher wages, the grievances of the workers in regard to their working conditions, that a movement for organization can be developed.

The first step toward organization is the crystallization of the demands of the workers, their presentation to the factories. Where shop papers are published by the party nuclei, these papers must make this their first task. The development of a greater number of shop papers is one of the steps necessary to strengthen the campaign for organization of the unorganized.

Following this campaign of agitation, the shop nucleus must endeavor to establish contact with the more militant workers outside of the party in the shop and endeavor to form a shop committee. In large industries this shop committee must extend itself by organizing similar committees in all departments of the industry.

The creation of such a skeleton organization in the unorganized industries, which at the moment when the workers' grievances reach a boiling point, can call a strike and during the strike, organize the mass of the workers into a union, must be undertaken by the party shop nuclei in all the unorganized industries.

It will require careful persistent work on the part of the shop nuclei to carry out this program but if the work is undertaken in earnest with a determination to secure results, the party can develop scores of "Passaics" on the basis of its present strength in the unorganized industries.

• • •

The Work in the Trade Unions to Organize the Unorganized.

Simultaneously with the work of the party nuclei in the factories, the party must, thru its trade union fractions, initiate campaigns thru the trade unions for organization of the unorganized.

There is a broad field of activity in carrying on this work. Resolutions supporting the program for organization of the unorganized can be introduced in the trade union bodies all the way from the local trade unions to the convention of the American Federation of Labor. The party trade union fractions should carry on the struggle to have committees for the organization of the unorganized and for conduct of campaigns to achieve this end, set up by the local unions, by the district councils, the central labor bodies, state federations of labor, thru the conventions of the international unions and carry the struggle to the A. F. of L. convention.

Favorable Opportunities for Organization of the Unorganized.

During the period of the world war, the American Federation of Labor increased its membership to over four million. It was easy then to organize large masses of the workers during the period of the war when the labor power of the class was in demand. The capitalists needed the workers' services and consequently the position of the workers was strengthened. The upward wave which industry was running encouraged the workers to make greater demands for increased wages and a higher standard of life and to organize in order to achieve these demands.

While not to the same degree, the present situation of capitalist prosperity presents a similar opportunity for organization of the workers. The fact that there is generally employment is encouraging the workers to make new demands and to enter into struggle for these demands. The boasts about the great profits of the capitalists are stirring the demand for a higher standard of life among the workers who are producing these profits.

It is now, during this period of capitalist prosperity that the movement for the organization of the unorganized can make headway. The labor movement as a whole has not taken advantage of the situation thus far. Valuable time has been lost in developing the movement for organization. By taking up this movement energetically and taking the leadership in it, the party can greatly extend its influence among the workers and at the same time build the party.

Work Among the Unorganized Workers.

As pointed out in the resolution of the last convention, the work of organizing the unorganized is of the most importance in winning the trade union movement for the militant class struggle against capitalism. The workers who come into the organized labor movement from the great machine industry will be a source of new strength for the left wing in its struggle for a militant class struggle policy by organized labor.

The central committee resolution, however, emphatically points out that there must be no let-up in the work in the existing trade unions because of the throwing of the party energy into the work of organizing the unorganized.

The party thus far has not brought to bear in the trade unions all of the campaigns of the party to emphasize the need of the struggle to win the organized workers in the trade unions have resulted in approximately 50 per cent of the party membership becoming members of the trade unions, and probably less than half of these members actually carry on systematic work in their unions.

There is, therefore, still far more of energetic steps to have the party members who are eligible for trade union membership to join a union. At least 90 per cent of the party membership is eligible for union membership and should become members of a trade union.

Further work to convince the party of the importance of the work in the trade unions is necessary and together with this the development of the trade union fractions in the party in a more systematic form. All of the United front campaigns of the party on issues in the workers' interests have their basis in the trade unions. These campaigns cannot take on greater volume unless the organized forces of the party in the trade unions are increased and thus, the ability of the party to draw these organized masses into common struggle with itself broadened.

The importance of the work in the trade unions and the opportunities for achievements of the party in this field are illustrated by the broad Save the Union campaign which has developed in the United Mine Workers of America. The United Mine Workers of America is the proletarian backbone of the American Federation of Labor. The present policies and leadership of the union are resulting in its disintegration. The program of the Save the Union blue ouse he put into effect. The loss of the United Mine Workers or its being weakened so that it will be ineffective in its struggle against the coal barons would be a blow to the whole labor movement of this country. The fight to save the miners' union therefore, becomes of the greatest importance to the whole labor movement.

By proving that it stands for those policies which strengthen and build the organized labor movement, thru the supporting the Save the Union movement in the United Mine Workers of America, the party is winning new influence and increasing its prestige among the miners and its work in this field will ultimately crystallize in the form of new recruits for the party.

There are hundreds of similar opportunities for the party to take the leadership in to strengthen the labor movement. The party can only take full advantage of these opportunities if its members are in the unions and organized into fractions carrying on a campaign to build a broad left wing movement which will fight to make the trade unions the organs of militant class struggle in the workers' interests.

The work in the field of organization of the unorganized and the work in the organized labor movement still must be in the forefront of the party tasks. The need of the present situation is greater mobilization of the party strength for this work in order to take advantage of the opportunities which lie before us.

THE BRITISH IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

The following study of the British empire was written by Comrade Roy while the Imperial Conference in London was still going on. It will, however, be noted that Roy's analysis of the conflicting interests at work in the British empire is substantiated by the results of the empire meet. Roy correctly predicts in this article the setting up of the loose federation that has come to pass. The information he offers here with relarance to South Africa and Canada explains the stand of these two countries in the conference and in a large measure accounts for the retreat of the home government that the new charter represents. Roy is a well-known leader of the Indian liberation movement and a careful student of the British empire.

By M. N. ROY.

THE drama which is being enacted behind closed doors in Downing street could be characterized as a comedy had it not been so tragic for the British empire. It is a comedy because of the hypocritical speeches made for publication. They are talking of imperial unity and loyalty to the crown while the conflict of interests becomes ever sharper. Baldwin recently concluded the inaugural speech with a quotation from St. Augustine: "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things charity." But the Boer general Herzog, who lacks Anglo-Saxon politeness, hrusquely turned the tables and demanded that the basis of the imperial federation should be "liberty in essentials; unity where self-interest permit, charity—to none." The frankly separatist views of Herzog are shared, if not as openly, by Canada and Ireland.

Evidently inter-imperial relations have become so critical that a determined effort must be made to find a modus vivendi, in political and constitutional issues. London seems to be prepared to make concessions, provided that economic supremacy remains unimpaired. That is, if the dominions would sincerely accept the principle of imperial preference and effectively apply it in practice, their demands as regards internal autonomy and international status could be reluctantly granted. Altho Chamberlain's long report on foreign affairs is not published, it is reported that he even did not raise the question of ratification of the Locarno treaties by the dominions. That is a great concession. It places the dominion governments outside the jurisdiction of the British foreign office.

Decides to Retreat.

IN view of the acuteness of the situation the British government decided to beat a timely retreat as the best strategy. Three important dominion delegations (Canada, South Africa and Ireland) came to the conference determined to raise the constitutional question and the question of international status. The delegates are fully supported by public opinion at home.

Hertzog, who bore arms against the British during the Boer war and who even after reconciliation with Britain stood for an independent South African republic, completely defeated the loyalist South African party of Smuts in the last election and became the head of the government. Ever since he came to power Hertzog has repeatedly put forward the separatist program of Boer nationalism. The agitation for a South African flag was the acute manifestation of the separatist sentiment. A few days before the imperial conference an open air London a great mass meeting was held in Johannesburg to celebrate the "Afrikaaner Day." Four ministers of the Hertzog cabinet, including the acting premier, were present. In that meeting Malan (one of the ministers) declared that the government had decided unanimously to pass the flag bill next year. Malan accused the South African press of defending imperial interests as against national interests and declared that the press was owned by people overseas and that the editors are foreigners.

Undoubtedly this demonstration of nationalism was to strengthen the hand of Hertzog in the imperial conference. And Hertzog did not disappoint his followers at home. He took the first opportunity to state his case, and in doing so did not mince words. He demanded: "1. In principle, unrestricted freedom of action to each individual member of the commonwealth; 2. In practice, consultation with a view to co-operative action wherever possible."

This conception of imperial unity, if accepted, would reduce the empire to a loose entente likely to drift apart under the growing pressure of economic interests.

Canada's Position.

CANADA has not come with any friendlier mood. Mackenzie King may be a better diplomat than the Boer general from Transvaal, but his diplomatic words are pronounced on the background of formidable facts. He has swept the country in the recent election, which was fought with clear nationalist slogans. The country has supported him in his challenge to the authority of the British governor general. He has defeated his opponents who were backed by the governor general because of their imperial orientation. The conservative party, behind which stand the financial interests closely connected with London banks, has been vanquished at the polls. The liberal progressive combination, led by King, came to power with the following program: 1. Canada is de facto independent, but de jure still subordinated to the sixty-year-old British-North America act passed by the British parliament. This should be changed. 2. Canadian parliament should have the same sovereign right to manage domestic and foreign affairs as the British parliament. 3. Canada should not be reduced to the status of a colony by the interference of the British governor general.

These are very clear issues, and the government of Mackenzie King is committed to them. When King showed reluctance to attend the imperial conference to press these vital constitutional issues, he was urged by the nationalist politicians, who wanted him to back up Hertzog in the conference.

Irish Problem.

THEN there is Ireland. The Irish delegate, Fitzgerald, expressed his intention to raise the questions of war and of the functions of the governor generals. His views are that the dominions should not be considered to be technically or legally in a state of war simply by virtue of the fact that Britain was at war.

The conference will have to sit much more than a month if such grave conflicts of interests are to be composed. But in this critical period of its economic existence British imperialism can hardly afford to sharpen the issues of inter-imperial relations by stubbornly opposing the points of view of the dominions or by insisting upon London's hegemony over foreign affairs. Diplomacy is considered to be the best way out of the crisis.

But neither diplomacy nor concessions in questions of foreign relations would touch the background of the conflicts. Rifts in the background of the relations between the dominions and the metropolis cause the discord in the political and constitutional superstructures. The basic relation is the economic relation.

Britain is losing her economic, financial and political hegemony over the countries which formally are, and will be for some time, still parts of the British empire.

Capitalist Decline.

THE growth of a separatist tendency in the dominions is closely connected with the decline of British capitalism. It is the cause and the effect at the same time. Industrialization of the dominions makes them progressively independent of the metropolis, but increases their need for capital. If it were possible to keep up a constant and increasing flow of capital from England to the dominions on the most favorable conditions the process of rupture in inter-imperial relations would not be so pronounced. The dominions (with the exception of South Africa developed largely with capital and labor exported from Britain. On the other hand, the large part of the raw materials produced in the dominions found market in England.

Now both these basic relations between the dominions and the mother country have changed. England is not able to supply the growing capital elsewhere on more favorable conditions. For example, no British capital has penetrated deeply into Canada. At the same time, chronic industrial depression has caused a shrinkage of market in Britain for the raw materials from the dominions. Since the latter are obliged to sell out of the empire, they must also buy outside the empire. Consequently, the program of imperial preference in which Britain capitulates seeks a way out of the present crisis becomes unrealizable.

Britain Weak.

SPEAKING outside the conference Stanley Baldwin and Mackenzie King succinctly but clearly formulated the basic conditions for the relations between Canada and England to these words: "We want capital. We would take it from Britain, but if we cannot get it here we must find it elsewhere." In his opening speech Baldwin did not fail to touch this foundation of inter-imperial relationship. He endeavored to justify the present inability of London to supply the dominions with capital on favorable terms by reference to what the mother country had done in the past. He reminded the dominion representatives that down to the end of 1925 London had lent to the dominions £850,000,000. But he was considerably silent about the liquidation of wealth and accumulated savings of this country (Britain) resulting from the world war." When Baldwin referred to the total investment of £350,000,000 (of which about £350,000,000 went to Canada) Mackenzie King must have taken a mental note of the £400,000,000 of American capital invested in Canada mostly since the war.

Recently the South African trade commissioner in London stated that every year his country was sending more raw materials abroad. Last year's balance was £17,000,000. He said that South Africa must increase her export because she must have capital in return.

Similar difficulties underlie the economic relations with all the dominions which possess the autonomy to determine the direction of their trade and protect their industries by raising tariff walls. These difficulties frustrate all the efforts to enforce the principle of imperial preference. And it is around this basic question of economic relations that the main battles of the conference will be fought.

Preferance.

IN his speech to the conference the president of the board of trade stated that in the first half of the current year one-third of the British imports came from the empire and half of the exports went to the empire. This fact shows that imperial preference operates against the interests of the dominions and in favor of England. British manufacturers gain by the preferential tariff, whereas the producers of raw materials and partly finished commodities in the dominions lose. Consequently it is natural that the dominions possessing the autonomy to determine the direction of trade and in fiscal matters do not take kindly to the scheme of imperial preference. An effective operation of the scheme may be hindered by British capitalists' all sentimental considerations of racial and language affinity taken together cannot induce the dominions to sacrifice their economic interests on the altar of the empire.

Then there is the question of empire settlement. Most of the dominions need labor. Britain is suffering from the intolerable misery of unemployment. Why not settle the dominions with the British unemployed? It is a very simple proposition on the face of it, but here also arise serious complications. At this time, when the dominions are drifting farther and farther from the control of metropolitan finance, emigration of British workers means an irrecoverable loss of so much labor power for British capitalism. Their inability to export sufficient capital to the dominions makes the British bourgeoisie very reluctant to encourage emigration to the dominions. Thus the empire settlement scheme remains a paper scheme.

British Power Gone.

IN spite of the frantic attempts to stabilize British capitalism on the basis of a self-contained imperial unit, the process of disruption goes on. The empire will continue still for some time as a loosely bound federation or, rather, entente working in co-operation whenever and wherever possible without prejudice to self-interest. But the hegemony of Britain is gone forever. This is being demonstrated in the imperial conference.

Phoole! What an odoriferous business this professional baseball. Two of the game's greatest players, Cobb and Speaker, managers of ball clubs, are now being given an airing after being given the air. It develops their "resignation" was by request—of the notoriously labor-hating Judge Landis. They just raised this old bird's salary to $65,000 a year to do the disinfecting. There is hardly any need for this bug to be lifting the lid any more. The odor of it all pervades the country. As a local sports writer scrappily put it: "What was baseball's breath of scandal in 1919 becomes devastating halitosis in 1926."

You tell 'em! And knowing pro ball for what it is we know the old judge is going to be kept busy enough to earn his salary in the future. Do we need workers' sports? Like an egg needs salt and pepper!

This is a special Scotch item. Proving again that golf is a great Scotch game (golf—not gulp!). We bring to your attention the fact that Charles Chung, Chinese, has been made the golf professional at the Redlands (Cal.) Club, after winning many golf honors thruout the state. Our Scotch comrades will note that there are now two Scotch Itams assuming international interest.

After the last Olympic games, "Flying Finns" sought the sporting world's attention. Nurmi and other white guard athletes of Finland copped all running honors. Other good Finnish runners who were Reds would not participate or the sporting world would have been even more startled. Nurmi's trip to this country, like Queen Marie's, helped draw attention to Finland for the purpose of a loan. At that time, sports writers—no joking—printed a lot of fish stories for suckers showing why Finns made good runners.

Now Willie Ritola, another really splendid distance man, speaks some sound sense on the matter: "All the talk of eating fried fish or any other Finnish dish is foolish. We Finns eat what we like, but we eat sensibly. That, coupled with the fact that we are conscientious and consistent with our training, makes us good distance runners." Ritola is a carpenter, and after a day's work makes it a point to run six miles to his home."

Workers' sports organizations might be developing many fine athletes. We hear they are. This drug, however, is convinced that among them there are none that can wrestle with a little English or throw a couple paragraphs far enough for our readers to see them. We know they exist. But don't keep it a secret, comrades!

Mickey Walker's manager only wants $200,000 for a championship bout for a championship he won by the grace of God and the gamblers. He religiously also refrains from mentioning the Tigerish Parson who knocked Walker for a row of Irish shamrocks the last time they fought.

Phoole—such champs, and phoole some more such a business! We'll have to disinfect our typewriter ribbon after talking about professional sports.

Man in War, by Andreas Latzko. Boni and Livaright, New York. $.95.

Dubliners, by James Joyce. Boni and Livaright, New York. $.95.

Man in War will never be recommended to the young manhood of America by the American Legion or the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor. It is a blasting, damning picture of the horrors of war. It is one of the most powerful pictures of war ever painted in words. Oibbering human wrecks drag themselves thru its pages. Fractured legs in plastar casts while their owners worry that the limbs will pitch up too soon. The great Pooh Bah, the military genius who won a big battle, this military genius who spent the previous 38 years in a state of chronic semi-bankruptcy. Here he was now, far away from the bursting shells with a nation at his feet. While heads are being blown off in the trenches, on the Austro-Italian front, and uniforms, rifles and torn bodies are mixed up in an infernal stew on the battlefields, the great general delivers himself thus on the glories and joys of war:

"Just look! I should like to show this picture to our pacifists, who always act as though war was nothing but a hideous carnage. You should have seen this hole in peace times. It was enough to put you to sleep. Why, the porter at the corner is earning more today than the biggest merchant used to earn before the war. And have you noticed the young fellows who come back from the front? Sunburnt, healthy and happy! Most of them before the war were employed in offices. They held themselves badly and were dissipated and looked cheesy. I assure you, the world has never been so healthy as it is now. But if you look at your newspapers, you read about a world catastrophe, about a blood-drained Europe, and a whole lot of other stuff."

Like what the Chicago Tribune would turn out! This is a GREAT book. You will read and damn the system that breeds wars as inevitably as a swamp will breed mosquitoes.

Those who were unable to wade thru James Joyce's Ulysses, despite the verbal appetizers sprinkled thru its pages and the advertising value of bookleggling, may hesitate to diminish their financial resources in the acquisition of a Joyce book. Dubliners, which is a collection of short stories of Dublin life written in 1906 makes delightful reading. Joyce is a good story teller. He winds up when he has painted his picture and lets it go at that. He does not have to walk the floor at night wondering what he is going to do with characters that have outlived their usefulness.

There are fifteen stories in the book with an introduction by Padraic Colum who is a general favorite with American publishers and literary reviews, tho Colum is chiefly interested in fairies, tinkers, priests and nuns, and modern Irish writers have little good to say of those types with the possible exception of the tinkers.

The gods have been kind to Joyce in the matter of publicity. For some unknown reason his publisher refused to bring out Dubliners for seven years. The moralists pinned the verboten sign on Ulysses. So Joyce can afford to live in Paris while the moralists cannot.

A book you will enjoy.

The City That Sobbed.

By and by your ear becomes
Accustomed to confusion,
Immune to all the mutter,
To the grumble and the thunder
Of the torrent flowing traffic
Roaring through the sluice-like streets.
Uproar blends again to silence
Through the sum of all its sounds
Silence that in turn is shaken
By a subterranean sobbing
Rising from the roof of things.

City of aspiring steeples,
City of sky seeking buildings,
Broadly based and heaven-heaving
Can it be that all you weight
Rests upon the stricken shoulders
Of the workers, whose reward
For the blood and sweat they spend
In your planning and erection,
In your dreaming and perfection,
Is to squirm beneath your feet?

The City That Shouted

The foundations stir.
A broad fist shoots through a ballroom floor.
That schoolgirl complexion
Flakes from the enamelled ugliness
Of the frightened Four Hundred.

Smoke ceases in chimneys.
Smoke issues through gateways.
Smoke surges into the streets.
Strengthens, and shapes itself,
Shouts—and is marching machinery.
Shouts—and is marching men.
Marching Tomorrows.

The City That Sang.

Skyscrapers turn somersaults.
Tenements tumble
And disappear in the dust
Where street meets street and dances.

Forever out of the cellars,
Forever out of the subways,
Tha forgers of the future
Gather, and gaily
Sing at the common task,
The lova and the learning

Ah, to be ona of the chorus,
Sainting the coming creation!
But ah, still more, to contribute
My all to its realization!

age, he would have been too early rotten with its cowardice. Watched all night? More women than I have watched all night. Glad and proud I am that I do not watch for those who come ashamed, because they come too soon."

She faced my father, blazing. "You spoke a word of blame for this night's work" You? Then I shall tell him. If he had done anything else at all he would not have been his father's son. And all I ever asked for my life was to bear his father's son."

My father and I had been held dumb. But as she fell silent, the excitement of the last few days boiled in my veins.

"Mother!" I stammered, "Mother!" Then a memory of a night long ago swept across me.

"Comrade!" I cried.

She turned and for a flash a veil lifted. I think it was given me to see that once, the girl my father found in prison.

Then the shyness of her unusual outburst engulfed her, and the embarrassment between mother and son. We should both have sought refuge in the commonplace, but that my father spoke gravely.

"If that is your word, then you have come into your own. For because it is not refused to the least it is a title for the greatest. Because it is given you freely you shall spend your life earning it. Go, my son. I was wrong. This is not a night to know what that is, look nowhere but into your own soul."

My mother and father talked late together that night. I never knew what they said. But the day before yesterday, in the street fighting, my own young son was wounded. Now I can guess what my father and mother talked of that night.

Years later I went one night alone to say goodbye to my mother lying covered with white flowers.

My father came out of the room, his face carved with sorrow and passed me, without seeing. I must have known in any case that he had just gone from her. For only the hand she loved best in the world would have laid among the white flowers over her heart one blood-red rose.

Her son's voice went to silence. He looked off thru the dark at the new earth the grave which the people that day had laureled.

Down the street came the sound of men singing together.

JUDGING by returns from local unions of the United Mine Workers of America, John Brophy, progressive leader from the anthracite district, carried the election by a large majority. Of course, this does not mean that Brophy's election will be conceded by Lewis. Our cartoonist, Hay Bales, pictures Lewis advising his tally men to ignore the Brophy vote. This is exactly what will happen. We do not know of any bureaucracy in the A. F. of L. that has yet surrendered to the will of the majority, unless in a case where the switch was made from one reactionary group to another, as when Grable of the Maintenance of Way Employes was dumped and another faker installed in his place. This is not a suggestion to the members of the miners' union to drop the policy of staying inside the union and agitating and educating the membership. The job is to teach the masses of coal diggers as well as all other workers that only a progressive leadership will help them in their daily struggles for more wages and better working conditions and that will finally organize and lead them to freedom from wage servitude.

IT appears that the Coolidge-Kellogg policy of intervention in Nicaragua has met with bad luck. After going to the trouble of establishing "neutral" zones for the benefit of Adolfo Diaz, the reactionary puppet-president of the republic, the United States Admiral Latimer found that the revolutionists had no more difficulty in chasing the reactionary forces than they had before the intervention of United States marines. The more help that was given to Diaz the more he needed help. The landing of American armed forces on Nicaraguan soil not only incensed the Nicaraguans, but a wave of protest swept all over Latin-America, protest against the brutal disregard of American imperialism for the rights of weaker nations, despite the fact that an American president was the inventor of the once popular phrase, self-determination.

AT home the state department is under fire. While Coolidge passed compliments to Calles thru the medium of an aviation captain on an exploring trip thru South America, Senator Borah was asking Kellogg embarrassing questions about the diplomatic intrigues in Central America. It is true that Borah does not seem to be inclined to go very far, but his raising of the question in the senate will smoke out the tools of American imperialism in the state department and the White House. Borah declares that the Nicaraguan interference is part of a plan to wage a "cowardly war against Mexico." Fortunately for the South Americans, they are becoming increasingly able to take care of themselves as time goes on. If this government thinks it will have easy sailing in a war against Mexico or any other Latin-American country it will find out its mistake before long.

THE Cantonese are still advancing northwards and the task of consolidating China and expelling the imperialist powers is progressing rapidly. Shanghai is expected to fall soon. In fact the reactionary rulers of that great city are sitting on a powder barrel. The population is sympathetic to the Cantonese and are awaiting an opportunity to set fire to the powder. In the meantime we read that Chang-Tso-Lin has arrived in Peking and is planning to organize the reactionary elements for a concerted attack on the revolutionists. The reports state that the emperor, whoever the devil he is, gave Chang a reception on the latter's arrival. Mr. Lin promises to stabilize the government. That's a man's job. He appeals to the foreign powers to save China from the Bolshevik infection. The Chinese had their experience with the imperialists and with the Soviet government and it looks as if they prefer the latter. So, Chang's head may be hanging on a nail soon, if he takes care.

THE British having failed with the strong arm method are now resorting to a form of bribery in China. The perpetrators of the Wanhien outrage now take the lead in urging the powers to allow the Chinese to dispose of the customs taxes as they see fit. The Cantonese are turning a deaf ear on these proposals. The guns of the Chinese have forced the British to talk peace. The Chinese are of the opinion that as long as they stick to their guns the British will play the role of gentlemen. The other powers are still following the policy of England fry on the Chinese pan, is shown by the cool the polite manner with which France, Japan and the United States received the British proposal. France went to the trouble of telling the world that the French government had no intention of interfering in the domestic affairs of China.

GOVERNOR FRIENDLY RICHARDSON of California will neither grant nor refuse a pardon to Tom Mooney, on the ground that his term of office will run out in too short a time to permit him to study the 343-page document which accompanied Mooney's application for freedom. The Mooney frame-up is one of the most brazen and outrageous crimes ever perpetrated on an American working class leader. That he has not already paid for his services in behalf of the working class with his life is a tribute to the great fight put up by the left wing of the American labor movement in his behalf. Unless the workers renew their efforts to free Mooney it is highly probable that he will spend the rest of his days behind the high walls of San Quentin. Capitalist politicians are long on promises but short on action.

A Portrait of a Comrade

By Gertrude Nafe

It was the day of the great victory. The people had won. On every face was radiance and quiet. Far down the street I heard the sound of men singing together.

The great leader sat quietly in his own room. The [illegible] that had made him happiest had not been his [illegible]. But all day long a line of people had heaped [illegible] and laurel upon his father's grave, murmuring: "You died and the Great Cause seemed to die with you but The Day of the Dawn of Justice has [illegible]."

The leader himself sat in the great quietness of [illegible] and watched the fire on his own hearth. [illegible] man he was with eyes that burned and [illegible].

"If one might know all of the graves that should [illegible] roses today," he said, at last, "the graves of [illegible] that served as all well, who laid their lives on [illegible] altar day by day as Fate sent the days. For all [illegible] to see this dawn is enough. But those who [illegible] not live to see it—Yet I think the very earth [illegible] around them as they rest and makes them [illegible] of Peace and Brotherhood. You have not [illegible] me speak of my mother."

[illegible] a long time he was silent.

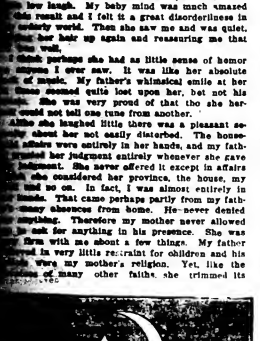
"It is hard to put so quiet a life into words. A flowing steadily to the sea, how shall one talk of it? And she used so few words herself. I [illegible] her mainly going quietly about her house. [illegible] plaited closely about her serene face. She [illegible] to market every morning, buying very shrewd. Then she cooked our dinner. We were always [illegible] and she had very little help. Often our meal [illegible] bread and cabbage soup. She made very good [illegible] soup.

"In the intervals of housekeeping she taught me [illegible] and my multiplication tables. We were [illegible] to move about so much that I should [illegible] had little learning otherwise. She impressed [illegible] me firmly that I must grow up to be a learned [illegible] like my father. She had no sense of humor at [illegible] and took my father's jokes as she would have [illegible] his dropping into a foreign language. She her[illegible] never laughed. No, I remember once.

"One of my first recollections is a lovely April [illegible] when I was playing around her feet in [illegible] of apple blossoms falling. Suddenly my father [illegible] me, made all her lovely fair hair come [illegible] over her neck and shoulders, falling down to [illegible] waist. She looked up at him and laughed a [illegible] low laugh. My baby mind was much amazed [illegible] this result and I felt it a great disorderliness in [illegible] orderly world. Then she saw me and was quiet. [illegible] her hair up again and reassuring me that [illegible] well.

"I think perhaps she had as little sense of humor [illegible] anyone I ever saw. It was like her absolute [illegible] of music. My father's whimsical smile at her [illegible] seemed quite lost upon her, but not his [illegible]. She was very proud of that too she herself could not tell one tune from another.

"Also she laughed little there was a pleasant sor[illegible] about her not easily disturbed. The household affairs were entirely in her hands, and my father [illegible] her judgment entirely whenever she gave [illegible] judgment. She never offered it except in affairs [illegible] she considered her province, the house, my [illegible] and so on. In fact, I was almost entirely in [illegible] hands. That came perhaps partly from my father's [illegible] absences from home. He never denied [illegible] anything. Therefore my mother never allowed [illegible] to ask for anything in his presence. She was [illegible] firm with me about a few things. My father [illegible] in very little restraint for children and his [illegible] were my mother's religion. Yet, like the [illegible] of many other faiths, she trimmed its [illegible] to



[illegible] and Turkish representative meeting at [illegible] to cement friendly relations between two [illegible]

[illegible] She edges a bit to make them fit into everyday life. In some things I was very obedient. [illegible] more I was consumed. I knew that to disturb my father at his work comprised the Seven Deadly Sins all rolled into one. The laws of the Medes and the Persians were as water to that.

I might have resented this later except that he was himself so entirely innocent of any plot to put him on a pedestal. I knew that that had been my mother's work entirely.

"Then he was busy he could go into abstraction so profound that he forgot us as one forgets the shadows on the wall.

"When I was eleven or twelve perhaps, at the age when children knock at the very portals of the gods to ask "why?" I tried to get into his study one day past my mother.

"He said that he would hear this history lesson when I was ready," I urged, for he was a wonderful teacher. But he had time to teach me.

"He would do it, if he promised you," she agreed, "but you will manage not to be ready until he is finished with his work."

"Why must I always wait for his work?" I sulked, "he is my father."

"Your father," she said with cold scorn, "what talk to me! Your father's work is not with one child alone. It is the care of many children, little and helpless, for all the world of those who suffer and who often cry for bread. Some of them are children, too, smaller than you, helpless. If you could push in to take his time from them it would be better for me and mine not to have been born." I was awed at her cold anger and I never forgot.

We lived in one place and another. Sometimes my father was with us sometimes he was away months at a time. I did not understand. But one time when he had been living peacefully with us for many months, I woke to find my mother sitting up very late looking into the fire. Her face was very white and cold and the reflection of other times that I had seen her sitting so, stirred sick terror in me. Back, at intervals of years, in my childhood, came memories of her sitting all night in front of the fire her face white and the terrible quiet in her eyes.

At dawn my father came, and with the sound of his step at the door she was her composed self again. Neither knew that I was awake.

"They have me," said my father, "they are waiting outside the door. Goodbye, my love."

She lifted her face to him.

"What will become of you and the little one here in a strange country?" he asked. "I will send for help for you when I can But it will not be soon."

"Send for nothing," she said, "and let nothing fret you. I am a woman of the people I am not so helpless that I cannot take care of myself and one child."

"This is not home" He still looked anxious.

"That is not for you to think of," she said. "Better that I and mine were dead than to be a stone around the neck of one who has toward the end of the helpless It is for you to look out for those who long ago lost hope."

My father looked at her. "Still the little girl I saw in the prison" he said, and bent to kiss her Then he used the word which so many years afterwards reechoed for me.

"Goodbye, Comrade."

It was many months before we saw him again, but his words echoed strangely in my ears.

The next day my mother drove me to the station, "Were you ever in prison mother?"

For a moment my mother looked at me a little startled. Then she answered quite calmly.

"For two days only. There was a raid. The police put many of us in prison for a little while My people came and got me out on the second day but your father was kept a long time with the other leaders. That was the first time he had seen me who, of course, I had seen him often. When he came out, he married me."

She spoke Semele-like as the she herself had had nothing to do with It. The god had descended. That was all. Still I wonder if Semele had to make the cabbage soup, day after day—

"Great men have odd notions, at times," she went on.

She must have forgotten that she was speaking to me. I have tried all my life to decide what she meant. Surely she was not referring to herself as the odd notion of a great man

When my father next came from prison we went back to our own country, and life went along very quietly for us until I was nearly fifteen. I studied very hard and was ready to enter college.

Then hard times came, much hunger, rioting on the streets. One day I saw a woman in the breadline get into a dispute with a soldier on riot duty. Like a young fool, I attacked him and was locked up over night for my folly. In the morning my father came and got me out.

I shall never forget my father's talk to me on the road home. For the first time in his life he really set himself to show me that I had been wrong. My mother had often blamed me, my father never

"They who wish to make a great and vital change, must take a long and weary road," he said, "and they must gather strength and wisdom for a long journey before ever they set out. Control yourself, know what you are fighting and what you are fighting for. Know what is the best way and how you will begin and how end It is the greatest work in the world. Do not throw yourself into it unprepared and so ruin the service you wish to give Know, that is the great word, know"

I was silent I felt very young and much ashamed.

Your mother," he added quietly, "had sat all night watching the fire."

I looked up at him, astonished. Had he never seen her so before? Then I remembered. It was always when he was away, when he was in trouble. Many as were the times I could remember, he knew nothing of any of them. Then a strange little grade began to creep into my heart For me, for me too, she would do that

As we reached home my mother stood in the doorway. As I looked in her face I read, "What has happened to my father?" Then I remembered. It was not my father. The terrible quiet in her eyes was for me and again with my sorrow came that astonished little pride.

My father felt that I had been blamed enough and said, before either of us could speak

"I have told him, dear child, that there are wiser ways of going about such things and that he should have that of you, and not begun so young and so hotly."

My mother looked up at him questioningly interrupting herself so that she failed to greet me at all until we were in the sitting room

Then she stood before us

"You told him that he should think of me?" she repeated. "What should he think of me?"

She folded her hands in front of her and her very garments spoke authority

"You told him that my night was anxious What of that? I have watched the fire before this" She looked back grimly into her life. "I have been anxious many times and shall be again, for two years Have I ever begrudged it"

"There was a woman, you say, standing in the bread line. It was but one of the many she should have cried then. You told him that he was young? But you were going to have seen brutal injustice. If it had been ripe with all the wisdom of old

THE BETTER 'OLE.

Cheerio, old top! Bill is 'ere in Chicago. And 'ell make you larf 'till your sides ache! Blime if 'e won't! Syd Chaplin hiding behind the walrus mustache of the famous character developed by the artist Bruce Bairnsfather, gives us a characterisation that is as good a bit of burlesque as ever given us by his brother Charlie.

We call this burlesque. War is a laughing matter and a minimum of patriotic molasses is stuck to it. The story opens with old Bill and his halfpint partner Alf (well played by Jack Ackroyd) in a shell hole under fire. Little Alf complains the hole is a poor one. Bill tells him: "If you knows of a better 'ole go to it!" and from this bright sally to the absurd end the whole picture is a scream.

Old Bill as portrayed by Syd Chaplin is a shrewd, stodgy, likable old duffer. With pipe always present under the bushy mustache his escapades in the war become classic. It's true we are given the usual stuff in the plot where Old Bill saves half the army from the Germans. That is to be expected. However, there are remarkably funny situations to offset the hokum.

In a theatrical performance the soldiers give at the front, Old Bill refuses to become the 'orses 'ind end and becomes the 'orses neck. He and his partner Alf are sewed into the hide of a horse and from then on and for an hour it seems their escapades are as funny as any ever screened.

The directing of "Chuck" Reisner (who collaborated also in writing the scenario) is a splendid job. The photography is of a high order. The subtitles are in humorous harmony with the picture which ranks with the very best comedies ever made. Syd Chaplin is a great clown and this picture puts him second only to the masterly comedian, his brother.

Blime if the Woods Theatre isn't the Better 'Ole to go to right now. Go to it!

ALSO THE VITAPHONE.

A few weeks ago our New York critic gave us a review of the second performance of the VITAPHONE and only a brief mention of "The Better 'Ole." Because the order we have reviewed "The Better 'Ole" and make brief mention of the VITAPHONE, forced also to repeat the enthusiasm of the first review. In the program of this remarkable invention George Jessel gives a clever monologue. A quartette, the Howard brothers and Reginald Werrenrath contribute song and humor. Al Jolson, best known "mammy" singer, is interesting to watch as he does his stuff. As a whole the program, doubled in interest with the addition of "The Better 'Ole," makes an evening's theatricel pleasure you will find it hard to equal.

When the play opens we find that the natives are beginning to awaken to the fact that they are being swindled and Jones attempts to escape to the coast.

The rest of the play shows him he is trying to escape, the fears and terror that overcome him as he goes further and further into the forest and without knowing it, turns around in a circle into the waiting arms of the natives who kill him.

Most of the latter scenes are in semi-darkness and Gilpin her[illegible] his remarkable acting ability.

The Theater

"THE EMPEROR JONES."

Eugene O'Neill's famous play, "The Emperor Jones," with Charles Gilpin in the title role is now playing at the Mayfair Theater, New York City.

First produced several years ago, it is still considered one of O'Neill's best. In the present revival, Gilpin gives a fine performance and anyone who likes O'Neill's style will spend an enjoyable evening at the theater.

It is a "one man show," practically no other character having an opportunity to do very much with the possible exception of Jean Hart, playing the part of Harry Smithers, a British trader.

The story concerns Brutus Jones, a Negro pullman porter, who having been sent in jail as a result of committing murder during a crap game, escapes after killing the keeper and finds his way to a West Indian island, where by trickery he sets himself up as emperor over the ignorant and superstitious natives.

WHY AUTHORS WRITE AND LIONS HUNT

Old Or New Culture?

WHY do authors write? Whom do they write for? Is American culture dead? Is the "machine age" fatal to art and culture? Should artists form their own trade unions? It is true that writers and artists are Bolshevike?

These and other questions on society and art are answered by fourteen poets, novelists, newspaper men, and critics in the January issue of the New Masses. Under the title, "Are Artists People?" are grouped answers on a questionnaire sent to Harbor Allen, Bruce Barton, Van Wyck Brooks, Heywood Broun, Stuart Chase, Babette Deutsch, Waldo Frank, Robinson Jeffers, Joseph Wood, Krutch, Llewellyn Powys, Edwin Seaver, Upton Sinclair, Genevieve Taggard, and Edmund Wilson.

THE answers prove that the majority of these writers have faith in American culture, hail the advent of the machine age, want an artist's union, and believe that artists should take an active part in the material fights of life like their more substantial neighbors. They express doubt about the "hope for a new world culture thru the rise of the working class to power," but barring a few exceptions, they are "sympathetic" towards economic and social revolution.

The charge of egoism hurled against artists since the beginning of time is verified in answers to the first two questions, "Why do you write?" and "For what audience do you produce?" Bruce Barton, sole altruistic exception, writes to "make his family comfortable" and intimates that it isn't hard to find "an appreciative and profitable audience." The rest write frankly for themselves because they like to write, and are rather choice about their audiences. They all hope to get audiences, of course, but several confess that they write for audiences of people like themselves or for other writers.

ALL of the writers high-hat "literary prostitution," which they define as writing solely for money or fame. Edmund Wilson points out, however, that Shakespeare's plays were often "made to order." On the query, "Do you believe contemporary American culture decadent?" the says have it by a vote of six to four. Van Wyck Brooks comes out with a flat accusation of decadence, while Genevieve Taggard thinks it is "dormant and rather more commercial than decadent." A few take side wallops at American art by stating that what has never been can't decay.

By a vote of six to three the writers give a clean bill of health to the "machine age." They believe the machine will change culture and art but not kill it. Exception is taken by Upton Sinclair who fears that if machine-made ware continue there will be neither old or new culture; by Joseph Wood Krutch who "gets little aesthetic satisfaction out of machinery," and by Brooks who believes "the tendency to worship the machine, or even reflect it passively but admiringly in pictorial art, is destructive of life."

THE question "How should the artist adapt himself to the machine age?" finds the writers dying in all directions. Robinson Jeffers is for "adaptation without excitement." Harbor Allen is for "epic conquest" Sinclair and Stuart Chase advocate using the new power offered by machinery. Robin Seaver says "accept it." Babette Deutsch says "understand it," and Heywood Broun asks to "claim exemption." Opposite viewpoints are taken by Krutch who doesn't want to "spend any more time on machinery than he has to" by Llewellyn Powys who advises the artist to beat a retreat, by Brooks who says "the artist must not adapt himself to the machine age," and by Miss Deutsch who is sure he can't, unless he "is of it, born deep in it" She knows only one artist able to do this, but lets who are trying.

The hope of getting bigger royalties and a chance to exchange ideas urges seven out of ten writers to vote for artists' unions. Heywood Broun, however, doesn't see how "unskilled is going to help them." Miss Deutsch is doubtful, and Krutch is sure some of them want to be left alone.

ONLY three, Upton Sinclair, Genevieve Taggard, and Harbor Allen risk a definite "yes" to the question: "Is there any hope for a new world culture through the rise of the workers to power." The rest, though "sympathetic," have doubts. Jeffers thinks a new culture after a proletarian revolution "could rise only beyond the Lethe of a new dark age." "It might! Who knows?" speculates Broun. "Is there hope? Yes," comes from Stuart Chase. Krutch feels also that there is "hope but not certainty," and Miss Deutsch declares that if working class culture comes it will be like the culture of the middle ages. She advises workers to have their revolution first before speculating about the resultant art. Edmund Wilson temporizes with "I depends." Brooks alone says that there will be no new culture, or at best, a "worse culture than we already have." Waldo Frank states that since an artist gets his values not "from the air, but from facts, he cannot be spiritually allied to the revolutionary working class movement."

The Case of Max Holz

By Felix Halle (Berlin)

MAX Holz did not spring from the proletariat of the big towns but of the country. After leaving school he first worked as a farm hand. The intelligent youth, however, made the acquaintance of an engineer, who took him to England with him and thus he gained a wider horizon. Strictly educated as a Catholic, Holz, right through his youth had petty bourgeois ideals. He was desirous of obtaining a better position in life for himself in order to be able to recompense his parents in their old age for the trouble and sacrifice they had had to undergo to rear and educate their children.

It was not until the world war that Max Holz began to concern himself with social problems. He was first drawn into the economic and political struggles of the working class in the post-war period. In the year 1919 one-third of the population of the little town nin Falkenstein, in Vogtland, was unemployed. Max Holz was elected to the Unemployed Council. As he very energetically championed the interests of the unemployed he soon came into conflict with the laws of the bourgeois state. Persecuted for having caused disturbances, he had to flee.

It was in this period of illegality that he made his first attempt to obtain a fundamental knowledge regarding the proletarian class struggle. His teacher was the former social-democratic member of the reichstag, Otahle, who at that time had become a typical ultra-left supporter of the K. A. P. D. (Communist Labor Party). Holz very rapidly grasped the world outlook and the aims of Marxism, but as regards the methods of the class struggle he never obtained a Leninist training. Dominated by a passionate temperament, he exerted a suggestive force upon the masses.

In 1920, on the occasion of the Kapp Putsch, Holz immediately emerged from his illegality and with his few hundred armed proletarians, who nevertheless yielded him unquestioning obedience, succeeded in exercising such a power in Vogtland that the government saw itself compelled to dispatch a greater force of reichswehr troops against him. The Vogtland proletariat was unable to stand against this superior force. After his band of followers had been broken up Holz fled to Czecho-Slovakia.

The German government demanded his arrest and extradition as a common robber and as incendiary. The Czech courts, however, were compelled, owing to the proofs brought before by the defense, to recognise that the actions of Holz did not constitute common crimes, but military measures in civil war, and therefore Holz was able to claim right of asylum as a political fugitive. The Czech government thereupon refused to extradite Max Holz. In the proceedings connected with the demand for his extradition the lying assertions of the bourgeois press that Marx Holz was a common criminal were officially refuted.

Holz did not, however, remain for long in secure asylum abroad, but like a true revolutionary and in spite of the fact that over a dozen warrants were out for his arrest, returned secretly to Germany and carried on agitation for the proletarian revolution. The solidarity of his class comrades, shielded him for over a year from his persecutors. The intensification of the situation in Central Germany in March 1921, the act of provocation by Severing and Horsing in calling in the Schupo (Defensive Police), again summoned Holz to the scene of struggle. He immediately appeared as the recognised military leader at the head of the fighting proletariat of Central Germany. After the defeat of the working class Holz again went into hiding. Owing to treachery he finally fell into the hands of the authorities.

The trial of Max Holz before the special court was dominated by the demand of the bourgeoisie for vengeance for his having attempted to call into question their rule. It was demanded that Holz should not be tried and sentenced as a political prisoner, but that he should be branded as a common criminal. A reward of over 50,000 marks was offered merely for evidence that should serve to "convict" Max Holz. All this hounding down did not fail to achieve its result. While Holz's troops were crossing the Manor of Roitz an estate owner named Hess was shot. The prosecuting authorities now endeavored to make Holz out to be the murderer of this estate owner. Altho at the preliminary proceedings the widow of the deceased, at repeated examinations, had not recognised Holz as the perpetrator, at the main proceedings and under the pressure of the whole atmosphere of suggestion prevailing, she indicated Max Holz as the one who had fired the shot. A member of Holz's band was also found who declared that he had seen Holz shoot the estate owner. Another man of his band, who had previously been given three years imprisonment for fraud, who claimed to be a writer and journalist and had joined the "Red army" as reporter (in reality as a spy), stated that he had heard Holz say that the man among with his followers had shot the estate owner.

These statements did not suffice even the bourgeois court to condemn Holz as a murderer as the prosecution desired. The court found a way out by bringing in a verdict of an unpremeditated killing that is, manslaughter. The sentencing of Holz to 15 years imprisonment for manslaughter with loss of civil rights enabled the court also in other cases to represent him as a man who did not have much consideration for the lives of his fellow-men.

At his trial Holz admitted all his revolutionary acts and only emphatically denied the charge of murder and manslaughter of the estate owner and two other alleged attempts to kill. After being sentenced Holz consistently characterized the sentence on account of manslaughter as an error of justice, and took up the fight against this. Holz spoke the truth. Now, after five and a half years, the one who actually committed the deed for which Holz was condemned has made a confession before a notary and will give himself up within the next few days. Following on this confession the chief witness for the prosecution has now declared that his statement at the trial was due to mistaken identity. Even the widow of the deceased, Frau Hess, has admitted in a written declaration that she may have been mistaken in her accusation of Holz.

Max Holz has been condemned to a total sentence of life long imprisonment and permanent loss of all rights. With the fresh evidence the Hess case completely falls to the ground. As no person found guilty of high treason is to be found in prison—at least so far as members of the right parties are concerned—the crime of high treason for which Holz can now only be held guilty, must, after five and a half years' imprisonment, be pronounced as having been expiated. Even according to bourgeois law there no longer exists any reason for keeping Max Holz in prison. The working class must therefore demand his release all the more energetically

The Peace Prize Farce

The four drawings surrounding this note is a German Communist artist's portrayal of the farcical action of the Nobel Peace Prize committee in bestowing the honor and the money connected with it on four such notorious capitalist butchers as Chamberlain, Stresemann, Dawes and Briand. Each brigand tells why he was awarded the peace prize. While the armies and navies of England, France and the United States are shooting down colonial peoples who are trying to free themselves from foreign imperialism, the German bourgeoisie are riding roughshod over their own wage slaves and clubbing demonstrations of the unemployed. The story of Max Holtz's incarceration which appears on this page proves how sincere are the peace efforts of those gentlemen.

The Cruiser Potemkin.

By EUGENE KREININ.

The shadow of Potemkin,
And the enemy crawls back into a nook of defense.

Fear in the heart,
As black as its decks;
It turns the face from the danger
Which hangs like a sword
Over the heads of the guilty.

Potemkin—the soul of 1905,
Nourishing the body of the proletariat,
To its final manhood—
The broad-shouldered, sinewy October . . .

The memory of revolutionary splendor,
The message of a victorious army,
Brought to the very portals of the foe.

And the foe sickens at the sight,
And with the power in its hands,
It tries to shut the light of Potemkin,
From those, it fears;
For the memory and realization are cruel—
October—The vanguard for its destruction, all means against peace.

The Story of Okanogan Apples

By Joel Shomaker

LONG while ago men found the land of the Okanogan. It was a wild section of the Great North West. It was a land of wonders. The Columbia river drained the country and entered the United States with the Canadian border. Pioneers entered the new land. Some sought gold and silver. Others were interested in hunting, fishing and trapping. Many settlers located on the land and planted orchards.

Fort Okanogan is one of the historical spots in romance. It marks the place where the first white settlement was made in the state of Washington. It was where the native indians met their paleface foes and signed a treaty of peace. A large portion of the Okanogan country is still included in an Indian Reservation. But the white man has made Okanogan famous because of the superior quality of big red apples grown in the orchards.

One time I made a tour of the land of the Okanogan. I had spent many years in the Northwest and written many stories about the apple growing sections of different states. The Okanogan country appealed to me for recognition. I desired to know it as an open book. So I climbed into an auto stage, at Wenatchee, and journeyed into the irrigated vale of Okanogan. A dust storm forced the stage driver to make a detour.

The noise from a moving wagon attracted our attention. The shifting sands lifted and the atmosphere cleared. A strong wagon of the plains hove in sight. It was drawn by four big western horses. The driver pulled on the lines and the horses stopped. The wagon was loaded with apples in boxes. The teamster said he was hauling the apples to the river, to be shipped, by steamer, to the nearest railroad station.

There was a story in that caravan for me so I talked. With a note book in hand, I walked round the wagon and tried to count the boxes. The man who owned the team and its cargo had something to say. He opened one of the boxes and gave a nice red apple. He asked a question. I did not reply. There came a moment of suspense. Both men were wondering just what thoughts were chasing through the brains of the other fellow.

"What are you getting for those apples?" I asked, in a very quiet tone of voice.

One dollar per box delivered at Wenatchee," the man replied, without showing any signs of flinching.

"You cannot produce apples like these, for that money." I ventured to suggest, as the nice fruits were examined. "It costs you more than one dollar per box to grow, pick, pack and market the apples."

"Yes, you are right. They cost me one dollar and five cents per box to grow, harvest and deliver to the buyer," the man confessed, after a little figuring in his own mind.

"You farmers beat the world at figuring profit and loss." I hurried out not thinking what effect my words might have on the rancher. "Just how you expect to break even on apples, that cost you five cents more per box to market than you get out of the deal is a problem in mental arithmetic I cannot solve."

"I reckon you are one of them city guys that figures on paper," the farmer retorted, as his eyes twinkled. "I'll bet a dime against a nickel cigar, that you never farmed and don't know a darned thing about apples."

"There is where you are wrong." I replied. "I was brought up on a farm. I have had much to do with apples—from the tree to the consumer. You have been reading my articles and editorials on farming for a long time."

"Excuse me, sir," the man begged, "you must be one of the farm editors of the state. I took you for a politician out here in the sagebrush, telling the rangers how to vote."

"Right you are on the score of me being a newspaper editor. Wrong you are on the political idea. I am out here trying to find out what we need for better conditions on the farms."

"Well, since you want to know how I could do on apples, I am going to tell you. It might be a service to you, in getting a railroad and better transportation for the farmers.

"If I pick my apples, box them and haul them to the river and ship by steamer, to the buyer, the one dollar per box, I lose only five cents on each box. If I let the apples stay on the trees and do not pick, pack and haul them to market, I lose the whole crop."

The man filled his pipe, struck a match and began to puff out tobacco smoke. The team moved on to the south. The stars went to the north. I did a lot of thinking about the possibilities of apple growing in the Okanogan country. I presume the rancher smoked his pipe and wondered why the newspaper man from the city was meddling so much about producing and selling apples.

Moral—When you see a big red apple from the Okanogan country, do not conclude that it has pockets of yellow gold owned by the rich old farmers, for it may represent the giving of an extra year in producing the crop and a donation of a few cents for every box, of one hundred or more apples just to help along the trade of the world.

The Crisis In Liberalism

By Bert Wolf

UNDER the same title as this article, John Maynard Keynes some time ago wrote an article in which he indicated that British liberalism was in a critical state and the old theory of laissez faire was yielding to the ideas developed by the present-day order of monopolistic imperialism and fascism on the one hand and the proletarian revolution on the other. That this crisis is a deep-going one is proved by the fact that in England, the classic land of liberalism, the liberal party has been relegated to the position of third party and the labor party has forged ahead of it. In addition to that, there is an internal crisis within the liberal party which indicates a further polarisation of liberalism towards the labor party on the one hand and towards the conservative party on the other. This inner crisis takes the form of a fractional fight between Lloyd George and Asquith and then between Lloyd George and Earl Gray.

LIBERALISM was long bankrupt in fact in England before it received its theoretical death sentence in the post war period, for in the practice of liberal laissez faire England was increasingly becoming one of regulation of industry by law, of unemployment insurance, and other forms of social legislation, of imperialism (which begets a theory that is directly opposed to liberalism) and of other practices which directly contradict the whole liberal theory.

Now comes Harold J. Laski and in a quiet book review of a not too important book announces his apostasy from liberalism and goes over in his own special field of political theory to the Communist position. To those worried liberals who have been trying to hold onto their philosophy in an age which no longer gives it any color of truth and validity; to those few liberals who were not either going over to the position of sympathisers with the labor movement or the contrary position of defenders of imperialism, the apostasy of Harold J. Laski will prove a fatal blow for he commands considerable prestige among them as one of the few apostles of liberalism in the field of politics that is still capable of writing books that have an air of having something to contribute to a philosophy that is going into bankruptcy.

LASKI was not as sensational as Keynes in his choice of a method of announcing the bankruptcy of liberalism; he has written no leading article expressing his new views nor given any such dramatic title as Keynes' "The Crisis in Liberalism," but he is obviously a more thorough-going thinker and has followed his thoughts to their logical conclusions which land him, as indicated above, in the field of Communist theory in his own special subject.

Laski's declaration appears in the review of Professor R. M. MacIver's book, "The Modern State," a book which, judging from Laski's review is of not very much importance. It serves, however, as a foil for an expression of Laski's new conclusions. Although his conclusions are expressed in the complicated language of academic writing, yet they are clear, sharp and decisive. Laski writes:

"I CANNOT, in the first place, understand what he means by words and phrases like 'solidarity' or 'common interest;' I see no unity of any kind in society except what is put there by men, and I see none possible of achievement except by a complete reconstruction of the foundations of the present order.

"Professor MacIver seems to me to write as though there is somehow a unity in society which a force called 'progress' or 'evolution' is unfolding; I cannot see that this is so . . . And, as a corollary view, he seems to lay far too little emphasis upon the importance in the social order of the system of property. (Emphasis mine throughout the citation—B. D. W.) It is, in fact, from the rights annexed to property that a social order takes its color. Society may make its impact upon the state; but the state also makes society, and the whole process of life is set in the context of what its property system implies. Rights, for instance, which Professor MacIver admits the state exists to obtain are always, in fact, relative to property, whether it is freedom of discussion, equality before the courts, or a living wage that is involved. The result of unequal property is, accordingly, that the state exists actually to protect unequal rights and in 'maintaining the universal conditions of social order' it is, again in fact, maintaining unequal rights. This is the great truth in the Communist answer to the classical political philosophy. There is a reason in which the modern state is substantially the 'executive committee of the capitalist class.' To those of us who believe that the present system involves the class-war as its inherent logic, this aspect of the problem is urgent, and needs more discussion than Professor MacIver had devoted to it."

Shadow of Death on Them.

Shadow of death on them, the dauntless brave,
Shadow of death on them because they stood
Amid the press of battle for the slave,
And organized their class to fight for food.
Shadow of death on them because the tears
Of little children wrung their taut heartstrings;
Shadow of death on them because the years
Had made them foes to Profit Butcheringe.

Shadow of death on them because they cried
Their murdered brother's blood aloud to Cain;
Shadow of death on them, their lives denied,
Because they pointed to the martyred slain.
Shadow of death on them, the grisly chair
Waiting beyond their barred cells in the gloom;
Shadow of death on them, the strangled fear,
The mouthing monstare and the ghastly room.

Shadow and death on them. And must they die,
In that they felt too much the misery
Embodied in a starving baby's cry,
In women driven on to harlotry?
Shadow of death on them. And must they pass,
Spared and consumed, because we are too meek,
Too spiritless in courage as a class,
To dare the Bosses' might—to rise and speak?

development of a waterfall for hydro-electric does seem to be a comparatively simple and engineering task. Next to a waterfall advantageous power source is a rapid river called "gradient"—as the drop in water level length is called. Here again the situation similar to that at the waterfall. The dam located at the lower level, and the intake is at the higher level. Of course, a place course of the river is straight for a long would not be a favorable location for the the pipe might have to go back a great in search of a point where the river level is very above the level at the station. And if the river is much used for navigation, a dam cannot be built without providing a lock-canal at the same time thru which the ships can get by the dam.

Totaling up the potential power development of all available sites, Stetsmet fixed on 230,000,000 kilowatts as the water power resources of the U. S. Of this huge sum only 7,000,000 kilowatts—just 3 per cent—has been developed and is in use at the present time. Water power formed only 5.3 per cent of the total power used in the U. S. in 1924.

Why has the development of water power lagged so badly? Because despite its promise for the fu- ture, it has until recently been unable to gain ground on its chief present competitor—steam. The strug- gle has been taking place in two parts—steam versus electricity in general, and steam-electric ver- sus hydro-electric power.

We mentioned once before that an electric gener- ator can be driven by either a steam turbine or a water turbine. The initial investment for a hydro- electric plant is just about double the investment for a steam-electric plant of the same power. The steam electric plant requires only boilers, acces- sories and generating units to commence operation. But the hydro-electric plant involves the exceed- ly expensive construction of the dam, the purchase (whether from the state or from the politicians who run it) of the water power rights and the purchase of the territory that is to be flooded in case this is privately owned. Furthermore, the favorable hydro- electric sites are generally up in the mountains, in remote places. The material and machinery for the construction of the dam must often be brought long distances and to places which are accessible only with difficulty. Worst of all, the fact that the power sites are far from the districts where the power is going to be used means that long transmission lines must be built—copper wire almost unto its tons, car- ried on posts for hundreds of miles over hills and valleys. All this must be completed before any of the power can be used. The daily and seasonal vari- ations both in the output of hydro-electric plants and in the consumption of power have acted as another, and possibly greater, hindrance to development.

But now the talk is not of power but of "Super- power." The Superpower project is a recognition of the changed economics of steam-electricity—water power.

The Superpower project recognizes the wasteful- ness of the small individual steam power plant, the need for a great increase in electrical power, and the impossibility of haphazard hydro-electric de- velopment without an organized plan. It advocates new construction, and the inter-connection of all pos- sible stations into one giant network of power.

The engineers' report to the government that has become known as the "Superpower Project" con- [illegible] itself with a program for organized genera- [illegible] and inter-connection only in the dis- [illegible] comprising the Eastern States of Ontario and [illegible] regions. The greatest concentration of the [illegible] W. We must bear in mind, however, no per cent [illegible] present hydro-electric plants in the country is located [illegible] Rock Mountains and the Pacific area pos- [illegible] only 20 per cent of the potential water pow- er. Partly in view of fair, the report recommends that 80 per cent of the power requirements be sup- plied by steam-electric stations.

Between the anthracite and bituminous regions as the basic source of the power required, the report favors the anthracite. Economical power generation in the bituminous region would require that coal plants be built at the mines so as to conserve all the by products of the coal. Furthermore, the claim is made that the bituminous region does not provide sufficient water for steam condensation—tho this may be remedied in the future by a system of reser- voirs. The anthracite is considered as the most favorable source of power, but it is recommended that the mines be electrified.

Cheap energy, however, cannot be obtained from steam alone, and the development of water power is essential to conserve coal. The hydro-electric plants included in the Superpower scheme are divided in- to three classes: 1. Plants depending on uniform stream flow e. g. on the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers. These can be relied on for the basic pro duction. 2. Plants with a variable stream flow e. g. on the Susquehanna where storage to cover the seasons of low water is [illegible]. These can be developed for as much as can be gotten from them. 3. Plants on streams that would require storage reservoirs e. g. the Connecticut, Hudson Delaware and Potomac. These could be developed for production of the extra power required at the peak of the demand.

The economies expected from inter-connection are these: It would permit the basic plants to be op- erated at their full basic capacity all the time, a necessary condition for high efficiency. It would permit the development of the less favorable water power projects that could not maintain themselves if they had to operate alone. It would save fuel by permitting the less efficient of the steam-electric plants to be shut down at times when the power con- sumption is light. It would vastly increase the dis- tribution capacity.

Two technical problems stand out in the consider- ation of Superpower. One is transmission, the other is standardization. Inter-connecting lines must be capable of carrying the full power load so that if one station has to shut down, another may take its place. Many existing transmission systems are in- adequate for this requirement of Superpower. Ade- quate protective devices and selective schemes for disconnecting defective circuits are essential. These we are assured, are available.

In addition to this, the unprecedented length of the transmission lines involved in the project pre- sents new difficulties or at least difficulties that were negligible or easily met in the case of the shorter lines. Foremost among these is "Instability"—the tendency of an exceedingly long line to rein- force any power surges that may take place in the system, reflecting them back and forth along the line, with more and more power and higher and higher voltage, until disaster ensues. This prob- lem is now practically solved, but great care will be necessary to see that all circuits and systems that inter-connect be designed so as to have character- istics that will insure stability.

Standardization of transmission and distribution voltages and frequencies is essential. In Pennsyl- vania in 1921, 17 different D. C. voltages and 21 dif- ferent A. C. voltages were found to be in use. Such conditions make only for chaos. 93 per cent of the power in the zone covered by the report is gene- rated at the frequencies of 25 and 60 cycles. It is calculated that the adoption of 60 cycles as a stand- ard frequency would save 17½ per cent of the total investment in motors and power. For main line, long-distance transmission 220,000 volts has been suggested as the standard. The economic capacity of the lines at 220,000 volts is more than double that at 150,000 volts.

It is estimated that by 1930, the investment in Superpower will be $163,000,000. The coal saved will be 19,000,000 tons per year. And the total annual savings $229,000,000.

The development of Superpower will give the wid- est possible selection of the most economical sources of energy at any time of the day or year. Power in any quantity will be available in almost any locality. Factories need no longer be tied to their boilers. The tendency will be for industry to distribute it- self more, to spread away from the sources of fuel (the coal regions), and to locate close to its mar- kets.

CALENDAR FOR YEAR NINE

According to the swells' best steer,
I wish you all a Glad New Year.
With just a few short reservations
And now and then some explanations.

The calendar, I surely hope
We'll change from that made by the Pope,
And give a chance to be alive
By cutting workies' days to five.
And bring it further up to date
By keeping working hours to eight,
And not make minutes go so fast,
By speed-work for the time you last.

But why bid one a Glad New Year
When new is like the old, I fear?
Same system here to run the show,
Same financiers to cop the dough,
Tha same old boss with pockets deep,
Same banks with gold plied in a heap,
Same foremen and the same straw-bosses,
Owners' profit, workers' losses.

I think this time I'll switch the gear,
Instead of wishing Glad New Year,
I'll start this rhyme on some fresh page
And wish you all a Glad New Age.
As hint, I'll date this in conclusion,
The Ninth Year of the Revolution.

They Were Only "Greasers" - By C. A. Moseley

IN the early morning of December 7th soon after midnight, a telephone call to the police station in Melrose Park reported that a woman was being as- saulted at two strings of box cars inhabited by Mex- ican laborers in the Provino yards of the C. & N. W. The police do not know to this day who sent in the call, they didn't ask when they took it over the 'phone. But here, to start with, was something explosive. A woman, presumably an American, was being ravished by a bunch of "greasers."

But she wasn't; there was no woman in the case.

Not knowing that the woman was non-existent, Policeman Stahl started for the scene on his motor- cycle. Sergeant Bohl, and Officers Kolwitz, Win- ters, and Malecky went too. According to the testi- mony of three of these men, all who were able to testify at all, only dim nightlights burned in the two of the 36 box-cars which were the quarters of the unmarried men. No cries were heard from any woman—not until the shooting started and the wo- man in the camp acted out in fear and alarm.

Stahl and Kolwitz were on one side of the string of cars; the other three were on the other side. Most likely they shot at each other; it wouldn't be the first time that officers have done that in the dark. They saw no one about the cars. But 40 to 70 feet away from the cars, Stahl and perhaps Kolwitz met a drunken Mexican, Jose Sanchez.

AFTER the shooting was over, Stahl and Sanchez were dead, one lying almost across the body of the other. And Kolwitz called to the other officers, who had by that time come to his side of the cars, that he was badly wounded in the arm.

The bewildered officers were willing to assert, even under oath, that a volley of from 30 to 50 shots had come from the two cars. They got offic- ers from Chicago with tear bombs and raided the box cars. At the longest, the three officers who were alive and not wounded, testified that no gun or weapon was found in either car. Where the "volley" had come from, they did not attempt to ex- plain. That the officers had shot at each other was not suggested.

Now we will say that Officer Stahl shot at Sanchez first. What justification he had for shooting at a drunken man, we do not know. Perhaps none. But he got four bullets into Sanchez from the front, one at least made a mortal wound, but not instantly fatal. Sanchez still had time, before he dropped, to pump four bullets into Stahl's brain. We say that Stahl shot first, for he could not have fired after the first of the four shots penetrated his skull.

The coroner's physician made a careful examina- tion of both bodies. He sent out for a new hack-saw blade during the autopsy. Yet at the inquest, not a bullet was put in evidence, to show from what gun or guns they came. Did they know in their own minds that Stahl and Sanchez killed each other? In fact, the inquest seemed to concern itself entirely with who killed Policeman Stahl. It was either as- sumed that he killed Sanchez, or they didn't care who killed a Mexican.

BUT the man who sat at the inquest as the "de- fendant" in the case was another young Mexi- can, Agustin Morales. He was picked up after the shooting by two officers at Oak Park, where he was trudging toward Chicago on a streetcar. He had on him when arrested a revolver with no charges in it, not even blank cartridges. And he had two quart bottles full of moonshine, but they were full, not empty. They were still full when shown at the inquest. The officers testified that he was perfectly sober when arrested no smell of liquor on him.

And they beat up Morales unmercifully, laid open his scalp, pounded him with the butt and side of their revolvers and mauled him with brass knuckles. They injured him internally. Then they took him to Melrose Park. There the officers of that barg added their blows for good measure. Morales was unable to speak English. But they did not withhold their brutality till they had called an interpreter and found what he might have to say for himself.

WE will accept Morales' story, for it rings true. He did not live in the string of cars, as proved fact. He says he was knocking at one of the cars to get in to make a call, when he heard the shoot- ing. Later he found the body of his friend, Sanchez, lying close to that of Stahl. Foolishly, perhaps, he took from the body the revolver and the moon- shine. Then he went to where his dead friend had lived and notified Sanches' two brothers and uncle of the death. Then, fearing that he would be impli- cated, he, a stranger in a strange land, started for Chicago. And the moonshine was still in the bottle when he was arrested.

Now Morales lies in the Cook county jail, waiting the action of the coroner's jury at an adjourned inquest. He is held as the probable murderer of Stahl. But who killed Sanchez? Why bother with that? He was only a Mexican. They are willing to grant that Stahl killed Sanchez; Stahl is dead and cannot answer for it. But Sanchez too being dead, Morales is expected to bear Sanchez' guilt, if guilt it be to shoot probably in self-defense, and is accused of the murder of Stahl.

BUT this isn't all of the tragedy. Perhaps not even the worst part of it. There is this. Of- ficer Stahl was a popular young man. He left a widow and two little children. Rage arose in the minds of the police at the death of one of their number. The townspeople took their cue from the police. They too raged. Altho they found no guns in the two box-cars, they marched the 36 men who were in the cars from there to the police station. A mob of policemen, now numbering fifty, went with them. As the Mexicans were marched along, blows were rained upon them. Some had their scalps cut, some had teeth knocked out, some were beaten on face and body. They were thrown into jail with Morales.

The Mexican consul was assured that day that all, except Morales, would be immediately released. In- stead, they were run through police court that night, with no lawyer, no interpreter and no witnesses. A fine of $50 and cost was slapped on each of them. With one or two exceptions they have all paid these very questionable fines. They were not paupers. They had, in fact, most of them, worked from three to five years for the Northwestern. The merchants spoke well of them.

INTO this smoothly running system of snap judg- ment and rank injustice, a woman launched her- self. She is Mary Belle Spencer, a lawyer, attorney for the Mexican consulate. She speaks Spanish and has the confidence of Spanish speaking people. It was she who secured the adjournment of the coron- er's inquest. It was she who took a physician from the John B. Murphy Hospital to Melrose Park, got him into the jail by a ruse, and then thwarted an enraged turnkey by having Morales stripped and examined. She went to the chief justice of the Criminal Court, after Morales was transferred to the county jail, and got the judge to issue orders for another immediate medical examination of the man.

Mrs. Spencer will secure warrants for the arrest of the two Oak Park officers, Larsen and Lindblad, who first beat Morales. She purposes to get war- rants for the arrest of the Melrose Park officers, who further beat Morales and assaulted some of the other 36.

This is the tragedy—not entirely that two men are killed and another badly wrguaded, not entirely that the thing happened because of a fake telephone message, but that, however it may have happened, it was the occasion of police brutality, national prejudice, a violent attack on a minority group, the bulldosing of a class who were poor and helpless, and the beclouding of the real legal question as to who killed two men by a wild prejudice against the whole Mexican colony. Without stopping to con- sider that an woman had been found or had appear- ed, one still heard people in Melrose Park make such remarks as: "Just think of it! One woman with 36 Mexicans! Isn't that awful!"

HOW much farther may not the tragedy run? Years hence, when perhaps many of these Mex- icans have returned to their native land, and some- one asks them in limpid Spanish: "Que clase de pais es Los Estados Unidos?" the most vivid recol- lection to come to their minds will be a scene on one dark night in December when they were driven from their humble homes and were marched be- tween lines of policemen, while a rain of blows and curses fell upon them, all because they had unfortu- nately been asleep in the homes America had given them: a string of box-cars near where a popular young policeman, who himself packed two guns, was killed.

I am for Revolution

I am for revolution; revolution so profound
That nowhere will the profiteer or plunderbund be found.
But State and Church and Press and School will all be owned and manned
By Labor, Union Labor, the lord of every land.

I am for revolution; revolution now and here,
All the land for all the people; what is there to fear?
The tools for those who use them, the homes for them that build;
And all the banks for all the folks by whom their vaults are filled.

I am for revolution; though it come with fearsome feet;
If the people will not save themselves until they cannot eat,
Until their first-born perish, as when Pharaoh would not hear,
Then welcome woe itself if so the morning draweth near.

I am for revolution, say what will the canting folks
Whose peace itself is violance, their law a lying hoax;
We will no harm to anyone, we will the good of all,
But we want the revolution, whosoever stand or fall.

their business; we should keep our hands off."

Attacks Wall Street.

King minced no words in frankly declaring that Wall Street imperialism prompted the attack on the Nicaraguans. "Our nationals go into these countries and make investments, and then they foment disturbances and call upon us for 'protection'," he said. "Whether we have intervened or not, the result has been to stir up all Latin America against us. Criticisms of our policy are being made freely and the friendship which we have striven to build is destroyed in a moment.

Entire Policy is "Blunder."

"The entire policy of the Harding-Coolidge administration has been a series of colossal blunders. While the constitution vests the conduct of foreign affairs with the executive department, thank God," he said, "the legislative branch is the real government after all.

"As soon as congress meets again this will be made subject for discussion on the floor of the senate.

Recalls Haiti.

King attacked the policies of the state department toward Mexico, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Haiti. "We invaded Haiti for the same reasons we invade Nicaragua now," he said, "and we killed 3,500 of those people. I have a resolution now pending relative to our occupation of Haiti which I shall press.

"The latest bungling in Nicaragua has been the crowning one of them all," he declared. "Wherever we look blunders and still more blunders."

Diaz Forces Retreating.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Dec. 30.—Defeat after defeat is being administered the Diaz forces by the liberal government's armies in a series of battles fought in the eastern half of the country.

The only thing that can save the now tottering Diaz regime from immediate collapse is the active participation of the United States troops here in fighting against the liberals. It is seen. So far, the U. S. troops have been giving only indirect aid to the Diaz forces, while assuming the pose of neutrality.

Soldiers Made Prisoners.

In a three-day battle at Las Perlas the reactionary soldiers were completely vanquished. Many of the Diaz soldiers were taken prisoners and others have deserted to join the liberal ranks.

The Diaz troops are being pushed rapidly further into the interior. At the present rate, it will be only a matter of a few days, it is predicted, before Sacasa will be able to march in to Managua, Diaz' capital.

Get Strategic Locations.

The liberals have now gained access to the Escondido river, which places them in a strategic position. Prusia and Do Pan, two towns near the river, are under liberal control.

Ammunition shortage and dissatisfaction among the conservative troops because they have not been receiving their promised pay are making the reactionary armies fairly easy targets for the Sacasa forces. They are threatening all along the battle line.

Nicaraguan Invasion Is Part of Attempt to Build World Empire for U. S., Secretary of Anti-Imperialist League Warns Workers

The All-American Anti-Imperialist League calls upon all of its branches to protest against the intervention in Nicaragua by the United States imperialists and against all that the present intervention signifies, Manuel Gomez, secretary of the United States section with headquarters in Chicago announces.

The league will conduct a vigorous campaign against the Nicaraguan intervention, he declared, principally among the trade unions and other workers' organizations. The league demands immediate withdrawal of American troops from Nicaragua. "Hands off" Latin-America, immediate investigation of Admiral Latimar's action, cessation of the U. S. state department's attitude toward Mexico, Gomez points out that the present invasion of Nicaragua is not an "accidental" incident, but is a part of a long standing and well-developed imperialistic program of the United states to dominate entire Latin-America, and to place all of the nations near the Panama canal, especially, in an indirect colonial status.

U. S. Seeks World Empire.

"The United States is using the Panama canal as an excuse to build a world empire," said Gomez. "It is sensitive about the Panama canal as Great Britain is about the Suez canal and is using it for the same purposes." This policy was evidenced in the acquisition of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the complete domination of Panama, he points out, and the establishing of a virtual protectorate over all of the nearby states.

Wants Servile Government.

The United States wants control of Nicaragua because of its proximity to the canal, and because of the proposal to build another canal thru Nicaragua, Gomez declared. As far back as 1916, this policy was adopted, and then the U. S. acquired the rights to build the Nicaragua canal, whenever it desires to do so, by paying the Nicaraguan government $3,000,000. The United States is desirous of maintaining in Nicaragua a government that will be a servile tool of the American imperialists, and it is for that reason that it is attempting to crush the liberal movement and support the Diaz regime. A government in Nicaragua which could not be controlled is seen as a block to the extension of American imperialism thruout this continent and from here to the rest of the world.

Threatens Latin-American.

The action against Nicaragua is not only a threat against the sovereignty of the people of that country, but is a threat against the whole of Latin-America, Gomez points out. It is a flagrant violation of the agreements made by the United States with the other countries at the Bolivarian congress held at Panama in the summer of 1926. At this conference to which the United States was invited the Latin-American countries agreed unanimously to a resolution that they would not make war on each other, and that if war is made on any one of the nations, the others would join against the aggressor. The United States agreed to this. The Nicaraguan intervention is clearly a violation of this, Gomez declared, and proves that it was a mistake to allow the United States to be a member of the congress.

Part of Mexico Attack.

This action of the United States cannot be considered apart from the late department's policy toward Mexico, Gomez said. It is clearly a move toward war with Mexico, altho definite signs of war are not yet evident.

Latin-American Bloc Forming.

The situation is now assuming the character of a Latin-American bloc against the United States, with Mexico taking the lead in Latin-America against encroachment of the North American nation, he said. The present incident will serve to precipitate the anti-imperialistic formation of this bloc, Gomez warned.

Mexico Admittedly Active.

Gomez declared that it could not be denied, and he did not wish to deny, that Mexico has been active in Nicaragua and in other Latin-American countries as charged. Mexico, he said, was forced into this position by the hostile actions of the United States.

The United States is aware of the growing sentiment against it in Latin America, he declared, and realizes that if there can be formed a real Latin-American defense, the American imperialists will have a hard time to carry out its program of acquisition. The Nicaraguan action is an attempt to get control before the bloc is consummated, Gomez says.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED.

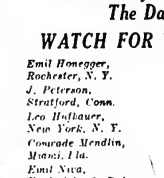
Volunteer committees are wanted to distribute Y. W. L. propaganda material at various working-class affairs this Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Call at the district office Friday for supplies.



Oh, you must wear them! It doesn't matter what kind of pants you wear to the Y. W. C. L. Masquerade on New Year's Eve—just so long as you wear them at Italian Hall at 631 N. Clark street.

CALLES SENDS ULTIMATUM TO OIL COMPANIES

Refuses Request for Oil Law Delay

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 30.—Mexico's petroleum and land laws will go into affect Jan. 1. President Calles has refused a request of American oil companies to give them an "extension of time" to comply with the provisions of the law. Calles brendad the request of the Association of Oil Producers in Mexico composed of big American companies for a delay of six months in enforcing the law as rebaillon.

In reply to their request, Calles said: "Your message confirms me in my opinion that it is not the oil industry's own interest, but causes for unrest which are the underlying motives of the attitude of rebellion assumed by some companies in complying with the law.

Law is Liberal.

"The precepts of the law in question have been regulated and have been put into executien within the most ample and liberal spirit permitted by our institutions, clearly stating in definite form the rights and obligations in the best interests of the industry.

"I consider the law good and just as I consider that its rulings under the most rigorous legal interpretation do not injure or destroy any rights legally acquired either confirmatory to the interests of the industry as well as safeguarding its development for the benefit of those who are connected with it."

Must Comply Friday.

Unless the companies make applications for concession rights to the land they now occupy on Friday, according to the law, ownership of the land reverts to the Mexican state, which can then dispose of it as it sees fit according to the best interests of the country. Adequate time has been had by the oil companies to comply.

Sheffield Intervenes—Fails.

The American companies, backed by the U. S. Department of State have refused so far to comply, with the exception of several companies because they maintain the oil and land laws are "confiscatory."

Ambassador Sheffield of the United States went into conference with Foreign Minister Senor Thursday seeking to get the government to delay enforcing of the law, but the Mexican officials remained firm.

Oil Companies in Session.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—The Association of Producers of Petroleum in Mexico, with headquarters here, have been meeting continuously in closed sessions since the receipt of President Calles' reply to its request for delay in enforcing the Mexican oil laws.

Meetings have been held regularly for the past two weeks on the situation. The association, it is understood, is attempting to decide how much pressure it wants the United States government to place on Mexico.

A politician who can forget his past and is always right will sip honey while others drink vinegar. This type of mortal knows that most workers have short memories and leaden tongues. The notorious Scheidemann ex-German socialist, is of this type. Scheidemann served on the Council of Seven that gave the kaiser political counsel during the war. He helped to crush the revolution that followed the kaiser's defeat and he helped save the capitalist system from a workers' revolution. One would imagine that Scheidemann would not have the impudence to come out of a hole, in view of his treachery.

All the evidence to date have been on the side of the latter. It is always the case. The poor consumer gets it in the neck.

STUDENTS WON'T FIGHT IN WAR OF U.S., THEY SWEAR

Milwaukee Conference Attacks Capitalism

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 30.—Students attending the national conference here as representatives from universities and colleges of all parts of the United States subscribed to a resolution in which they declare that they will refuse to fight in any war that the United States may take part in. Theological students backed the resolution.

Won't Support War.

"We believe that a higher patriotism to the United States and to humanity demands not only the refusal to shoulder a rifle in war but we do as a conference refuse to sanction or lend our support to any future war," the students declared.

At the same time the students voted to condemn compulsory military training in the colleges, which exists now in many of the educational institutions.

Flay Capitalism and Church.

Capitalism, narrow nationalism, inequality of race and color, as they exist in the United States and in modern society as a whole were attacked by the conference. The students also attacked the pandering of the church to capitalism and condemned the role in which it would not condone the capitalistic system.

The sex problem was injected into the conference by Dr. Edith H. Swift, field worker for the American Association of Social Hygeine, who blamed the parents for withholding essential facts on sex from their children as causing immorality.

"We apologize for sex, and there is no apology necessary," said Dr. Swift. "We have clothed it in mystery and speak of it in whispers. Association of Social Hygeine, who blamed youth to the understanding of sex when the mothers and fathers are ashamed to tell them the facts of life?" asked the woman doctor. "As a result we tempt adventurous youth. The unknown always calls for exploration."

War on Nicaragua Tears Mask from the Beast of Wall Street Imperialism

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THIIS is the season for celebrating the 150th anniversary of the successful battles of Trenton and Princeton, "the turning point in the American revolutionary war for independence," and of re-counting again the story of crossing the Delaware river in the cold of a mid-winter's night to wage triumphant battle against the foreign enemy.

The occasion even called President Coolidge from the White House, at Washington, to make a speech at Trenton, New Jersey, at the scene of the actual hostilities. And Coolidge talked of "Peace!"

But if the Jeloniate were justified in their war against the growing British Empire, and they were, then every thinking man and woman in the United States must today throw all possible support not only to the usurping rebel government of Nicaragua and to the resistance of the Mexican Republic against foreign aggressors, but must give every possible aid to all Latin-American nations resisting Wall Street imperialism. The American colonists drove the troops of King George into the sea. Nicaraguan armies must be encouraged to the same to the Hessian forces of Kalser Morgan. The revolutionary war of 1776, when studied correctly, helps point the way in today's struggles.

The United States is the richest nation on earth today, thru the bitter exploitation of labor at home and the plundering of weaker peoples abroad. Therefore, its munitieres. President Coolidge can afford to talk about setting "the Christian example of abstention from competitive arming while other powers arm." That is the usual hypocrisy.

Coolidge had nothing to say about Nicaragua altho he came to Trenton fresh from conferences on this important matter at Washington with Secretary of State Kellogg and Senator Borah, head of the senate foreign relations committee. With Wall Street's bloodhound warships, bowser, patrolling Nicaraguan waters, and with large forces of heavily armed marines everywhere ashore, Coolidge delivered himself of this characteristic mouthing:

"I believe we are strong enough to brave ridicule, resist another domination of the world by the militarist spirit, thru our own independent action."

Thus Coolidge seeks to throw a cloak of peace camouflage over imperialism's ambitions. It was in his last message to congress that Coolidge boasted of a great navy, mighty army and increasingly effective air fleet. Coolidge's thin veil was dropped at Trenton in brief about concealing as the claim that the American forces are "to protect and protect American lives and property."

At Trenton Coolidge, in the true New England spirit that hides every thing behind the cold cliches of "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men."

At the moment that Coolidge was saying this, however, the editorial writer of the Minneapolis Tribune was putting down the real version of dollar diplomacy's position toward Nicaragua and all other intended victims of Wall Street greed. The Tribune, that supports the republican party against the Farmer-Labor Party in Minnesota, pleads:

"Let us admit frankly that America's action in landing bluejackets in Nicaragua is strictly in line with America's Caribbean policy. Our policy in the Caribbean has been, on the whole, pretty consistent. We insist that the Caribbean countries be run in such a fashion as to give the maximum protection to American loans and investments. If we have any doubts about some new government that gets in, we promptly refuse to recognize it. Our Caribbean policy has been imperialistic, of course. No other adjective could possibly fit it.

"The ability of the American Caribbean policy is that an effort has always been made to foist it on the American people as non-imperialistic. All our state departments have acted imperialistically while denying that they acted imperialistically. In this respect the Nicaraguan landing impeccably to tradition. But the present state department is under fire. Why? Well, the answer is simple enough. Chiefly because its 'moral explanations' are a bit more obviously funny even than usual. In fact they are so funny that they have made Senator Borah angry."

The Tribune, that supported Secretary of State Kellogg in his unsuccessful effort to remain a member of the United States senate, urges a brand of dollar diplomacy without hypocrisy, or at least a "better hypocrisy." It attacks the theory of Bolshevist interference in Mexico and Nicaragua as "no stroke of genius." It declares that it only "brought from the Soviet government the rejoinder that Russia had had no more to do with the revolution in Nicaragua than it had had to do with the election of Will Rogers as mayor of Beverly Hills." So the Tribune concludes that, "It would seem that the time is about ripe for America to divorce hypocrisy from its Caribbean policy."

But the peculiar development of the situation is that the Tribune's advice comes too late. The hypocrisy of the White House, of the state department, of dollar diplomacy itself, has been so shot to pieces that it is no longer effective. It has become transparent, revealing the real intentions of American imperialism.

It was no accident that the whole Latin-American press battery turned loose an unceasing ink cannonade against the American invasion of Nicaragua. Every country south of the Rio Grande considered the practical war decsired against this small Central American country as actual hostilities launched against itself. In a day the press of Chile, the Argentine, Brazil, Mexico and other countries opened fire on the Wall Street-Washington government, giving vent to long pent up feelings, the unanimity of the outburst giving it courage. There has been no more bitter attack on dollar diplomacy since President Monroe, more than a century ago, inaugurated the doctrine that the two Americas constitute exclusive fields of exploitation for United States capitalism.

Similarly European nations, vassals of the dollar, burst out with another broadside against "Uncle Shylock."

President Woodrow Wilson went to Paris with his "14 Points" and fooled broad sections of workers in many lands as to the real nature of Morgan's empire. Herbert Hoover, with shiploads of food at his call, also invaded Europe as "an angel of mercy." But Wilson was uncovered as an errand agent of the international bankers and Hoover unmasked as a scheming devil trying to appease the hunger and thus counteract the movement of masses of workers ready to overthrow oppressive institutions and establish their own rule.

The bread sweep of denunciation that has greeted conclusively the Kellogg-Coolidge-Kellogg attack on Nicaragua proves conclusively that the days of Wilson-Hoover camouflage are over.

Trenton and Princeton marked a historic point on the map in the revolutionary war of the American colonists against the British tyranny. These victories heartened the revolutionary armies like years and made final victory against Great Britain possible.

The three-day battle, resulting in the victory of the anti-Wall Street forces at Las Perlas, on the east coast of Nicaragua, this week, should encourage all oppressed, victims of the dollar, at home and abroad, to struggle with more courage than ever for their own liberation.

The boast of Wall Street imperialism has been cornered. Now the struggle comes to grips.

U. S. State Department Admits Censorship by the Navy in Nicaragua

in regard to censorship, Kellogg said he "had no knowledge of it previously." When confronted with unimpeachable evidence of censorship by the Postal Telegraph company, Kellogg was forced to make the following "explanatory" statement:

"In answer to inquiries of correspondents, the secretary of state said he was today informed by the navy department of the receipt from Admiral Latimer of telegrams concerning the reported censorship. Until the receipt of this information just a few moments ago the state department had no knowledge whatever of any censorship having been established.

"The admiral reported that a censorship had been established at Puerto Cabezas and Rio Grande bar on necessary radio stations to maintain the neutrality of the zone by preventing the sending out of military instructions or information by either side. The admiral said further that all censorship on radio stations in the neutral zone has been removed by his direction."

8,000 Homeless, 2,500 Without Jobs

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 30. — While the toll taken by the high waters continued to mount to a high figure, clearing skies and cooler weather brought some promise of relief to the flood-stricken areas in southern states.

The situation was still critical in Nashville, Tenn., however, where an additional rise in the Cumberland river of nearly a foot during the night increased the number of homeless by at least 700 persons.

4,000 Homeless.

With 1,500 homes flooded, more than 4,000 are homeless in Nashville and nearly 2,500 are without employment because of the raging waters.

Reports received here today from southeast Virginia increased the death toll, more or less attributable to the high waters, to twenty.

J LEMING, Ky., Dec. 30. — Kash Carroll was killed and Harlin, his brother, probably fatally wounded when Deputy Sheriff Robert Deaton opened fire during an altercation at the railway station.

Deaton said he ordered the brothers to move on because they were intoxicated and when both drew guns and fired he defended himself.

PRIZE WINNERS THIS WEEK

First prize for worker correspondence is awarded this week to the worker correspondent at Paterson, N. J., who tells of conditions in the United Piece Dye Works there. He is awarded a copy of "Elements of Political Education" by A. Bordniker and A. Svetlov.

Second prize is awarded to Fred Harris, member of the New York class in worker correspondence, who has contributed several stories to this page during the week. He will receive a copy of the Russell-Hearing Debate on Soviet Russia.

"100%," the worker's novel by Upton Sinclair, third prize, is awarded to Francis Ribarde of Lodi, N. J., who contributed the story that appeared earlier in the week on the mill strike now in progress there.

THE PRIZES FOR NEXT WEEK

More worker correspondents and more stories from worker correspondents are wanted! Workers thruout the country are anxious to know of conditions as other workers see them, and they look to this page to find out. Send in that story today, correspondents! Three attractive prizes are offered this week, as an added incentive. They are:

1—KING COAL, by Upton Sinclair. A splendid working class novel of the coal miners. Cloth-bound.

2—RUSSIA TODAY. The famous report of the British Trade Union delegation.

3—BARS AND SHADOWS, by Ralph Chaplin. Poems written in Leavenworth penitentiary, where the author was committed during the war as a member of the I. W. W.

Send in that story, workers!

WORKERS AT PATERSON DYE WORKS DON'T FIND "HOLIDAY CHEER" WITH SLAVE CONDITIONS THAT PREVAIL

PATERSON, N. J., Dec. 30.—For the holiday season of Xmas and New Year when the bosses of Paterson are talking about "our wonderful prosperity," and Xmas and New Year's "joys and cheers" I think it appropriate to write about the United Piece Dye Workers here in Paterson to show how the workers enjoy the holidays. Of course the workers here know something about the strike against this company in Lodi but the company doesn't allow its slaves to think any much about it and if you open your mouth—out you go.

Unemployed Haunt The Mills.

There is always a large amount of unemployed in front of the gates every morning for the day shift and every evening for the night shift begging for a chance to get work.

Hours and Wages.

The company is very generous about hours—all the hours you want to work; the pleasure is yours. at 7:20 a. m. is the company's allotted time to start in the morning but as 90 per cent of the workers are married and have children, they start at 6 and 6:30 a. m. You are supposed to quit at 5 p. m. but most of them quit at 7 and 8 p. m. The reason for this is that per hour make it hard to pay rent, groceries the butcher, etc. It takes 12 to 14 hours to make both ends meet.

The Stench of Ammonia.

There are about 3,000 workers in this plant and out of this about half work on the piece dyeing machines known as the "Overhead" machines. To clean the silk before it is dyed, ammonia is used every morning. About 100 machines throw this odor which nearly overcomes us. The place is large but not high and the windows overhead are all closed and there being no fans (which cost money to install). The result is horrible coughing, choking, wheezing sounds are heard all over the place, so we take refuge in the toilet to escape the odors arising from the ammonia.

Organization Badly Needed.

All talk of organization is forbidden and the workers are in deadly fear of their jobs but in spite of all this, the workers are favorable and ripe for organizing. 90 per cent of the workers are Italians and are influenced largely by the anti-fascist paper Il Nuovo Mondo, and Il Martello. Many read the Il Lavoratore. Anti-fascist sentiment is strong and opinion against Mussolini's government is very bitter. This all can be turned in to healthy organizational channels.

The Associated Silk Workers.

The Associated Silk workers is the existing union for the silk workers in Paterson. It is an independent union having no connections with the American Federation of Labor and has quite a large membership but the union only accepts weavers, warpers, winders, loom fixers, etc., mostly of the skilled section of the mills, leaving the dye house workers out in the cold entirely. The Associated is increasing its activity somewhat. It held a mass meeting in a drive for new members and will hold another one some time in January for the same purpose.

It is necessary to point out to the Associated the need including dye house workers for an union owing to the fact that dye workers hold the key to the silk industry. There is as yet no shop bulletin and no shop outlet, altho the situation is being remedied as fast as we know how.

Young Workers League Opportunities

In the "finishing" rooms where some skill is demanded, mostly young workers of both sexes ranging in age from 16 up to 23 years (as in our mill) are employed. The Young Workers League has unlimited opportunities in this field which will be taken advantage of in the very near future.

STRIKEBREAKER STABS STRIKER IN YELLOW CAB

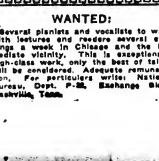
New Orleans Labor Is Aroused Over Attack

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Dec. 30.—Organized labor here is aroused over the stabbing of Thomas J. Duffy, a Yellow cab driver, out on strike, by one of the scab drivers. Duffy is in a critical condition in a hospital after the attack. Guy Allison, the scab driver, admitted that he committed the attack on Duffy.

Several days previous one of the strikers was kidnapped by a gang of scab drivers and taken outside of the city in order to intimidate the strikers.

A movement is on foot to have the Central Labor Council call a general protest meeting against such attacks on unionists to acquaint the unionists of all crafts with the situation.



Doll up if you want to. They'll think you're in disguise at the masquerade ball on New Year's night given by the T. U. E. L. at the Italian Hall.

DETROIT WOMEN HELP FIGHT OF BAKERY DRIVERS

Show Power to Win For Union Men

By a Worker Correspondent.

DETROIT, Dec. 30.—How the women can aid the men workers to win industrial battles is shown by the recent controversy of the Bakery Drivers' Union here with the bosses and one large grocer.

The bakery drivers here work on a commission basis, according to how much bread they deliver. One of the large grocers, where previously three drivers were used, decided that he would use only one driver and therefore let the commissions of two workers. When the union protested and refused to allow one of its members to deliver the bread to the grocery, the bakery boss delivered the bread himself, thus acting as a scab on union drivers. The grocer said that he "would not let any union tell him how to run his business."

Then two of the many women's organizations in Detroit, the Northern Progressive Ladies' Society and the Women's Educational Circle—came to the aid of the drivers. The women formed picket lines near the grocery and distributed handbills announcing his action.

It was not long before the grocer begged that the lines be removed and consented to again allow three drivers deliver bread to him, as before.

Textile Mill Will Remain and Impose Onerous Conditions

By SIDNEY BLOOMFIELD.
(Worker Correspondent).

WARE, Mass.—After the sensational suicide among the employees because the suicide of a fellow employee in its underwear department, and as a result of many conferences with large banking firms of Boston, the Otis Co., at its recent stockholders' meeting, decided to continue operating its textile mills in Ware, for a probationary period.

Immediately after the public announcement of its intention of moving the industry to the south, large protest meetings of the Otis company's workers were held in Ware, and resolutions of various kinds were adopted and sent to the stockholders' meetings, public officials, etc. All this, including the suicide of Elie Phaneuf, 59 years old, who had been employed in the underwear department for the mills since boyhood, was a tragic expression of the unorganized textile slaves, clamoring for a means of earning a livelihood.

The conditions under which the stockholders agreed to continue operation for the period of probation involves a plan of what in common parlance among the textile barons is called "reorganization." This plan embodies a "substantial" cut in wages, a speed-up method of production, including more machines, spindles, etc., per worker.

Besides reorganizing the mills, the Otis company demands a reduction of taxes, and will, according to notices already sent to its employees, raise the rents of all company-owned tenements or shacks, as they are called here, to the tune of 25 per cent. Since most of its employes live in company-owned shacks, they will thus be hit from two sides, on the one hand a reduction of wages and more production by speed-up methods, and on the other hand by a raise in rents of 25 per cent.

The present consternation in Ware is used by the employers to further the agitation for legislation to lengthen the hours of work in Massachusetts.

"The pen is mightier than the sword," provided you know how to use it. Come down and learn now in the worker correspondent's classes.

DEVER STAGES BIG ELECTION DEMONSTRATION

Mayor Bashful as Healers Urge Him to Say Yes

William (Rabbitt) Dever, who rose or sank from tanner to mayor will be a candidate to succeed himself as chief executive of Chicago unless the usual political signs prove deceptive.

Dever does not want to deposit four more years of his life in the public treasury if he can help it. He wants to spend it in carefree enjoyment. This is what the mayor says. But he shudders at the idea that unless he shoulders his civic responsibility some such unworthy person as William Hale Thompson may sit in the mayor's chair. There would be a resumption of bootlegging, murder, highway robbery and wholesale graft which has been entirely eliminated by the Dever administration.

Hinsmer actually said words to this effect, blissfully ignoring the history of the past four years, the bloodiest since the Fort Dearborn massacre.

Big "Biz" For Dever.

Big business wants Dever to throw his hat into the ring a second time. George Brennan, one of Samuel Insull's pets, is stage managing the Dever candidacy. And George is a good circus manager. All day last Wednesday ward heelers staged "spontaneous" demonstrations of public spirited citizens who want four more years of Dever, in the mayor's office. The Chicago Tribune sent its best mala sobaister, James O'Donnell Bennett to describe the mayoral stampede at Babbitt Dever tried to outdo Calvin Coolidge in saying nothing. And difficult tho it may seem, the mayor succeeded.

"The history of Chicago is just beginning, friends" said the mayor "just beginning in the sense that Chicago is just beginning to feel its power and influence. And just consciousness—new in the sense that none of us ever felt it, I think, so strongly before—means more work and larger thinking for all of us. For myself I feel a deep affection for Chicago than ever I felt before. Mine is the affection of any conscientious man who has been closely connected with the affairs of a hamlet will feel."

We do not know whether Dever loves all of Chicago, including the stockyards or only that part of it where his real estate holdings are located. Dever is a wealthy man.

Said Babbitt Dever to a delegation of colored political hacks: "It pleases me to have you express that wish because four years ago I promised you I would send something to your wards besides a policeman and a patrol wagon." This despite the fact that hundreds of Negro homes were broken into last week and several hundred negroes arrested because of a shooting affair in the so-called "Black Belt."

A Labor Ticket.

Big business and a section of the trade union officialdom favor the mayor's re-election. Two good reasons why the working class should be opposed to his candidacy. But that is not sufficient. His opponents are no better, from the labor standpoint. They will also serve the master class if they succeed. The thing for the workers to do is organize, to contest the local elections under the banner of labor. As the Workers (Communist) Party has advocated for several years, the workers should set up a United Labor Ticket, including all labor political, trade union cooperative and fraternal organizations and meet the capitalist propaganda of the business candidates with the program and policy that conforms to the interests of the working class.

Bandits Get Long Terms.

Bradford 12 years; Teddy Theodore 11 years and one day; Paul Sourlis, 11 years six months; Raymond (Kid) Wills, eight years, and Edna Nagle, alias Edna Evans, one year.

The Manager's Corner

The Official Opposition

He was a man grown gray in the newspaper business, a veteran in the field of journalism. Altho employed by a well-known capitalist sheet, he showed a lively interest in The DAILY WORKER. "Why, you know," he said to me, "I read The DAILY WORKER as often as I can get hold of it. And I have frequently recommended it to my associates for their perusal."

Somewhat surprised, I asked him what he found in the paper that was worth while. He puffed on a cheroot for a moment and replied, "First I read the paper for its flavor. It has a definite, virile tang, which is different from any other paper I know. I don't get the same kick out of the other papers." And then he thought for a while.

"But there is something more than that," he continued slowly, "and I stress this very strongly among my associates. No man or woman who claims to be well-informed, can afford to miss reading The DAILY WORKER, whether he agrees with its views or not, for this sparking sheet has now become the official opposition to the capitalist press. It does not matter what the subject is, if it is one of importance to the vast majority, you will find expressed in The DAILY WORKER the counter-views to those in the ordinary papers."

And then it struck me that he was right. We have in the United States a mass of newspapers running all the way from the reactionary Chicago Tribune to the yellow socialist sheets. Nowhere, except in The DAILY WORKER, can be found such a consistent, class conscious point of view, the cry of the militant worker against his enemies, the capitalist and all their hirelings, the proletarian's defiance of his exploiters. The DAILY WORKER has wrested from its competitors the right to be known as the official opposition.

The New Drive on Militant Trade Unionism

Article IX.
By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

FOR some time, beginning exactly at the moment when the American Federation of Labor officialdom discovered that the only real opposition to American entry into the war came from the left wing of the socialist party which made up the great majority of the Communist Party later, there has been an approach on the part of the socialist bureaucracy and the ruling group of the A. F. of L.

IT was marked first by the cessation of opposition by socialist party members, who were at the same time officials of needle trades unions, to the A. F. of L. machine. Opposition candidates of the socialist type, and backed by the needle trades and Jewish trade union bloc, were no longer nominated in A. F. of L. conventions.

Then came the expulsion policy against the Communists, in which socialist or former socialist union officials joined heartily and, as in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, took the initiative. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of officials, to which anything savoring of A. F. of L.ism had been anathema hitherto, also instituted the expulsion policy.

WHEN the demand for recognition of Soviet Russia became an issue in the labor movement, A. F. of L. officialdom found their most valuable allies in two places—among socialist trade union leaders and among the most hard holied section of the capitalist class. It was socialist union officials who mouthed the most outrageous slanders of Soviet Russia, its workers' and peasants' government and the Communists.

This united front of trade union and socialist reaction knit very closely the bond between the two.

THE socialists, in their attack on the Communists, at first got only sympathetic support from the A. F. of L. officials. Without something more than this their attack would be a miserable failure, as in the struggle in the New York section of the union early last year. The A. F. of L. gave little if any organizational support to President Sigman and his henchmen on the joint board.

The struggle ended with the defeat of the socialist party leadership (in which can be included all the elements supported by the Daily Forward, whether actually members of the socialist party or not).

Then came the struggle in the furriers' union, which, likewise, ended in defeat of the Forward elements.

IN both of these struggles the basic issue was worker-employer co-operation versus a policy of struggle, the abolition of capitalism in the union which had throttled all rank and file expression and amalgamation of all unions in the industry.

There had been a number of struggles in the Amalgamated, but in this about the issues were less clear because of the split between President Hillman and the Forward gang, and the left wing never attained the strength it has in the other needle trades unions.

BUT the failure of the right wing to crush the rank and file opposition in the furriers and the I. L. G. W., together with the knowledge that amalgamation was becoming a popular mass issue which would soon force something more than platonic expressions of endorsement, with the further certainty that the A. C. W. of officialdom would be unable to dominate any amalgamated block because of the preponderance of left wing leadership, undoubtedly prompted the Hillman machine to enter into a truce with the Forward and an alliance with A. F. of L. officialdom and officialdom in other needle trades and Jewish unions against the left wing.

Hillman now proposes amalgamation with the I. L. G. W.—but without the left wing.

THE failure to arouse any real enthusiasm in the membership for the new two-year New York agreement (it was voted for by only something like 10 per cent of the membership, according to statements of members present at the meetings) made the possibility of a rapid development of the left wing in the A. C. W. possible and a united offensive against the left wing in the labor movement desirable—especially in the needle trades.

The offensive has been launched. Socialist party and A. F. of L. officialdom are fighting side by side, as has been shown previously.

THE Committee for Preservation of Trade Unions," whose first act was to attempt to split the forces of labor supporting Sacco and Vanzetti, is an organization of delegates mostly from unions in which the officialdom is controlled by the Daily Forward.

Abraham I. Shiplacoff, chairman of the committee, is part of the Forward machine in the International Pocketbook Workers' Union. The Hebrew Trades Council is controlled by the Forward and it is the center of the new-formed body. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers officialdom is represented by Beckerman, manager of the New York Joint Board.

THE New Leader, official organ of the socialist party, is trying with might and main to become the official organ in English of the reactionary drive. In its issue for December 25 it had no less than eight news stories and articles directed against the left wing and the Communists. It accompanies this truckling to the right wing of trade union officialdom with a front page appeal for funds.

The national executive committee of the socialist party, meeting in New York last week, officially assured the reactionary officialdom of its support in its resolution on the subject published in the New Leader, after making it plain that the N. E. C. will not oppose the present officialdom or new secretary arrangements to do so in the name of the party, goes on to state:

"We rejoice that the members of the needle trade unions have united in a campaign to save the unions from the influence that has brought them to the brink of ruin. To the extent that socialist party members are free of service in this work we pledge their willing co-operation. . . .

THAT the real policy of the socialist party is in conflict with its professed neutrality can be seen by a comparison of the above with the following statement which is made in the first part of the N. E. C. resolution:

"The socialist party has always been opposed to any capturing of the trade unions by political parties and TO ANY ATTEMPTS TO DIRECT AND CONTROL THE AFFAIRS OF TRADE UNIONS BY OUTSIDE PARTIES. (Emphasis mine.)

One statement negates the other. The position of the socialist party officialdom amounts to this:

No struggle against the control of unions by any party except the Communist Party.

THAT this is its actual policy is to be discerned by the fact that its official organ chronicles approvingly denunciations of the Communists and left wing made to meetings under right wing control by such well-known reactionary labor-fakirs-and-traitors as Matthew Woll, Hugh Frayne, New York organiser for the A. F. of L., and Joseph D. Ryan, president of Mayor Walker's labor club, the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York City.

The program of the "Committee for Preservation of the Trade Unions," dominated by the Jewish Daily Forward and supported by the New Leader, is too long to quote in full, but one or two extracts will give a clear idea of the objective of this body POINT 8 reads:

To make a survey of the "innocents' club" and camouflaged organizations formed by the Communists and the Communist Party thru which they have received funds ostensibly for the protection of the foreign-born, the Negroes, the Filipinos, for release of political prisoners, for the protection of civil rights, etc., all of which are intended to further the destructive work of American Communism.

As in the case of Sacco and Vanzetti, the various movements mentioned cannot be stripped of Communist workers and sympathizers without either crippling or killing them. It is apparent that the socialist party leaders are quite willing to wreck these movements, all of them of vital importance to the labor movement as a whole, to get a crack at the Communists.

ALL of the movements mentioned are non-partisan movements in which workers and liberal middle-class elements take part. The Communists may be and generally are the most active section in that they control their mechanism or own work in them for any other purpose than stimulating them activity, immediate gains for the whole working class and thus speeding up a revolutionary party from which generally inaccessible of the masses, is an idea that could originate only in a diseased brain.

IT is true, however, just because of the active part taken by Communist workers, that most of these movements will die if the Communists are driven out or will become moribund and powerless, empty of working-class vigor that the capitalists will have nothing to fear from them.

Norman Thomas, who wants to fill the shoes of Eugene Debs, seems to have some misgivings as to the wisdom of the red-baiting crusade launched by the socialist bureaucracy that has shoved them quietly into the background, to be fumigated since his contact with Communists in the Passaic strike—against the wishes of the high priests of socialism.

THOMAS likewise is not enthusiastic about the reactionary allies with which his leaders have made a pact for war on the will to struggle in the trade unions. In the December 25 issue of the New Leader Thomas, after doing obeisance at the shrines of Sigman and Hillquit and repeating the invocation against the Communist devil, utters the following warning:

Nevertheless, as labor unions generally nor socialist labor unionists particularly can afford to fight Communism by witch-hunting, by MAKING LOVE TO REACTION, or by a merely negative policy. In the long run THE BEST WAY TO FIGHT COMMUNISM WILL BE BY SETTING UP STANDARDS OF HONOR, EFFICIENCY AND IDEALISM WHICH WILL GIVE COMMUNISTS NO JUST GROUNDS FOR CRITICISM. Above all, it will be necessary for the unions in their sphere and the socialist party in its sphere TO DO BETTER SOME OF THE JOBS—like organizing the unorganized, and defending political prisoners and fighting against imperialism—WHICH THE COMMUNISTS HAVE AT LEAST HAD THE ENERGY TO TRY TO DO.

WE can say to Norman Thomas that we have not the slightest objection to being fought in the way he suggests, but principally because he believes that the present leadership of the trade union movement and the socialist party will soons day fight Communism this way is the reason he aids reaction by giving it at times—the present, for instance—a semi-respectable covering which prevents the imperialist lackey uniform being seen by unskilled working-class observers.

Thomas continues:

It is with joy that one turns to Passaic. There the heroic struggle is resulting in victory. The settlements in the Botany Mills and a number of smaller organizations are all that could reasonably be expected from a local strike in the textile industry.

It is a matter of public knowledge that Communists organized and led the Passaic strike, built up the relief machinery, fed the strikers, and that Communist union organizers and members still are the backbone of the struggle. But how does Thomas explain that the same Matthew Woll, who denounced the Communists to President Coolidge last November for their activity in the Passaic strike, is now lionized by the socialist party press as a savior of the labor movement?

BUT these are minor incongruities in a series of a socialist policy which is consistent as a whole and which brings them in organizations other than the trade unions into conflict with the class interests of the work ers.

In the words of Norman Thomas the socialist bureaucracy is "making love to reaction." It is a neat phrase delightfully descriptive and perfectly appropriate.

I am indebted to Norman Thomas for this apt characterization and also use it hereafter in referring to the socialist leaders, of course giving Thomas credit for it.

(To be continued.)

How Woll "Fights" the Furriers' Union

The methods by which the war on militant unionism is being conducted are in keeping with its purposes.

No better example of the complete absence of anything savoring of working class integrity can be had than the manner in which officialdom of the American Federation of Labor in general and Vice-President Woll in particular has made war upon the capable and courageous leadership of the Furriers' Union in New York.

The executive council of the A. F. of L. without any charges being preferred and in strict violation of the regular procedure of the trade union movement, appointed a committee headed by Woll to "investigate" the eighteen weeks' strike by which the Furriers established the 40-hour week.

No member or officer of the New York Furriers' Union was made a member of the committee which, in addition to Woll, consisted of labor officials whose relations with Tammany Hall are a scandal among decent union men.

The investigation of the committee was made in secret altho the officials of the union demanded public hearings. The findings of the committee have never been furnished the union.

Vice-President Woll, in the meanwhile, at public meetings and in the capitalist press, is systematically slandering the Furriers' Union, but he has not the courage to meet these officials on the platform. The findings of the handpicked committee will not be made public until after the meeting of the A. F. of L. executive council on Feb. 11. Until then Woll evidently intends to continue his attacks without informing the union of what it is accused.

Tuesday night the Furriers' Joint Board held a mass meeting of the membership and invited Woll to attend, hear the report of Ben Gold and take issue with it if he wished.

Woll did not appear.

But the next day his usual denunciation of the union appeared in the New York Times.

In the history of the labor movement, with the exception of the five-year persecution of Alex Howat by the Lewis machine, there is no parallel to this slimy, secretive and typically jesuitical attempt to destroy a union which has earned the enmity of the bosses and their agents by its ability to fight and win.

Woll typifies imperialism's labor agents.

Products of American Civilization

Alma Rennazio, the latest of Chicago's "bandit queens" to be captured, alleged to be the "brains" of a gang of five youths who had held up and robbed a number of people, is 20 years old and cannot read or write.

When asked to sign a statement made to the police she marked an X and said:

"I can't write. I never was to school a day in my life."

The "leader" being of this level of intelligence, we can form a fairly accurate estimate of the mentality of the followers.

Yet these are the kind of elements pictured by the capitalist press and the police as "master minds."

Where does the blame lie for such criminals and their crimes?

Well, who runs this country?

But it will not be the lords of industry and finance, their apologists and agents who will be hung or sent to prison. It will be the young men and women with the brains of children whose bodies dangling from the gallows or immured in the penitentiary, will be testimony to the efficiency of the American machinery of law and order.

By the way, we are willing to make a small wager that the bandit queen and her faithful followers can be aroused to fury over the progress made by the Communist Party in undermining our American institutions and the spread of red doctrines in our public schools. Those more materially fortunate ones of the same level of intelligence who are editors of capitalist papers, detectives and bankers are greatly concerned over such developments.

100 per cent Americans think alike.

Chemists for Government and Bootleg Trust in Battle to Make the Stuff So You Can't Drink It and Then Drinkable

WASHINGTON.—The government's battle against the bootleg trust today have promise of developing into "chemical warfare."

Treasury chemists were busy trying to devise formulae for denaturing alcohol which not only will make the product undrinkable, but which will protect the lives of the thirsty whose simple belief in the bootlegger is comparable to their attitude toward Santa Claus.

On the other hand the bootleg corporation chemists were just as busy studying methods by which the nauseating flavoring and wood alcohol poison can may be removed to convert the former by the magic wave of the hand which puts on labels, to any of the once well known pre-war brands.

The trust apparently had the edge.

Against the treasury's chemists, averaging probably less than $5000 annually, the new industry has a formidable array of chemical engineers with salaries many times those paid by the government and with plenty of capital to conduct their scientific researches.

The bootleg trust, with well-equipped laboratories, has so far succeeded in removing the denaturants from industrial alcohol devised by the government.

The treasury has ordered prohibition chemists to seek formulae for "foolproof" industrial alcohol—that is with the poison elements deleted. Under the present law wood alcohol is the basic denaturant, but if the public persists in drinking denatured alcohol treasury officials said "that possibly it will be necessary to recommend to congress that the poison be removed.

Non-poisonous industrial alcohol, however, admittedly would reduce the effectiveness of prohibition enforcement, unless a defaturant can be discovered rendering the product undrinkable and impossible of removal by redistillation.

China Survey Shows Power of Cantonese

is now released from that threat and numbers of nationalist troops which have been quartered in various places in western Hupeh, notably at Ichang, are now available for operations elsewhere. The spread of the nationalist civil administration thruout the province is now proceeding rapidly.

Nationalists Central.

Difficulties are found, naturally enough, in the traditional methods of old-style administration, but no positive obstacles are being met. As everywhere else where the nationalists are in control, there is a great rapport between the populace and the civil and military administrators. The newly-appointed financial expert, loaned by the nationalist government to take charge of Hupeh financial measures and to straighten out the provincial finances and to bring them under central provincial control, under the direct supervision of the nationalist finance officials, has assumed office.

Hunan Province:

Under the able direction of Tang Sheng Chi, the commander of the eighth revolutionary army, the reorganization of this province under Kuomintang principles and civil administration is proceeding with smoothness. General Tang recently issued a manifesto to the people of the province, in which he outlined clearly the aims and purposes of the Kuomintang rule, emphasizing the social program designed to bring about better economic conditions, particularly among the peasantry. The manifesto had a great effect upon the population of the province and has helped materially in bringing about complete popular cooperation with the new Kuomintang officials.

Sea Viewpoint.

In Hunan province there is every evidence of the true "nationalist sense." The people are thoroughly impregnated with the nationalist viewpoint. They have so heartily accepted the new regime as the people of Kwangtun, where the nationalists have completely succeeded in making firm the popular foundations of their administration.

Kiangsi Province:

The complete elimination of Sun Chuan-fang and his military forces from this province, thru the final capture of Kiukiang and Nanchang early this month, paved the way for the assertion of control by the nationalist civil administration. The work done thruout the southern portion of the province by the political section of the army, with its educational literature, has circulated thruout the province and the evidences of popular approval of the nationalist regime came clearly in great popular demonstrations when General Chiang Kai-shih, the nationalist commander-in-chief, entered Kiukiang. The new Kuomintang officials have taken office and already a start has been taken toward the consolidation and centralization of financial control, under the direct supervision of financial experts from the nationalist finance authorities.

Fukien Province:

The anti-nationalist troops are steadily being forced to succumb to the nationalist forces. There have been several of the Fukien commanders, nominally owing allegiance to Sun Chuan-fang, who have made terms with the nationalist leaders. Among these is General Chang Kiai, one of the most effective of the Fukien militarists, whose submission has been accepted on conditions fixed by the political council at Canton.

As an example of the vicarious effects of Kuomintang propaganda among the people, the fact is to be cited that even in Fukien sections not yet controlled by the nationalists certain reforms have been instituted as a last resort to stem the tide of pro-nationalist sentiment among the people of the province.

Kuangsi Province:

The general situation in this province is completely satisfactory. Workers, peasants, students, merchants' organizations, are rapidly growing in strength and influence under nationalist encouragement. The sentiment of the people thruout the province is wholeheartedly favorable toward the new regime.

Kwsichow Province:

In this province, also, there has been a repercussion from the action of Yang Sen, the Czechuan leader, in coming under the nationalist government's banners. They have been relieved of the fear of a possible invasion by Czechuen forces and can now give their attention to that portion of their border which faces Yunnan province, where avowedly anti-nationalist militarists still hold control. The problems of reorganization of the provincial administration under Kuomintang principles and methods are being carefully studied. Slowly the new system is being installed, to the satisfaction of the people.

Kwangtung Province:

Here, the home province of the nationalist forces for years, the reorganization under the new provincial commission is rapidly going on, the avowed aim being to make Kwangtung a real "model" province from which all other provinces under anti-nationalist control may learn. The bandit suppression campaign is proceeding rapidly. While there are sporadic recrudescences of banditry in some remote sections, these are explainable by the great difficulties in the way of easy communication. Wherever troops can be easily mobilized, however, banditry is rapidly being suppressed.

Peasant Work in Kwangtun:

Special attention is being paid by the provincial authorities to bettering conditions among the peasantry. Three major projects are being worked out toward this end: (1) A wholesale plan for effecting a 25 per cent reduction in the rentals peasants pay for their land holdings; (2) the creation of branches of the Central Bank, to be known as land banks of peasant banks, the purpose of which will be to help the peasants in financing their crops easily, and generally in easing financial pressure among the lowly land workers, heretofore the victims of village usurers; (3) the establishment of local militia units, to be organized and financed by local administrations with the assistance of the merchants and town dwellers in the smaller communities for the better protection of these communities.

New Organ of Labor Makes Militant Bow

(By Federated Press)

A new labor journal, "Labor Unity," is announced to be published in Chicago on Jan. 1. It will express progressive trada union policies and views and function as an open forum for all left wing and progressive groupings in the American labor movement.

"Labor Unity" is to appear twice a month under the auspices of the Labor Unity Publishing association, a group of militant and progressive trada unionists of various industries thruout the country, who will comprise a board of publication, with Earl R. Browder as editor.

Among the leading policies which "Labor Unity" will advocate are the the organization of unorganized workers, amalgamation of craft unions, the formation of a labor Party and trade union unity. It will uphold aggressive unionism and opposeclass collaboration, either by company unions or "union-management co-operation," and will stand for clean unionism and democratic control of the unions by the membership.

The new journal will be issued in eight pages, half newspaper size, at 576 W. Monroe street, Chicago. The subscription rate is announced at one dollar per year.

There were other guests, including Dr. Alonzo T. Cowper, D.D., Ph.D., LL.D., than whom it was not possible to imagine a human being radiating more cordiality. He was delighted that Bunny had passed his examinations successfully, and charmed to have been able to oblige his father, and again delighted that Dad was pleased with his son's progress. When they were alone he ventured some playful remark about Bunny's red measles, and was much distressed to learn that the patient had not yet recovered; he took occasion to question the young man—was it really true that the reds were making such alarming progress in Angel City? Dr. Cowper wanted to talk about these shocking doctrines in the same way, that a small boy wanted to read a naughty book.

Daddy was not called into the conference between Old Pete and his father, but from the way Bunny had told him about it. They were having the devil's own time, buying a government was not so simple a matter as they had thought. Everybody had to have a "take-off," all the way down the line; by golly, the very office boy that brought you a letter about the matter expected a ten-dollar bill. Bunny took the occasion to plea, why not get out of the thing surely they had enough money that Dad and they were in too deep, the thing had cost him personally nearly six hundred thousand dollars, and it was real money, and it had hurt. No, they would go thru with it, and when they had got the votes it would be all hunky-dory.

Two invasions had arisen. The naval reserve lands had been under the control of the navy department, and it had been necessary to get them shifted to the control of Secretary Work; then there had been a question whether this could be done by executive decree, or did it require an act of congress. The effect was to make making a lot of delay, but of course that was just a holdup, they wanted more money for this one and that. Old Pete had sent his son on to Washington to act as paymaster. The other difficulty was that some little oil company had got onto the Sunnyside tract—the one that Bunny and Dad were to get and had already selling under an option.

I betcher they would have to be evicted, and it must be done quietly, they must fix matters up with the people in some kind of way. Verna wanted Dad to go up there and look the ground over, and maybe he and Bunny might make a trip of it. Bunnyside was going to be the world's wonder, Verna declared—it would be a paradise many times over and when they had got it safely fixed Dad would take a good long rest.

VII

There was a telephone call for Bunny. He was to call "long distance" in every a hundred miles up the state. When he did so, there was a nurse in a hospital, with a message from Beetle. She wanted him to come to her. She was not in danger, and there was not use worrying the family, therefore she wished him to say nothing about the matter. Bunny of course jumped into his car and made all haste. His sister had been visiting the Normans, a long way from this hospital.

When he got there the attendants told him that Beetle had had an operation for appendicitis, and was doing well. He was taken up to her room, and there she lay, pale and strange-looking, because he had never seen her without her colors. Everything about her was spotlessly clean, a lace white nightgown, and soft white pillows in which she lay sunk in humility, and pathetic in her helplessness. He cried out, "Beetle, Beetle! How did this happen?"

She came quite suddenly. It was pretty bad, but I'm all right now. Very lucky I was so good to me." There was a nurse in the room, and Bertie waited until she had gone out and closed the door. Then she fixed her tired eyes on her brother and said: "We call it appendicitis, because that's the conventional thing, and what you'll have to tell Dad and Aunt Emma. But you might as well know the truth—I was going to have a baby."

"Oh, my God!" Bunny stared at her, aghast.

"You needn't begin acting up—you're no spring chicken, Bunny."

"Who is the man?"

"Now, don't start any melodrama. You know it might happen to anybody."

"Yes—but who was it, Bertie?"

"I want you to get this straight at the beginning. It wasn't his fault. I did it on purpose."

Bunny didn't know what to make of that. "You might as well tell me, Bertie."

"Well, I want you to behave yourself. I'm my own boss and I know what I was doing. I wouldn't marry him now for a million dollars—but for all his millions, because he's a yellow pup, and I despise him."

SEE END OF DIAZ RULE IN NICARAGUA

CALLES FIRM AS OIL LAWS ARE ENFORCED

Urges Mexican Unity; U. S. Silent

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 2.—Mexico's oil and land laws, which are so repugnant to the United States State Department, have gone into effect. Foreign oil companies, principally American and British, who failed to apply for concession permits to oil and land holdings in Mexico, as provided in the constitution and laws of 1917, must now appeal early action by the Mexican government.

President Calles has put on his stand that the oil and land laws will be enforced, despite the protests and attempts at intimidation of the United States.

People Support Calles.

Calles has the support of practically the entire Mexican people in his stand. The chamber of deputies at its session on New Year's Eve, when the oil laws became active, was unanimous in its declarations of support for Calles.

After a last minute rush on the department of petroleum office by oil producers for filing of concession applications, it was announced that 80 per cent of the oil producing land in Mexico is conforming with the new laws. Some 300 applications have been filed with the petroleum department. However, large American-owned companies, who, it is estimated, control oil property valued at $200,000,000 did not file permits.

Will Be No Yielding.

No announcement of what immediate action will be taken by the Mexican government on these companies, who yet been made. But, it is certain, there will be no yielding on the part of the Calles government. Calles made this plain in his reply to the oil producers who asked for a "delay" in the enforcement of the laws.

"The new oil laws provide that land for which no concession application has been did by Jan 1, automatically reverts to the Mexican government, which will then decide on its ownership and exploitation.

Calles Asks for Unity.

In a New Year's message to the Mexican people, President Calles called upon them to rally behind the administration in face of possible danger, occasioned by threats of the U. S. State Department should the oil laws be enforced.

Calles declared that capital would be welcome to Mexico always, provided it complies with the laws of the republic and does not undertake to absorb Mexico's national interests.

Mentions Attacks.

"The adoption of methods and systems to develop our natural resources and the defense of our inalienable rights of nationalism," he said,

TEXTILE STRIKERS IN JAIL GET CHEER FROM LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

PASSAIC, N. J., Jan. 2.—The families of the 11 textile strikers who are holding jail here and at Hackensack received Christmas cheer to the extent of $60 each. The funds were contributed by the International Workers' Aid, the International Labor Defense, the local Ukrainian branch of the I. L. D. and the local union of the United Textile Workers.

Chileans and Costa Ricans Inflamed Over Invasion of Nicaragua by U. S.; El Universal Warns American People

Denunciations of the United States invasion of Nicaragua are continuing to be made in Latin American countries.

"No one takes the disembarking of the marines at Nicaragua as anything but the culmination of the old policy of attempts against the integrity of the Latin American republics and the marines which landed are nothing more than the consequences of that aggressive imperialism which, at times, has tried to disembark under the mask of the Monroe Doctrine, and other times under or with the names of the Wilson or Hughes doctrine," declared El Universal, influential newspaper of Mexico City, in an editorial on the Nicaraguan situation.

"MIGHT VS. RIGHT"

"The theory of force imposed upon right has again been shown on this continent," the editorial declared. "The motives for indignation are not less when the hypocritical, lying efforts used to cover the invasion are contemplated."

"We hope that these facts will serve to unmask before the American people the magnitude of the problem which is now opened for the future of peace in America." It concludes.

CHILEANS BOO U. S. CHAMPION.

In the chamber of deputies of Chile, when a deputy attempted to make a speech defending the action of the United States, he was jeered and hooed by his colleagues and from the galleries, until he was forced to take his seat.

COSTA RICANS AROUSED.

At San Jose, Costa Rica, the citizens are so aroused over the invasion that a public demonstration of protest against the United States was arranged. President Jiminize issued an executive order forbidding the demonstration.

Soviet Census Shows Big Increase in Population, Due to Prosperity and Government's Work in Attacking Disease

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW.—As the census figures are assembled it appears that the total of population will be nearer to 160 millions than the 148 previously estimated.

A great increase in population of cities is evidence of growing prosperity. Moscow's population, which fell to 800,000 in 1919, is now about 2,000,000. Leningrad has jumped from 400,000 to 1,811,000. Smaller cities show increases of 72 per cent since 1923.

Returns from country districts show that the growth by natural increase is greater than by emigration from the cities. This is attributed largely to the government's work in checking diseases, such as cholera in summer and the typhus in the winter months. A strong fight has also been waged against malaria.

New York Company Asks That Supreme Court Define Permissible Strikes

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2. — The supreme court was asked today to define a permissible strike, in a case brought for review by the Barker Painting company of New York. The opinion will have a far reaching effect on the unrestricted right of labor unions to strike.

The New York company, basing its case on the recent opinion of the court in the Dorchy case, in which it was held that all strikes were not permissible, charged that the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America and the Philadelphia local used the strike to force the company to pay the New York union scale in Philadelphia when the latter scale was lower. It was done, the company said, to confine business to Philadelphia contractors.

Lower courts refused to enjoin the strike.

Condemns Portable Schools.

Portable schools are, according to the senate, "smokehouses," "roost houses," or "refrigerators," according to Alderman John Toman of the 23rd ward, when he and a committee of parents from his ward appeared before the school administration committee of the board of education.

FUR WORKERS LEARN COST OF RECENT STRIKE

Will Join Cloakmakers Against A. F. of L.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Jan. 2 — Seventeen weeks of strike to secure the 40-hour week and wage increases cost the New York joint board furriers' union $310,342.48. Samuel Lebovitz, assistant manager of the board, gave the figures to a meeting of several thousand fur workers. Relief was the largest single item of the bill: $556,000 in benefits and $45,000 for food cards.

Loans from other unions amounted to $443,329, of which $78,331 has been paid back, leaving an indebtedness of $355,098. Local 22, dressmakers, Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, loaned $107,000; the Amalgamated Bank, $50,000; International Union Bank, $45,000; $28,000 from the law firm of Davidson, Moses and Sicher; $10,000 from Joseph Brodsky, union counsel; $19,000 from local unions composing the joint board furriers; $59,000 from special funds. The 10-hour "Victory Bonds" sold by the board brot $21,000.

Hall rent took $40,486; the hall committee, $25,630; the picket committee, $76,691. Legal expenses amounted to $118,208, which covers lawyers' fees, court costs, fines and bail bonds, assistance to prisoners, and the law committee's work.

Ben Gold, joint board furriers' union manager, sounded a militant note in his speech to the meeting, declaring that the organization would fight American Federation of Labor efforts to reorganize the union. Gold asserted that his group would join the cloakmakers who are attacked by the A. F. of L. bodies. Three resolutions were adopted by the meeting, one for the joint board of cloak and dress makers union's support; one endorsing a "shop chairmen's council" as a permanent part of the union's governing machinery; and one for the amalgamation of all needle trades unions.

SCAB GANGSTER IS SHIELDED BY SIGMAN, CHARGE

Attacker of Unionists Aided by President

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Charging that Morris Sigman, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, was protecting a gangster who had been used to protect scab shops, Louis Hymen, manager of the joint board, issued the following statement in regard to the case of Abraham Cohen, who brought charges of felonious assault against two furriers, Morris Lederfrid of 91 Sheriff street and Joseph Waite of 814 Kelly street, in the Jefferson Market court on Tuesday.

"Abraham Cohen's record as an underworld strong-arm man is well known, and in offering him the aid of the international Sigman reveals plainly the methods and the elements he is employing in his fight against the joint board.

Has Proof.

"I have conclusive proof in the statements of witnesses that on Nov. 17 Cohen protected scabs and attacked the girl pickets of G. & E. Dress Shop, 145 West 35th street, then on strike six days. These two furriers who happened to be on the scene, interfered, and stopped the brutal attack upon the girls. They were later waylaid by this gunella and his gang, who intended, no doubt, to deal out punishment for their help to the girls. Out of these incidents the charges against Cohen for assault has been made, with the assistance of Sigman in Sigman Tactic.

"By these methods of terror and violence Sigman hopes to gain control of the joint board, from which he was driven last year by the honest elements in the union."

A meeting of all shop chairmen in the cloak industry for the purpose of registering the chairmen under the joint board has been called by the executive committee of 50 chairmen which was elected at a mass meeting in Webster hall last Monday.

Chairmen's Meeting Monday.

The meeting for registration will be held at Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East Fourth street, Monday evening after work, and will be under the direct supervision of the executive committee, who will register the chairmen present and see to it that only chairmen participate in the meeting, according to the official statement of the executive committee, issued today.

Call for Election.

In official resolutions the executive committee at its meeting on Tuesday evening called for an election "to decide on the problems at issue and the leader as the only method by which the present dispute between the International and the joint board in the garment industry can be ended. The resolutions also protested against "all methods of force against minorities in the shops, who refuse to recognize one side or the other." The registration of shop chairmen is an expediency resorted to until a general referendum can be held, as one method of registering the opinion of the mass of the workers, who, according to the chairmen, have had no adequate way of voicing their opinions in the struggle.

College Professors Hit Fundamentalism and Support Evolution

PHILADELPHIA — A challenge to fundamentalists has come from the American Association of University Professors when they declined to oppose proposed legislation in several states which will prevent the teaching of evolution.

The resolution passed by them on the subject defends "the separation of church and state."

War Secretary Backs Up Meddling Officers

WASHINGTON — Secretary of War Davis has replied to John Nevin Sayre, who protested that meetings to oppose military training in schools and colleges had been interfered with and sometimes prevented by army officers.

The secretary takes the position that there is freedom of speech for army officers, so long as they do not attempt to speak on behalf of the department of war. He maintains the right of army officers, in their capacity as citizens, to take their own attitudes on public questions.

Stand With the Workers of China, Mexico, Nicaragua

THE American Federation of Labor is silent on the important developments in China, Mexico and Nicaragua, which vitally concern the working class of the United States.

Silence can only mean approval of the imperialist policies carried out against all of these countries by the Morgan-Coolidge-Mellon government at Washington. If this is the meaning of the silence of the A. F. of L. officialdom, then the workers, unorganized as well as organized, should know it.

The demand of labor must force President William Green and the members of the executive council to speak, and speak clearly, when they meet this month at St. Petersburg, Florida.

* * * *

Salomen de la Selva, secretary of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor, with which the A. F. of L. is affiliated, is in Washington. He pleads for support in the struggle of Nicaraguan labor against Wall Street's armed intervention. He is able to present all the facts to the A. F. of L. officials quartered in Washington. He probably has done so already. But the voice that tells these A. F. of L. officials to fight recognition of the Union of Soviet Republics is no doubt also influential in withholding such aid as organized labor in this country is able, or should be able, to give Nicaraguan organized labor.

* * * *

The Detroit Convention of the A. F. of L. voted to send a mission to Mexico, not to find out what support it would be possible to give Mexican labor in its struggle with the great capitalists of this country, but rather to put Mexican labor on the grill on the question of its attitude toward the Catholic Church. Such a mission has not yet been sent. Recently there gathered at Mexico City representatives of the organized workers of numerous Central and South American as well as European countries. No spokesman of the American Federation of Labor was there.

John W. Brown, secretary of the International Federation of Trade Unions, told the Mexican workers that:

"European workers will stand firmly back of their Mexican comrades as well in their hours of need as in times of triumph."

All that the Mexican workers know of the official attitude of the American Federation of Labor comes to them in the stream of vile abuse that had its source in the vicious attacks of Catholic speakers at the Detroit convention, attacks that have not been refuted by the A. F. of L. officialdom.

With Mexican labor fighting for the preservation of its natural resources against Wall Street's oil, land and rubber thieves, no aid comes from the A. F. of L.

* * * *

In China, as in Mexico, the organized labor movement gives its whole support to the struggle against the foreign plunderound. The Chinese trade unions support the national revolutionary movement with all their strength.

When American imperialism is the aggressor against the Canton government, it also attacks the Chinese trade unions.

The government at Washington clearly showed its attitude on the Chinese situation when, on New Year's Day, the American representative joined with other foreign ministers at Peking in a reception in honor of the Manchurian war lord, Chang Tso Lin, the catspaw of foreign greed and the only remaining military leader of any consequence opposing the aspirations of the Chinese people. American recognition of Chang Tso Lin is aid given the enemy of the Chinese revolution and the Chinese working class. But it is the recognition of American imperialism, with which American labor must not associate itself. American labor must take its stand with Chinese labor.

* * * *

The executive council of the A. F. of L. must be forced to speak, either immediately, or at the latest when it gathers in regular session at St. Petersburg, Fla., on January 13.

Local unions, city central bodies and state federations should immediately insist, thru telegrams and letters to the American Federation of Labor headquarters at Washington, D. C., that the organized workers of the United States take their stand immediately with the organized workers of Mexico, China and Nicaragua.

Portuguese Anarchists, Deported, Are in Lisbon Jail, Awaiting Trial

(Special to The Daily Worker)

FAIRHAVEN, Mass., Jan. 2.—The reader of newspapers will perhaps remember faintly that some time ago three Portuguese anarchists were arrested at Fall River, Mass., on the instigation of a priest and the Portuguese consul. They were deported by the United States government as being undesirable citizens.

The editor of O Consonial, a Portuguese paper published here, has received information from Lisbon that those three men are now in jail there, awaiting an investigation by the police into their views and activities. Their fate will undoubtedly be that they will be sent to some African possession, there to rot until they are forgotten, even by those whom they tried to render duty to serve.

YANKEE SAILORS TAKE HOLIDAY; CAPTAIN SEES NO HUMOR IN SITUATION

BALBOA, Canal Zone, Jan. 2.—Twenty-eight American seamen on the steamer Columbia took an unauthorized holiday, on board the steamer Colombia, while on the high seas. Among other unconventional things, they forced the American officers to wait upon them at table, after carefully locking the captain in his cabin.

On the arrival of the boat here the 28 were arrested for mutiny and are held for trial. The boat signed up a new crew.

NEW DEFEATS TO CRUSH TOOL OF WALL STREET

Liberal Armies Move Against Key City

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Jan. 2.—Continued victories of the Liberal forces over the armies of the Wall Street-backed Diaz government point to the overthrow of the reactionary regime here within a short time.

Diaz supporters themselves are admitting that their government is in immediate danger of being shortlived. The liberal armies under the leadership of Dr. Sacasa, president of the liberal government, and General Moncada, the military commander, have administered crushing defeats to the Diaz armies in the east, west, and are now on their forward march to Managua.

The fall of Managua, which is imminent, will mean the end of the rule of the illegal government in Nicaragua and the establishment of the liberal stand and throne in the capital.

Key City As Objective.

Capture of the city of Leon, the largest city in the country, is the present objective of the liberals. Leon is the junction of railroad and river communications with Managua and its capture means that Managua will be isolated from the rest of the country, thus simplifying its seizure by the liberals.

Some of the liberal soldiers are stationed at Telica, a short distance from Leon, where they are awaiting reinforcements of ammunition and arms, before making their attack.

Diaz Supporters Fall Off.

Diaz supporters are rapidly dwindling, with the greater part of the population showing active sentiment in favor of Dr. Sacasa. Intervention of the United States has served to rally heretofore indifferent Nicaraguans around the Sacasa banner.

In practically every battle Diaz troops are reported to have deserted the reactionary ranks and joined with the liberals.

Wants More U. S. "Action."

President Diaz is making appeals for more activity on the part of the United States soldiers and sailors stationed in Nicaragua. So far the U. S. soldiers have been aiding the Diaz government indirectly, attempting to maintain "neutrality" zones, organized by Washington by trying to block the progress of the liberals thru "zones of neutrality," censorship, disarming of citizens and the physical presence of U. S. ships and troops in the country, calculated to frighten the liberals. The failure of these tactics to impede the liberals' march on end Diaz is appealing to the U. S. marines and the U. S. State Department to order Yankee troops into the fighting zones.

Will Abandon Neutrality Sham.

Abandonment of the sham of neutrality on the part of the United States resulting in the active participation in the fight against the liberals is now seen as the only hope of propping the Diaz regime. This participation will soon be forthcoming it is indicated. The Washington government is now seen as busy preparing American public opinion to condone an actual attack on the liberals and when this has been fully accomplished, United States soldiers and United

FIGHT WAR WHEN WAR RAGES, IS PLEA OF COMMUNIST TO STUDENTS MEETING IN NATIONAL CONFERENCE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MILWAUKEE, Wisc., Jan. 2. — J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, addressing the national students' conference here, demanded that students not only consider and favor anti-war resolutions in time of peace, but that they carry their opposition into the actual waging of hostilities, refusing to be caught in the maelstrom of rabid jingoism and hysterical patriotism.

"Wars, such as the last world war, grow inevitably out of imperialism," said Engdahl. "There will be another war. It is already in preparation. It can only be prevented by the triumph of labor in the class war that is now raging thruout the whole capitalist social order."

Engdahl pointed out the role that the students had played in the Russian revolutionary movement. He explained the part that students were

WOMEN 'SIMPLY CRAZY' ABOUT DOGS GIVE TURKEY DINNER TO POOR CANINES

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DENVER—'Twas the day before Christmas, when the city dog catcher, Sam Hansen, got the shock of his life, when two expensive motor cars rolled up in front of the dog pound and the chauffeurs began unloading baskets which they supplied their mistresses had sent full of Christmas dinners for the dogs.

But Sam wasn't the only one to get a jar. A few days earlier, two fashionably dressed women called on E. M. McNeill, head of the municipal inspection department, and informed him that, if he would supply the dogs, they stood ready to send in 100 pounds of roast turkey with dressing and all the "fixing."

"We are simply crazy about dogs," one of them said thru her make-up.

"Yaa," said McNeill thru his teeth, "simply crazy." And then as a sort of after-thought he added: "About dogs."

The marines were sent to Nicaragua to maintain Diaz in office, said Wheeler, and in "intimidate an in-

Artists' Post No. 63, The American Legion, slipped a cog in its bookkeeping and sent on Dec. 22 what it called a "citation" to Miss Linda Jene Writenber. It consisted of a card in recognition of her "steadfast assistance in their observence of Poppy Day in 1926.

MCSCOW — Important overtures were made by the United States to the Soviet Union, in the summer of 1925, looking toward recognition, says a government official here. British and French Attack U. S.

LONDON, Jan 2 — British and French newspapers are joining in the condemnation of the United States intervention of Nicaragua, which has aroused the entire American hemisphere.

The Nicaraguan incident is evidently inspired from every point of view," declared the London Daily News editorially. "There is no evidence at all that American citizens were in the slightest danger from Dr Sacasa and his soldiers, and no intelligent publican of the United States appears to think they were or that the United States government thought that they were.

Cites Coolidge "Peace" Talk.

How can Coolidge carry any moral weight with the hotly-headed sinners of the Old World," the paper asks with sarcasm, "when he believes them to their depression and international intrigues and their short way with their weaker brethern, when, as soon as America is faced with an awkward little problem of diplomacy in her own sphere, she succumbs also with all a struggle at prayer for guidance, to the temptation of the devil.

"Admiral Latimer and his marines have, no doubt, put the fear of God into the rebel state of Nicaragua. They have destroyed the government and sent Dr. Sacasa about his business, presumebly. But what legal right or moral right had they to do either?"

France Sees Imperialism.

Le Temps, Parisian newspaper, attacks the entire policy of the United States in Latin America, as imperialistic. The paper says that the United States is attempting to control all Latin America by its great financial power and because the Latin-American countries need money that the United States, enriched by the world war, alone can furnish.

It said that America is pursuing the same policy it has followed when forced by other nations.

Monroe Doctrine is Screen.

La Liberte also denounced the United States and declared that the famous Monroe Doctrine was being used to trangle the Latin republics. "It has been a screen of the Monroe Doctrine," it said, "that the United States is pursuing a policy whose victims should be freedom and independence. The Monroe Doctrine, which forbids European to attack their noses in American affairs, is a very convenient fence which encircles like Columbia and faith, and now Nicaragua, are strangled."

Croarkin stood mute when called to plead and the customary "not guilty" plea for such instances was formally entered.

Croarkin presented a disheveled, nervous, irritable appearance when he entered court for the arraignment.

Attorney Timothy Crowe, of defense counsel asked for a week's delay in the arraignment and Safety Attorney Robert E. Crowe immediately objected to the first assistant upon immediate action.

"They should be shown it is possible to bring a culprit of this type to the bar of justice for swift punishment," said Crowe. "Not only do I protest against a delay in the arraignment, but I suggest that the trial date be set for not later than Feb. 1."

"Silent Cal" in Frantic Plea to Jingo Press to Push War on Nicaragua

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

Imperialism plays a difficult role when its veil of hypocrisy has been torn aside. The American brand of capitalism is learning this as the result of its aggressive attack launched against Nicaragua, that stands revealed, not as Kellogg's state department would wish, as "a mission of mercy," but as a robber expedition to protect loot already taken from a defenseless people.

So keenly does the Morgan-Coolidge-Mellon administration at Washington feel its awkward position as its dollar diplomacy stands stripped naked before the world, that the president himself is forced to throw aside the mask of "White House spokesman" and make his plea direct to the subsidized press for better capitalist propagandizing of the American people.

Coolidge calls it "embarrassing the administration" for the peoples press support of "the government in its foreign relations". But there is the handicap in the war lies actually is declared no civil liberty suppressing espionage act functions, as in the last war with the result that the real purposes of dreadnaught warships, filling the stars and stripes in the Caribbean can be made known on a large and increasing scale. The workers and farmers of America have yet to know all the details of "The Star Spangled Banner's" most recent depredations in Central America and, knowing it, the schemes of the exploiting [illegible] combat them in the interests of the oppressed at home and abroad. It may be that the cloak of censorship may be thrown over the truth to some extent, regarding the censorship established by Rear Admiral Latimer, Wall Street's agent on the job. Latimer, with Kellogg's state department claim [illegible] ignorance, put a quietus on radio stations in the coastal zones on the Nicaraguan east coast. Thus Coolidge's ultimatum delivered at the White House may intimidate some independent editors and beat them into line. But the capitalist press of the United States servile as it is will stand in ridicule before the world, if it tries to hide all the truth, with its press of all Latin-America and Europe alive with the real meaning of Uncle Shylock's most recent adventure in Central America.

"Silent Cal" undertakes an impossible hushing expedition when he sets out to explain that he does not think in the words of the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, that "some American citizens or newspapers should criticize the administration in such a way that the world at large will get the impression that the country is not united behind the president and his state department."

The same correspondent declares: "President Coolidge considers that the press is interested in promoting American commerce..."

In this "Silent Cal" is quite correct. The capitalist press is but the lackey of the profit-making interests and as such is very anxious to promote the interests of its masters. But there are broad anti-imperialistic sections of the producing population, in the city and on the land, that force even their old party spokesmen in congress to raise the fight against the "interests" of commerce. This alone explains why Senator Wheeler, of Montana, promised the introduction of a resolution in the senate demanding the withdrawal of the dollar-flagged battleships from the trouble zone. Wheeler takes up the struggle while Senator Borah, of Idaho, head of the senate foreign relations committee wavers and hesitates. Even the kept press cannot turn a deaf ear to the anti-war demand in congress. It cannot remain silent in the face of the ceaseless assaults originating in foreign countries. The great masses of the people of the United States will therefore continue to get some of the truth indirectly, where it will not come to them first hand.

Now the workers also have a Communist press to throw the spotlight of truth on Washington and Wall Street.

Coolidge continues the old hypocrisy when he feels that the kept press should make plain that it supports its government when it [illegible] government protects American interests at home and abroad."

But the "American interests" that Coolidge refers to are the "interests" only of the 12 per cent of the population of this country that owns 90 per cent of the nation's wealth. The 87 per cent of the population, the workers and farmers, have no interest in plundering the Nicaraguans, the Haitians, the Filipinos, or any other subject people. The most outspoken section of the jingo press wants Coolidge to wave the flag for the 13 per cent and make no bones about it. The Chicago Tribune, like its namesake in Minneapolis recently quoted in this column, wants to be frank and outspoken. It says.

"The reason the navy is operating in Nicaragua is because American dollers are invested there in lumbering and other productive enterprises. Because of these investments there are American citizens in the country and the navy lands men to protect their lives and their property."

In other words, the American navy must belly and intimidate the Nicaraguan, or the native of some other country being robbed, into complete acquiescence to the dollar brand of exploitation. Otherwise it is guaranteed, "in the name of humanity and civilization," that this bullying navy, under orders from Washington, will shoot him full of holes.

The Chicago Tribune regrets that the old hypocrisy has been banged to pieces. It sheds tears because the opposition under Dr. Juan B. Sacasa is permitted to appear as a "liberal government." It charges that the imperialisms of other nations function more efficiently in this respect. Thus, it says: "No opponent of the British foreign office could be a liberal. He'd be merely a bad egg, and humanity, religion, and altruism would demand that he be put down and kept down and he would be."

But the Tribune, weeping for American imperialism, fails to discover that even British imperialism is facing the same handicap. The British foreign office tried to arouse the British nation against the Union of Soviet Republics. But the British workers stopped that. The First Workers' Republic was not "put down." Instead a delegation of British trade unionists visited the Soviet Union and got up a report filling a good-sized book showing that Russia was not "a bad egg" from the working class viewpoint. This story is being repeated, not only for Great Britain but also for the United States and a lot of other imperialist bandits in the Chinese situation.

The Chicago Tribune points out that, "An American president on some public occasions (as in Coolidge's speech at Trenton last week) is expected to explain the idealistic purposes of America. The American people like to believe that these purposes exist."

But many are now going thru a period of awakening. They are learning that banks and investments are the sole concern abroad of American imperialism, the inspiration of the "big navy" and the "big army" created in Washington, following the path that leads toward new wars. American imperialism intends to go thru with its program, with or without the shield of hypocrisy. It must go ahead or perish at the feet of some other mightier imperialism. But to go ahead means to perish at the hands ultimately of the object of its oppression.

Nicaragua is small. But it is indicative of the whole struggle. Therefore it is important. That is why Washington is so worried over Nicaraguan developments. That is why American labor, should champion the cause of Nicaragua, as it is for all the world like the struggle that must be raised and developed for the defeat of all imperialisms and the world triumph of the social revolution.

Bad faith, and natural malevolence of selfish interests are misrepresenting Mexico's attempt to attain [illegible] betterment, he said, and are attempting to picture them as manifestations and plans of a social dissolvent nation.

May Withdraw Sheffield.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Altho the United State Department of State is maintaining silence in regard to the attitude toward Mexico since the going into effect of the new oil laws, it is indicated that the withdrawal of Ambassador Sheffield from Mexico may be expected momentarily.

Officials have declared that the Washington attitude will possibly do nothing until what they term as "overt act" is committed by Mexico in the enforcement of the laws.

No other comment, except that the situation was "critical" would be made by the State Department.

The United States government has intimated that the oil laws are acts of confiscation of American property in Mexico.

Lynchings in 1926 Show Decline, with Increased Prevention

The number of persons lynched in the United States in 1926 were 39, according to the findings of Tuskegee Institute. Florida leads with eight and Texas comes next with seven. This is 13 more than were reported in 1925, but 28 less than the high mark of 67 in 1922.

Only 5, or less than 17 per cent were persons charged with rape. Of those lynched, 22 were Negroes, 4 whites, and one Indian. Two were women. The court had already acquitted one of the victims.

Twenty of the victims were taken from the hands of the law—8 from jails and 12 from officers outside of jails.

In 23 cases, officers of the law prevented lynchings, four cases occurring in the northern states and 20 in the south.

day taking in the revolutionary struggle in China. He then called upon the students to examine more deeply into the evidence in hand, declaring it as his belief that there would be a somewhat similar development in this country. Engdahl showed how the former college students, Albert Weisbord, the leader of the Passaic textile strike, and Powers Hapgood, active in the coal miners' union, have cast in their lot with the working class, and that many other students will do likewise.

Communism is native to the United States, just as it is native to every other country," declared Engdahl, ridiculing the capitalist propaganda that claims Communism is an import and product from Moscow. He showed how the Communist Party, the leader of the workers in their struggle for emancipation, gains its strength out of labor's growing conflict with capital, and that this condition is prevalent in all countries, to a greater or less degree. He explained the contradictions within the American capitalist system that work towards its disintegration and ultimate defeat and abolition.

The student conference, attended by 600 students and meeting in Milwaukee's municipal auditorium, was held under the direction of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations.

Ask Many Questions.

Engdahl was assailed with numerous questions following his address. His questionere were especially anxious to know why Communists were atheists, and one southerner, from Georgia, wanted to know how the Soviet Union was going to get along without god. Others were worried about the suppression of civil liberties in the Soviet Union, pointing out that it was possible for The DAILY WORKER to exist in the United States and Communist meetings were permissible, while in the Soviet Union there were no capitalist dailies and capitalists were not permitted the right to hold meetings in the Soviet Union. Others raised the question of "free and violence" in abolishing the capitalist state and establishing the proletarian dictatorship. Some of the students were also very much alert to developments in the rest of the world, taking the same course as they have taken in Russia. They didn't think communism would apply in other lands. All of these questions were carefully answered in detail, so that the audience was convinced that they had the Communist view-point although some still declared they were not convinced of its correctness.

Before Engdahl spoke the students had been addressed by a representative of the local chamber of commerce. They had also listened to Daniel W. Hoan, Milwaukee's socialist mayor and to local labor officials.

King's Bishop Warns of New War.

One of the speakers was Dr. G. A. Studdert Kennedy, bishop to King George of England, who declared that what he called the "nationalist faith" holds fair to tear the world into bloody ribbon again today as it has done in the past. He said:

"My country, right or wrong," is the cry of nationalism today. My country above all others—my faith and it battle flag.' And when faith becomes attached to that then you can be sure that a blood-red sunset will lead to a blood-red dawn."

The King's bishop, perhaps with the recent general strike and coal strike in mind, turned his wrath on Bolshevism as follows:

"The class faith bids fair to turn society asunder. It is the driving force behind communism, Bolshevism and a certain quality of socialism."

He claimed that it was only man's desire to "show off" that drives some to live in palaces and keep their boots shiny in days when women go dress or half dress, in fashionably cost clothes while their sisters go in filthy rags.

Divide on War Support.

Four propositions on the question of participation in future wars came before the conference. There were 327 men and women students declaring they would not participate in any war. The greatest sentiment, however, supported the statement that, "I am ready to support some wars and not others."

Walsh-Cooper Bill, Supported by Labor, Aims at Prison-Made Goods

NEW YORK.—Prison contract labor can be struck almost a knockout blow if congress passes the Walsh-Cooper bill (H. R. 8653), asserts A. F. Allison, secretary of the International Association of Garment Manufacturers. Organized labor is vitally interested in this bill as shown by its representation at the open hearing held by the house labor committee. The New Jersey State Federation of Labor, as well as those of Illinois and Ohio, with the International Molders' Union, International Association of Machinists and American Federation of Labor, can follow up now by appeals to congressmen.

The Walsh-Cooper bill provides that prison-made goods from whatever state must be subject to the laws of the state into which they are sent for use, consumption, sale or storage. The four states which are the biggest factors in the prison goods market—Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey—are among the 18 which have laws requiring the labelling of all prison-made products. The federal law, regulating interstate commerce, would act to prevent the present dumping of non-labelled prison products of other states in the essential markets. Connecticut alone pays $2,000,000 worth of work clothes into New York without labelling "Prison made," despite the fact that prison-made products end in the consumption of binder twine by Minnesota farmers who buy right from Stillwater prison. The prison boiler, however, that the consuming public will have to pay the same price for goods known to be prison-made as it does for products otherwise produced. With goods labelled "Prison made," profits would be greatly reduced for the contractors and they would tend to disappear, the association believes. Then full state's use systems could be put into effect.

Prison labor contractors are actively opposing the passage of the Walsh-Cooper bill. In Illinois, Indiana and Michigan particularly, they are exerting pressure. An argument used is that the contract system pays more than a state's use plan. Authorities, and, however, that state's use is actually more economical, citing the New Jersey situation.

PEKING LOSES CHEKIANG; WILL JOIN IN REVOLT

U. S., France, Japan Disturbed by British

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, Jan. 2. — Chekiang province, south of here, has declared its independence from the Peking government, in officially severing its connection with the reactionery and now rapidly crumbling regime in Peking, the position of the Canton revolutionary government is now considerably strengthened. Chekiang's affiliation with the Cantonese revolutionaries is expected momentarily.

Capture of Shanghai by the Southerners shortly is now practically assured.

People With Canton.

The northerners have amassed some 100,000 troops in this district, but losses by desertion to the revolutionists and hostility of the people toward the war-lords, who are imbued with great pro-Cantonese sentiment, are having their affect.

Fighting is still going on near Hangchew, capital of Chekiang.

Washington Silent.

WASHINGTON, January 2. — The Washington government is silent on the memorandum of the British government issued last week in which Great Britain declared the powers should adopt a more liberal policy in the Chinese situation. Great Britain declared it favored revision of the tarif and customs policies pursued by the powers, to allow the Chinese more autonomy. Great Britain asked the other powers to make a statement as to what policies they intend to follow towards China. Washington's silence is adding to the international complication surrounding Chinese affairs.

England also urged for recognition of the growing nationalistic spirit in China and the adoption of a "hands off" policy, providing for future recognition of any faction in China that showed itself capable of self-government.

U. S. Flabbergasted.

That the U. S. Department of State was much disturbed over Great Britain's stand is indicated. The United States has attempted to play the role of being China's "friend," the while pointing to Great Britain as the "evil foreign power." Great Britain is now seen as tearing the tables and the United States visibly "doesn't like it."

No Alternative.

The United States now has no alternative but to move along with Great Britain, according to observers here. Coolidge and Kellogg have had several lengthy conferences on the matter since the receipt of the British memorandum, and while refusing to divulge their reactions, indicated that a "favorable reply" would be made soon. The state department has refused to make any statements until the British answer is framed.

French Coy.

The French reaction to the British proposals is virtually the same as that of the United States. The French cabinet is reported to be "wary" of the motives behind the Downing street action, and is preparing to adopt a "watchful waiting" policy to see what develops.

Japan, the other power greatly interested in China, is openly against the British proposals for a change in the fiscal policy of the powers, if the opinions of the leading Japanese newspapers are criterion. Big business in Japan sees great losses in a now lucrative field, if the powers treat the Chinese with more liberality.

Lithuanians Protest Against Fascist Rule

'England in Valley of Humiliation,' Says Canterbury Archbishop in 1927 Message

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The English people come to the New Year in a mood of disappointment, and they should take the "Pilgrim's Progress" as their guide for 1927, the archbishop of Canterbury declared in a New Year message to the British people.

"Brothers, things are too close behind us to be likely to be forgotten," said the archbishop's message, "even if just to forget could be right.

Can't Forget Chaos.

"We cannot forget what we have seen with our own eyes, the crippling of our commerce, worklessness of so many thousands with all its attendant ills, tokens of distress and fear and lost infrequent bitterness.

"We do not feel that we are standing upon the height, but in a valley.

Cites Bunyan.

"We are disappointed, even humiliated, Humiliation! The word suggests bitter and profitless experience, but John Bunyan gave it for us a different ring—'In the valley of humiliation is found a place as any the crow flies over.'"

The archbishop declares that 1926 was not entirely unfruitful, pointing to the Geneva conferences and the imperial conference.

"We will draw the sting from even the gloomiest events of these disquieted months if we can feel that as a people we have learned from them a little of what they have to teach," said the archbi

RIGHT WING ATTEMPTS BLACKMAIL OF NEW YORK PAPERBOX STRIKERS

NEW YORK, (By Mail.)—A. I. Shiplacoff, who has been selected as Chief Executioner of Communists by the so-called "Preserve the Unions" (in reality Destroy the Unions) conference held at Beethoven Hall, has made an attack upon the Paper Box Makers' Union and its leadership in the Jewish Daily Socialist Forward. In his statement he expresses dissatisfection with the leadership of the union, including Fred Caillos, the manager who came into office after a revolt of the rank and file against the last manager, Waldman, who was backed by the Socialist Party bureaucracy in the labor unions and who was guilty of graft, gangsterism and corruption which had brot the union to ruin.

Shiplacoff declares that relief will ha given to the Paper Box Makers' Union only on condition that those who control the union at the present time get out of the situation. Mere then this, he admits that he has assurances that the strika can be settled.

It is well to ask a few questions of this new hero of the right wing bureaucracy: You are dissatisfied with the leadership of Caiolla and his associates, who are not Communists but plain, honest, trade unionists, who have cleaned out the corruption and the mess left by the Waldman clique. Whom do you wish to lead the Paper Box Makers' Union and their strike? Do you wish the return of Mr. Waldman and Company? Do you support when the rank and file kicked him out of office?

You state that the strike can be settled. What special information have you? The attorney for the Paper Box Makers' Union is Mr. William Karlin, a prominent official of the Socialist Party, one of your own sort, who is very closely allied with you in the present witch-burning campaign against the Communists. Why has Mr. Karlin not succeeded in getting a settlement with the bosses earlier? Are you indeed on more intimate terms with the bosses than is Mr. Karlin or the union? Mr. Sigmen, your hero in the cloakmakers' strike, worked with the bosses before and during the strike. Do you get this information from Mr. Karlin, or have both of you been keeping certain information from the union end from the workers?

This strike of the Paper Box Makers' Union has been fought by the union against the most miserable conditions prevailing in any industry. It has been fought with very little resources at its command. The present leadership has had to overcome not only the opposition of the police, of gangsters, and the resistance of the bosses, but has had to overcome the ruin and wreckage left by the Waldman administration when it was kicked out of office in July of last year.

Strikers Demand Support.

It is plain that such a union, in so difficult an industry, cannot win its strike without support of the labor movement. It has shown great courage and fighting spirit in maintaining its workers whose loyalty to the union has been many times challenged by the betrayals of the Waldmans and similar reactionaries who associate today with Mr. Shiplacoff.

These workers have a right to demand of all trade unions that they come to their support. Placing conditions upon the support of these workers is nothing more nor less than blackmail. You say you will give relief on the condition that the present leadership gets out.

Do you really think that the workers, who have learned their lesson with the Waldmans will sell themselves for the return of Waldman, who had ruined their union and had discredited unionism, and who had used the Paper Box Makers' Union as a pawn for their own eggrandizement and shameful purposes? The Paper Box Makers' Union will give the proper answer to such blackmailing methods.

Hit at Shylock Methods.

We should like to ask one more question of Mr. Shiplacoff. Why such an interest in the Paper Box Makers' Union? Why this meddling and interference with workers out on strike? You are supposed to be against interference in labor unions—you who were only yesterday the Executive Secretary of the Socialist Party of New York are really against Communist and so-called "outside" interference in labor unions. Why this interference? Why the Shylock terms to workers demanding relief?

In your actions in the Paper Box Makers' situation, you believe all of your high-sounding phrases about "no politics in the unions" and show that behind these phrases is the gross intention to utilize the union in order to clean out men and women who have been fighting a hard battle against the bosses and their scents, with the hope of putting in your own ugly group of reactionaries who will throttle the will of the rank and file and maintain itself by gangsterism and terrorism. The Paper Box Makers have a right to say to you the new little hero of the reactionaries—"Keep your hands off the Paper Box Makers' Union, or else we, the real members of your own union and all unions will give relief, not because of solidarity and unity and for victory against the bosses.

Scandal in Sale of French Decorations

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS.— The arrest of M. Ruotte will lead, it is believed, to his laying bare a tremendous scandal in connection with the barter of the coveted Legion of Honor decoration. Nominations for the honor were imposed, ha allaged, by various members of the French parliament, who sold the decorations.

M. Ruotte has in his list one man who was given the honor because of his twenty years in the direction of industry, altho he was but 33 years old; another who received it althe he has a police record of having trafficked with the enemy in the late war; and still another who was decorated altho he had served a prison term for bankruptcy.

CHICAGO "PROF" FLAYS FOOTBALL AS YOUTH MENACE

"Hinders Education and Promotes Gambling"

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—A sweeping denouncement of college football was made by Prof. E. H. Wilkins, of the University of Chicago, in a debate with Dr. S. V. Sanford, of the University of Georgia, president of the Southern Conference, at the annual meeting of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Prof. Wilkins pointed out that twenty years ago football faced an indictment on the grounds it endangered the health of students, that this accusation had been remedied only to have the game face a far more serious indictment.

le Education Hindrance.

Prof. Wilkins said that for the 2 per cent of collegians who plan and benefit from football "intercollegiate football as presently conducted interferes to an intolerable degree with the education of the other 98 per cent."

The Indictments.

Five salient faults in modern college football were named by Professor Wilkins: 1. Over-excitement during the football season, which caused neglect of academic work. 2. Distortion of normal scale of values in which the student believed that success in football was the only success worth while. 3. Intensifies the "drinking era." 4. Sponsors gambling. 5. Induces improper financial background for players.

Static Message from Mars? One Scientist Says Yes, Two Say No

CHICAGO, Jan 2. — Radio static is not a message from Mars or any other planet, according to two University of Chicago professors. Their statements were given in response to one issued by prof. Michael I. Pupin of Columbia University. Professor Pupin declared signal interference are messages from Mars.

"Anyone can speculate," Dr. Hawley B Lemon of the Riverson physical laboratory of the University of Chicago declined, "but research shows almost definitely that all radio disturbances are caused by electrical phenomena some fifty miles above the surface of the earth."

State's Attorneys Take Few Shots at Clabaugh

States' attorneys from all parts of Illinois have returned to their respective hallwicks, many of them chuckling openly over their tilt with Hinton G. Clabaugh, head of the state board of pardons and paroles, as a result of the annual convention of the States' Attorneys' Association.

The cause of the chuckles was a set of resolutions introduced by a committee, of which Prosecutor Roy Cline of Champaign was the head, in which Mr. Clabaugh was described as a dictator, a spoiled child at a birthday party, a publicity seeker, and a person of political ambitions.

SOME EXAMPLES OF 'PROSPERITY' ON U. S. FARMS

Tillers Get Nothing But Debts from Labor

By STANLEY J. CLARK

On Dec. 3 W. M. Allison brought into Tuttle, Oklahoma, a load of seed cotton. After waiting until noon the cotton was conveyed into the gin. The bale weighed 530 pounds and sold for six cents per pound, the price for the bale being $31.08. After paying picking, ginning and wrapping Allison had 30 cents for which to pay himself for plowing the ground, buying the seed, cultivating the land and hauling the cotton to town.

Another farmer received 70 cents, and another only received forty cents for the same efforts put forth above.

Thousands of acres of cotton have not been picked by hands of pickers. The tenant farmer finds himself in a position where he can not pay for gathering all crops but his own. If he gathers his own crop the landlord or banker gets it and refuses to allow the tenant one penny for gathering. The tenant moves away, abandons his crop for his creditors to gather, and hires himself to some small landlord and thereby gets pay enough to keep from starving.

In Iowa.

Iowa farmers are mortgazed more that $1,000,000,000. The interest on this debt at five per cent is $65,000,000 annually, the public debt born by the farmers in the same state is $73,164,000, the interest on this debt makes another amount of interest $3,672,200, in addition to the two items mentioned above is the visit of the tax collector. In 1925 the total in taxes from farmers was $67,500,000. The total debt per acre on Iowa farmers averages four dollars and five cents per acre annually. The figures are from the Iowa Farm Bureau Messanger.

Political Program

1. Relief from the evils of the mortgage and tenantry evil thru the adoption of a land tenure system which will secure the land to the users.

2. The nationalization of the railroads, the meat packing plants, grain elevator combines and the control and management of these marketing organizations by the organizations of working farmers in co-operation with the organizations of city industrial workers who are employed in these industries.

3. The control and operation of the farm credit system by the organizations of working farmers, in place of thru capitalist banking institutions which now use this farm credit system, for their enrichment.

4. Relief for the farmers from the excessive burden of taxation thru levying higher income taxes and inheritance taxes on the swollen fortunes of great capitalist exploiters and higher taxes on the profits of the railroads and great industrial combines.

5. Against the expenditures for a big army and navy, which serve no other purpose than to support the imperialistic adventures of the great financial houses of Wall Street in other countries.

6. Fight against Wall Street, Dollar Diplomacy and the exploitation of the wealth produced by the farmers and industrial workers to support the capitalist exploiters in their effort to make profitable colonies of the people of China, the South American countries, India, the Philippines, Self-determination for Porto Rico, Hawaii, Withdrawal of all American soldiers and marines from the Central and South American countries. No intervention in China.

7. Against the Dawes plan, thru which the American banking houses are securing control of European industries and paving the way for a new war.

8. Close co-operation with the farmers of other countries and particularly with the farmers of Russia, who are so important a factor in the world market. The recognition and establishment of economic relations with the first workers' and farmers' government—the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

9. The alliance of the working farmers and city industrial workers to establish a workers' and farmers' government of the United States. Only a united struggle of all working farmers, together with the city industrial workers, in support of this program will bring relief for the farmers from the conditions under which they now suffer.

UNITED FARMERS OF ALBERTA WILL MEET THIS MONTH

Fight on Wheat Export Duty Scheduled

CALGARY, Alberta, Jan. 2 — The nineteenth annual convention of the United Farmers of Alberta and the United Farm Women of Alberta, farmer co-operative organizations of Canada, will be held at Edmonton, starting Jan. 18. The convention will last three days during which the delegates will deliberate on the important issues facing the Canadian farmer.

Fight Export Duty.

One of the principal issues to be brought before the convention is that of the proposed export tax on Canadian wheat. This tax is being urged by millers of Canada. A resolution has already been submitted for action providing for the unqualified opposition of the U. F. A. to such a duty. The resolution says: "Whereas, it is evident that efforts are being made to place an export tax on wheat, and whereas, we believe it will work a hardship on our wheat producers, we ask our provincial government to resist this movement at any time, in any way."

Teach Co-operation in Schools.

A resolution has also been introduced for the teaching of co-operative principles in the public schools of the province.

This resolution, which may be the most important at the convention, says: "Whereas, co-operation is becoming more and more an important factor in our industrial system, and whereas, there have been many failures in our co-operative effort due to lack of understanding of co-operative principles, we ask the provincial government to appoint a committee representative of the various groups involved to draw up a course of studies on the principles of co-operation for use in our public schools."

Resolutions have also been introduced dealing with various local issues.

Claims Lake Diversion by Chicago Has Little Effect on Water Level

Diversion of lake water by Chicago accounts for but a small fraction of the lowering of Great Lakes' levels, Representative Newton, of Missouri, told the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Newton said the diversion assured a navigable waterway thru the "heart of the nation" and ought to be continued.

"It has been demonstrated," he said, "that we can have a waterway connecting the gulf and the lakes without injury to lake commerce. The difference in lake levels caused by diversion could be made up by compensating works costing but $18,000,000."

IOWA FARM SPEAKER THINKS CAL COOLIDGE, STEEL TRUST PROFITEER, STILL HAS "CHRISTIAN CHARACTER"

By CARL HAESSLER

(Federated Press)

If President Coolidge tried to get unearned income and stock dividends out of farm investments instead of from his cosy block of U. S. Steel corp. shares he might be as eager to help the farmer as he is to help the steel and other industries.

This startling slant on the motives possibly underlying the federal policy against agriculture was broadcast over the air by State Senator M. L. Bowman of Iowa, speaking over WCFL, the Chicago Federation of Labor radio station, in an address on the attitude of the Farmers' Union toward organized labor.

"The farmers," said Bowman, "do not question the honesty, the integrity, or the Christian character of our president of the United States who has shares in the $200,000,000 melon of U. S. steel by virtue of being one of the stockholders. However, our midwest farmers are beginning to believe that if our president, who seems to feel that the farmer should work out his own salvation, found it necessary to provide for his family by the profit in farm operation it might be very

"Labor and the farmer should realize that their interests are mutual, that the worker must have a good wage to pay a good price for farm products and farming must be on a profitable basis if the wheels of industry are to continue to run so that labor can be employed. The Iowa State Federation of Labor has joined hands with the farmer. That harmonious cooperation between the Iowa Farmers' Union and labor in Iowa should be a lesson to each and every state in this union."

It is possible that the farmers of the country could have more serious consideration upon the part of those in authority to do for agriculture what they have willingly done for industry."

Cal's 50 steel shares grew overnight to 70, enabling him to sweat $480 a year out of the steel workers in unearned income instead of $350.

Hitting at the chain of middlemen who grab their profit at each point in the procession of food from farm to city home, Bowman said, "There is a long road between the producer and the consumer. The farmer receives less than 40% of what the consumer pays for the products of the farm on an average.

Average Value of Farm Property Falls Off 30 Percent Since High Point of 1920

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2. — The average value of farm acreage which is day at $76.47 as compared with $107.89 in 1920, representing a lowering of values by 30%. This is the finding of the department of agriculture. The most severe decline is found in the grain and livestock raising states of the middle west.

The report does not assert that the bottom has ae yat been reached, contents itself with siting that the rate of decline is slackening.

CAN USE UNION FUNDS TO FIGHT GRAFT CHARGES

Local to Pay for Defense of Officers

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Seventeen officials of Electrical Workers' Local 3 are entitled to use the union's funds in defending themselves against the charges preferred by H. H. Broach, vice-president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Justice Thomas C. T. Crain ordered vacated the injunction secured temporarily by Julius V. Timko preventing such use of local union funds.

Charges Looting.

Timko asserted that the accused union officers were intent on looting the treasury. The court ruled that the union might protest if the officials prosecuted too large bills, but that the present injunction was untimely.

Would Try Selves.

No decision has been given by Justice Crain on the other injunction, which the accused officers secured temporarily against International officers. The local men insist that they be tried in New York by their own executive board, while the international officers hold that they should be tried by the parent body in Washington, since most of the trial board would be made up of those accused otherwise.

The local officials are charged with misconduct office, failure to obey union rules and accepting bribes from employers, among other things. About 500 affidavits in support of the charges were filed by Broach against the injunction.

Union Teachers Seek State Legislation to Get Adequate Salary

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Pass the Coleman bill is the word the Union Teacher, organ of the New York teachers' union gives city teachers who have struggled repeatedly for pay increases.

Only by getting state legislation securing state financial aid will the teachers in New York City be safe in their pay raises, the union organ claims. Two years ago the legislature gave the teachers pay increases, but Governor Smith vetoed the bill on the claim that there was no money provided and that it was up to the city to take care of its own teachers. The union says that the teachers' pay today is no more than in 1913, and maybe less, with the cost of living up.

Library Workers in Queens Demand Equal Pay with New Yorkers

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Library workers of Queens borough petitioned Mayor James Walker for equal pay with other New York City librarians. A "Pablo for Father Knickerbocker" was the title of the library workers' appeal.

It cited the pay increases announced for firemen, policemen, street cleaners and other city workers from the $1,800,000 contingency fund.

Owen J. Dever, director of the Queens library, said workers there do 30 per cent more work than employes in the New York library and yet are paid less. He asked for 35 more workers.

LABOR PAID THE DIVIDEND

(From Minneapolis Labor Recorder.)

"If a worker took a man of wood with him on the job, stood the dummy up and said to the employer, 'This is John Smith, he is going to work here, put him on the payroll and pay him off at the scale every payday,' it would be branded as an outrage, and it would be.

Newspapers and magazines would declare this to be the height of Bolshevism, and if thousands of workers adopted the same plan and insisted upon it the newspapers and magazines themselves would aver that the revolution was on in full blast.

The United States Steel Corporation has done practically this very thing in the declaring of a $200,000,000 stock dividend. It is almost exactly what happens every time any corporation declares a stock dividend.

Owners of steel stock will receive stock in the amount of 40 per cent of the stock they now hold as a result of the stock dividend. This means that hereafter dividends must be paid every year on $200,000,000 more stock by the steel company than previously.

For this extra stock not one penny has been or will be paid by any stockholder who receives it.

It is true that this $200,000,000 will not leave the coffers of the steel trust. But if it is used for buildings and equipment, as it may be, in addition to depreciation, there must be paid the dividends. While if it had been put directly into buildings and equipment without the issuance of new stock or paid in a cash dividend the employes of the steel trust would not have been compelled to produce so much more to pay the dividends on the extra stock every year.

It is difficult to see the difference between paying a wooden man who cannot do any work and issuing stock for which no money has been paid. The only apparent difference is that the employer would pay the dummy, while the workers must pay the dividends on the stock for which the holders pay no money.

This huge stock dividend is not announced by any daily newspaper as having any revolutionary significance. But where did the money in the steel trust surplus come from that made the stock dividend possible? What was it that piled up this great financial resource.

It is the result of the most bitter exploitation of labor that has perhaps been known since the building of the pyramids. It represents the blasted hopes of thousands of workers who left European homes to come to America to work for the steel trust in the belief that they were coming to a land of freedom and plenty. It represents the curses that have come from lips of workers for industrial conditions in this country, from lips that would rather have blessed and praised.

In that stock dividend are contained the homes that are rightfully the steel workers while they shiver in the squalor and discomfort of the shacks of steel trust towns. In that dividend are the educations which belong to the children of the steel workers that they will never receive. It contains the pretty things and comforts that steel workers' wives and daughters long for as ardently as the wives and daughters of the owners of the steel trust. In it are the broken romances of young steel workers who wish to marry and establish homes, but who were prevented by the low steel trust wages and the long steel trust hours that prevailed until recently.

Hours spent by the workers in the terrific heat of the blast furnaces; the injured whose families were never recompensed for their injuries received while employed by the steel trust; the murder of Fannie Sellins by steel trust thugs for her efforts to organize the slaves of steel; the frameups to break the unions of the steel workers; the sweat and blood and toil of those who work in steel—they are in that dividend.

Newspapers will tell you about all the stock steel trust employes own. They count the holdings of Judge Gary, president of the trust, as employe stock. But they fail to mention the holdings of Gary and other company officials are far more than the stock owned by the other employes. The benefit that will accrue to steel trust labor compared to the benefit of a decent wage will be small indeed.

Granting management all the credit to which it is entitled, the fact remains that labor paid the stock dividend, even tho it did not declare it. Labor will continue to pay on a larger scale in proportion to the increased amount of stock.

Declaring of this mammoth dividend discredits every statement steel trust officials have ever made that they cannot pay higher wages and better working conditions. It should encourage the steel workers to renew their efforts for organization.

Much more to pay the dividends on the extra stock every year.

It is time that the $200,000,000 will not leave the coffers of the steel trust. But if it is used for buildings and equipment, as it may be, in addition to depreciation, there must be paid the dividends. While if it had been put directly into buildings and equipment without the issuance of new stock or paid in a cash dividend the employes of the steel trust would not have been compelled to produce so much more to pay the dividends on the extra stock every year.

Come Out and Record Your Protest at Rule of Fascist Terrorism

Tomorrow, Tuesday evening, there will be a meeting of protest at the fascist terror in Lithuania, which will take on also the nature of a memorial to the four comrades who were recently executed by a firing squad in that country, now in the grip of the deepest reaction, Pooehela, Greifenberger, Tachlorny and Giedris.

The meeting will be at Lithuanian hall, 3133 South Halsted street, under the auspices of the Lithuanian branch of the International Labor Defense, C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, will speak, as well as others.

Lithuanian comrades are urging by cabled messages that the working class of the world protest against the white terror. The same request comes from Muscow. The need of action is urgent. Every man and woman who attends this meeting will, even in his presence alone, add to the volume of resentment that the proletariat of the world must show at the atrocities now being inflicted on the Communists, and thru them on the whole working class, by the present forces in power in Lithuania.

Bessette, Well Known in Printing Trades, Passes in New York

NEW YORK, Jan. 2. — After failing in health for two years, Edward B. Bessette died here at the Knickerbocker Hospital. Bessette was for a quarter of a century a labor leader in the printing trades of the Middle West and Pacific Coast, having been largely instrumental in securing the 48-hour week for printers in Chicago in 1905. He also had a part in drafting the first workingmen's compensation legislation in the western states.

TAXI DRIVERS IN N. Y. FIGHT 'CZAR' IN POLICE DEP'T.

Licenses Are Revoked at Whim of Officer

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—New York taxicab drivers are watching with keen interest the test fight the Taxi Men's Association is making against Second Deputy Police Commissioner John Daly, license dictator. Suit has been filed by the taxi men's organization in behalf of a driver named Theodore Zanghi, whose license was revoked by Daly on the charge of the New York Here Chase corp. When Zanghi paid $35 under protest for the alleged "larceny of tools" his license was restored.

Is Collecting Agency.

Repeated complaints of taxi drivers have brought the odtor of Taxi Weekly, a trade paper, into the fight on Daly's abuse of power. The drivers assert that Daly is acting as a collecting agent for the collection of civil debts—as in the Zanghi case. Daly is also accused by the drivers of revoking their licenses, and thus depriving them of their means of earning a living, for minor offenses and sometimes trumped up charges.

Actions Arbitrary.

The second deputy police commissioner of New York City has sole charge of licensing of hacks and cabs. Daly, while in that office, has made a practice of calling drivers into his office whenever any sort of report is made against the worker.

The driver may or may not be given a chance to explain his side to Daly. Usually he is threatened and too often actually penalized by suspension or revocation of his driving license.

CENTRAL TRADES OF NEW YORK VOTES FULLEST AID TO PAPER BOX STRIKERS

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Fullest support and consideration for the appeal of striking paper box workers was voted by the New York Central Trades and Labor Council. The paper box workers, numbering nearly 4,000, struck thirteen weeks ago for a 44-hour week, minimum wage scale, abolishment of industry, and complete unionization. Police played a strong part for the employers in the course of the strike, arresting many pickets on minor charges, intimidating others, and guarding delivery wagons.

Judge Lindsay Hears How Augustin Morales Was Beaten by Police

Judge William J. Lindsay withheld decision after hearing evidence in support of issuing bench warrants for the arrest of Oak Park and Melrose Park policemen for assault on Augustin Morales, now held in the county jail in connection with the shooting at Melrose Park Dec. 7. Morales was represented by his attorney, Miss Belle Spencer.

Dr. Rodney M. Loyola of the John B. Murphy Hospital testified to the injuries inflicted on Morales, as did also the Mexican consul, Luis Duplon and a representative of The DAILY WORKER. The official reporter of the coroner's office also appeared under subpoena with his transcript of the testimony at the inquest into Officer Stahl's death. Judge Lindsay agreed to give his decision in the matter later.

In the meantime, Henry Pelm, the chief of police of Melrose Park, was seen about the corridors of the criminal courts building, either in anxiety over the case or possibly in an attempt to bring political influence to bear. Morales says that one of the beatings he got was from Chief Pelm himself. The chief had supplied himself with an Italian to interpret from Spanish to English. Becoming enraged that Morales could not understand the Italian's alleged Spanish, the chief beat him up.

We will send sample copies of The DAILY WORKER to your friends—

PITTSBURGH IN CALL TO ALL WORKERS IN THIS BIG INDUSTRIAL DISTRICT

To all members of the Workers Party, Young Workers' League and working class in general in the Pittsburgh district:

The DAILY WORKER Builders' Club is organized—and has already begun showing its color.

It has arranged the greatest affair ever held in our district for Saturday Evening, January 15, 1927.

Help workers, male and female, ages between seven and seventy, no discrimination against sex, only A-1, first class live wires (that means business) wanted. Ones that want to work their way in to the Builders' Club—the foundation of permanent SUB getting, FINANCE SUPPLYING force in this district.

The party as a whole, particularly in this district has always been busy trying to do something for The DAILY WORKER but never had satisfactory results. It is because an organization like The DAILY WORKER Builders' Club has not been organized to carry on the work systematically.

You only have one problem to solve now, and that is how you are going to become a member of this organization—The DAILY WORKER Builders' Club.

The Following is How You Can Become a Member.

Do either one or every one of the following: Get $6.00 worth of subscriptions to any of the Workers Party publications, $6.00 worth of donations or sell one strip of eleven (11) tickets for the January 15 affair.

Unit secretaries and The DAILY WORKER agents are requested to send in the names of those that have fulfilled the above requirements, since Nov. 1, 1926, so they will be recorded as members of the Builders' Club.

All the names of The DAILY WORKER Builders' Club will be published in the program for January 15, 1927, dance. Also their deeds, the bigger the better.

Write The DAILY WORKER for interesting write-ups, particularly for the January 15 affair.

To keep better record and do the jobs more systematically and all subs to either one of these parties, Rose Dictor, Young Workers' League Campaign manager, D. E. Early, The DAILY WORKER Agent, John Kasper, City Agent.

Address all mail to 805 James St., Room 8, N. S. Pittsburgh, Pa., where the sensational January 15 affair dance will be held.

Experiences with "The Ford Worker"

SEVERAL arrests and attempted prosecutions have been part of the experience of the Ford shop nuclei of Detroit in issuing the Ford Worker, their official organ. In spite of this opposition of the Ford Motor Co. and the Highland Park and Fordson police and judges, the monthly sale at the factory gates reached at one time a total of 13,000.

Our experience will be of benefit to other shop nuclei who are striving to issue their shop paper. The first obstacle that the nuclei was confronted with was the question of financing the paper in order that it could come out regularly each month. We held a meeting under the auspices of an educational club and raised $367.50. One hundred dollars of this money was donated to The DAILY WORKER last May. The balance of the money was used in printing the paper for free distribution. Beginning with the fifth issue, in July, the paper has been sold at 1 cent a copy. The paper is more than paying for itself. There was a surplus of $100 for September. This was donated to The DAILY WORKER.

Twenty-two hundred copies of the first issue were distributed free at the Highland Park plant, and this total was increased at the rate of 1,000 copies until we reached 5,000 with the fourth issue. The reason that more papers were not distributed was that Ford secret service and the municipal police interfered with the distribution. There is an ordinance forbidding free distribution in Highland Park and Fordson, especially in the case of literature pertaining to the education and organization of the workers.

May 13 three comrades were arrested for distributing and were fined $20 each. The case was appealed to the Wayne county circuit court and the decision was reversed. By refusing to submit to Ford dictatorship exercised thru the municipal police, Ford Shop Nuclei No. 1 won an important victory.

In the free distribution we organized a distributing squad of comrades who did not work at Ford's—women comrades for afternoon and men comrades for midnight distribution. We had to work under cover and fast. Toward the last the comrades distributed about five minutes, and at the most ten minutes, and then disappeared.

The police, together with the Ford Motor Co., have made it so hard for us to distribute any papers that in the latter part of June we decided to get newsboys' licenses. Comrade Sarah Victor, the Detroit DAILY WORKER agent, was arrested three times in one afternoon. The next morning Chief of Police Charles W. Seymour and the city attorney could not convince the judge that the Ford Worker was not a newspaper. When the judge dismissed the case the chief told Comrade Victor that at the next session of the city council her newsboy license and the licenses of all others would be revoked. The council has met many times, but has not yet taken action against this growing shop paper.

In spite of this opposition, we have succeeded in reaching a mass of workers who not only buy the paper to read themselves but who distribute it among their shopmates and contribute stories about shop conditions.

The Ford Worker gives us the opportunity to agitate or propagandize among our shopmates. When the paper comes out we naturally ask our shopmates if they read the last issue of the Ford Worker and if they liked it. In the conversation that follows we get suggestions, pointers or valuable criticism. Even boys in the trade school and women in the plant are interested in the paper.

Thru our activities with the Ford Worker we are also convincing the comrades who have stayed out of the party that the reorganization of the party along the basis of shop, mills and mines is effective. Thru our activities all comrades are taking more interest in the party work.

Iron Works Up in Smoke.

STERLING, Ill., Jan. 2.—The Novelty Iron Works was a mass of smouldering ruins today following a fire which completely destroyed the plant, with a loss of from $75,000 to $105,000.

Why don't you write it up?—It may be interesting to other workers.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

THE GERMAN COMMUNIST YOUTH

By IRVING M. GLAZIN.

THE working masses in the aftermath of the world-war Germany, under the Versailles peace treaty and the Dawes plan, find themselves in a most desperate situation. More than 2,000,000 are unemployed. A great number work only part time. The German capitalists, not satisfied with their increased profits thru combining themselves into syndicates and trusts, are also cutting wages, extending the working hours and introducing the speed-up system (like we have in the United States) in order to enrich themselves still more.

The big agrarians even went so far as to increase the number of their 10,000 agricultural laborers to 130,000 in spite of the tremendous unemployment of the German workers, just because a Polish worker costs them 150 marks less. The present German government is fully controlled by the heavy industrialists and the big agrarians, who use the state power for their own interests. The government subsidies they get is already 1,000,000,000 marks, while the tax burden is borne almost solely by the toiling masses, whose share of taxes increased since 1924 from 64 to 75 per cent.

Y. C. L. Fights for Young Workers.

How much worse the conditions of the young workers are I have previously mentioned in my correspondence from Berlin (D. W. Youth Column, May 25). No changes for the better have occurred since then. On the contrary, the conditions of the toiling youth, the situation of the 350,000 unemployed young workers, have become worse yet. In face of this situation no other youth organization except the Young Communist League fights so sincerely and energetically for the interests of the toiling youth. It is the Y. C. L. that carries on a fight against the compulsory labor laws which are being introduced against the young workers, against the speed-up system, against the Dawes plan, for youth protection laws, against increasing the age of electors from 18 to 21, etc.

The Red Youth Front.

The Y. C. L. is leading quite a successful fight for the united front of the young workers, or as they call it in Germany, the Red Youth Front. The new league leadership (elected at the last congress in October, 1926) had quite a hard job to start the united front activities, after the ultra-left leader, the renegade Ketz, while one of the party leaders sent out instructions that Communists must not greet social-democrats or shake hands with them, whether they are workers or non-workers, that they must wear red gloves when coming to meetings of the town councils, etc.

Correct United Front Policy.

Now, of course, the Y. C. L. has a correct united front policy, which consists in inviting increasing numbers of the toiling youth in the daily struggle against the capitalist class. Thanks to this correct policy, the Y. C. L. was successful in spite of the young socialist leaders, in forming united front committees in the campaign for the expropriation of the royalty and in sending working youth delegations to the Soviet Union.

Educational-Social Meeting Held Here by Young Workers

Last Sunday night the Chicago Young Workers' League held its first monthly educational-social membership meeting. Comrade William F. Dunne spoke on the new drive against the left wing in the trade unions, and the tasks of the young workers in helping defeat it. Comrade Dunne's speech was well received by the audience, which filled the hall at 1902 W. Division street. After the lecture discussion followed. At 8 o'clock the hall was cleared for dancing and games, which continued till 11:30. A splendid time was had by all.

The Chicago league plans to make these educational-social meetings (to which outsiders are invited) a regular monthly feature.

Young Workers Will Remember Liebknecht

On Jan. 16 at 8 p. m. the Young Workers' League, Local Chicago, will celebrate Karl Liebknecht Day. The meeting will take place at the Northwest hall, corner North avenue and Western.

Comrades Williamson and Zam, both well versed in the activities of the international youth movement and life and work of Karl Liebknecht, have been secured to speak at this meeting. Comrade Max Bedacht of the C. E. C. of the Workers Party will also talk. The Pioneers and the Czecho-Slovak Workers' Sport club will participate.

In St. Louis the Liebknecht meeting will be held on Jan. 9 at 2:30 p. m. in the Croatian hall, 1326 Chouteau avenue. They will have, besides a prominent speaker from the national office, a musical program and a lecturer speaker.

The Steel Workers and 1927?

By a Worker Correspondent.

THE year just passed has witnessed some gigantic struggles in the American labor movement. The organization of the Passaic textile workers after a long struggle with the textile barons showed conclusively that the unorganized and exploited workers in the basic industries welcome the opportunity to affiliate themselves with the American Federation of Labor.

The struggle of the left wing in the United Mine Workers of America and in the clothing trades shows further that a new era of militancy is arriving and that Communist leadership in these struggles has demonstrated its worth and the correctness of its tactics. The centralization of reactionary leadership as witnessed in the Lewis, Sigman, Woll, McMahon combination points out the necessity of further preparedness on part of the militants and a clear understanding of the tasks of the future. The tasks of amalgamation and building up the existing unions must be supplemented with the every day struggle of organizing the unorganized.

The steel and iron industry still remains the greatest organization task confronting the militants. Since the great steel strike a few feeble efforts have been made by such leaders as Mike Tighe to organize the workers and such campaigns have only produced further demoralisation and chaos. Each convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel & Tin Workers has on paper recognized the necessity of an organization campaign, yet the leadership in the weak and poorly organized progressive movement feebly presented its demands and were silenced by "Red Plots" concocted by Tighe and his henchmen. Trade union tradition plays an important part in the conduct of these officials who base their mode of conduct upon the dead past. Years of membership in the Amalgamated seems more to the leaders than the tasks of organizing the unorganized and presenting a solid front at the conference table.

Mislead and disheartened progressives labor under the false impression that by organising a dual union they will destroy the Amalgamated and break the power of Tighe. The combination of the several most powerful lodges in the Amalgamated into a dual union would leave Tighe free from the effects of the progressive campaign and would meet with his hearty approval. It would be handing Tighe just what he wants. The Amalgamated has a membership of about 1,000 and Tighe holds his power by virtue of his control of the many "convention lodges" scattered thruout the steel and iron industry.

The organization of 10,000 steel workers by the progressives would give to them complete control of the Union. The organization of several new lodges by the progressives would give to them the machinery of organization and along with it recognition. The most conservative of steel workers agree that a dual union would only produce further disorganization and the leaders of the dual union movement would not have the backing of the lodges they would lead into the dual union. Dual unionism is not the solution of the problem and it would be utter folly on part of its leaders to run from the fight. The key to the situation is organize the unorganized and it is the one task for the progressives to take up. There must be but one main task before the coming convention of the Amalgamated and that is a campaign to escort into its ranks every worker employed in the industry. The progressives must lay aside their dual union campaign and face the facts as they really exist. No dual union would ever be recognized by the steel barons as long as the Amalgamated exists. This was proven in the Girard paddlers' strike. Mike Tighe is not the lease and his presence under the existing conditions in the union shows plainly that it's lack of organization, lack of a simple common program of action on part of the progressives that allows Tighe to head the union. The present organizational machinery with over a half century of existence must be the fighting machine to hurl into the one task of organizing the unorganized steel workers. No fighting machine can be broken up into several parts and thrown into the zone of action and be expected to come out victorious. No general staff of labor strategists should undertake the enormous task of waging a campaign on four fronts simply to get away from the influence of a leader like Tighe.

The campaign for the organization of the unorganized steel and iron workers must be conducted by the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel & Tin Workers. The progressives must press this demand. The campaign of adding more lodges to the present progressive ranks must replace the dual union campaign. The rank and file members in the Amalgamated lodges must themselves insist upon these demands. They must not be blinded by their leaders into believing that a dual union would solve their problems.

1927 should be a year of organization for the steel and iron workers led by a militant Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel & Tin Workers and not a year of demoralisation and splits.

WORKERS' SCHOOL OF NEW YORK CITY BRINGS RESULTS

Had Difficult Start Three Years Ago

By DAVID GORDON.
(Worker Correspondent)

THREE years ago the Workers' School in New York City was struggling with the birth pangs of mustering pupils to study in its classes. It was not a prolific mother; it only bore some four classes. And, as often happens in the case of the poor, the children were all undernourished. The classes were fed with the few crumbs of never more than ten comrades. That was the Work ers' School three years ago.

Today, a night in the year 1926, the school is in its kicking adolescence, attracting all those who are interested in active life. Now it has some fifty classes running.

THE school is criticised. Comrades complain that not enough classes are given. Is it the fault of a child that it cannot answer the questions that are to be asked one much older? One is inclined to think the contrary. Other comrades complain that they are not allowed to take more than a certain number of courses, except in special cases. The complaint is a compliment to the school. It is the policy of the school to have comrades study while they are fighting, not to give up fighting and study alone. That is not to be encouraged. The classrooms are often crowded to capacity. One feels with the poor walls that must be squeezed to death in order to have the necessary comrades where they belong. The partitioned rooms look like futurist art when the class is in session. (True, this was not the intention of the carpenters.) The partitions flow like reeds in a wave, but they are not disturbing to that degree where comrades find cause to complain.

One unusual complaint was lodged by a certain comrade. She is busy all day with work and her nights are taken with Communist activity. She is able to find some spare time, which she employs with studying in the Workers' School. Even Sunday is exploited by her. A class was to be given Sunday mornings. It was very favorable for her, and so she joined that class. After the class she intended to devote the remainder of the day to studying her other courses. It came about that the class could no longer be given on that day because the instructor found that he could not devote himself to that class unless he partly relieved him of some of the responsibilities he assumed. Time is hardly able to find another more disappointed than this comrade. It means just so much more learning in the flood of practical activity. The comrade could not be helped, but her tone proved the work of the school. Here are comrades almost on the verge of tears wanting to go into certain courses but unable to do so. The school has made itself felt as a necessity for workers' education.

IT is interesting to note the attitude of the comrades with respect to their classes. In public speaking, the instructor found it impossible to come to teach his class. The students were in no way excited by this. They elected a chairman to take the instructor's place. This elected comrade kept order while the others delivered the speeches that they were to have prepared for that lesson. The end of the season found each and every comrade wholly satisfied with the class. Then, in the former Sunday class in historical materialism, after some waiting, the instructor called on the telephone to announce that he finds himself unable to be at the class. The comrades did not want to have a morning wasted. They therefore held the class themselves. One comrade read from "Capital" and was always interrupted when a special point needed emphasis or explanation. In this manner two hours of reading and discussion were gone thru. The comrades were smiling at each other after the class was over, for each one felt that the time was not wasted.

That is the Workers' School today. It has aroused an almost inconceivable enthusiasm for learning. It has been able to meet the majority of things desired by its students despite the fact that it could use to great advantage more forces. The school is filling an historic role—the training of a better leadership and a better membership for the American labor movement.

As this good picture was being taken at Pineville, Ky., with waves lapping the tops of some of the bungalows, the water was still rising six inches an hour.

SUSPENSION OF WORK ADDS TO FLOOD HORRORS

Waters Drive 7,000 from Their Homes

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Stricken by the worst flood in its history, middle Tennessee continues its relief measures among the 7,000 homeless, meanwhile hoping and praying that the angry waters of the Cumberland river soon would subside.

A slight rise in the river, which already has inundated 250 city blocks in Nashville, was noted today, but the crest is expected soon following, which the flood waters will slowly recede.

Patiently waiting to return to their water-soaked homes, were thousands of homeless temporarily housed in tents, churches and public buildings. Much of their personal belongings and furniture have been swept away by the high waters. Many houses were ruined beyond repair.

All previous high water marks have been shattered by the rise of the Cumberland, which reached a height of 52.5 feet. Only once before had the river ever soared above the 55 foot mark and that was in 1882.

Each time the river rises an inch additional families are driven from their homes and property damage, already estimated at $2,500,000, increases.

The police department has moved practically all the families out of the flood district.

Hundreds of other persons have been forced out of work by the suspension of factories located in the flooded area.

About four others are homeless in the towns up and down the Cumberland valley.

Negro Clergyman Asks Why Colored Criminal Meets Discrimination

Editor, DAILY WORKER:—Conditions in Gary lead me to ask the public a question.

We colored people are less than 15 per cent of the population and commit more than 10 per cent of the crimes, yet we have to furnish the great majority of the criminals. About 85 per cent of the suspicion is directed at Negroes.

I am asking your paper why this is. If a crime is committed by an unknown person, there is almost always a suspicion that it is by a Negro. If it is a Negro, the headlines of the paper play it up. But if the suspicion falls on a white person, the same papers, if they have any news about it at all, merely mention that a man being investigating his color committed the deed. A crime is a crime, it matters not who commits it. I think all law violators should be treated alike, whether white or colored.

Very truly yours,
Rev. G. W. Portie.

Dry Law Officials in Conspiracy with Wets, Claims Wayne Wheeler

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2. — A conspiracy exists among certain prohibition officials to "help the beer and wine propaganda," Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, told President Coolidge.

Wheeler criticized those officials who, upon resigning from the dry service, have attacked prohibition administration and have said modification is the only way to remedy present prohibition conditions.

The Manager's Corner

Wishing You a Red New Year.

The manager takes pleasure in wishing the readers and supporters of The DAILY WORKER a most active and stirring New Year. To the revolutionist the happiest new year is the one which is most full of struggle and achievement for our movement. Let us make 1927 memorable for its accomplishments. Let us now resolve that 1927 shall be marked by the release of Sacco and Vanzetti and all class war prisoners.

The general establishment of the 40-hour week.

The overthrow of foreign domination in China.

The defeat of American imperialism, and the establishment of a republic free from its domination, in the Philippines, in Mexico, in Nicaragua and the rest of Latin America.

The establishment of world trade union unity.

The growth and development of the Workers (Communist) Party to twice its membership and influence.

For the successful accomplishment of these tasks for the new year we call for the fullest co-operation of the foreign-born workers and the native-born, men and women, the young workers and the children, the Negro workers and the workers of all races.

And let us further resolve that we will build on a firm foundation, strengthen and develop The DAILY WORKER, the organ of the struggle for these demands, into a powerful mass paper with a circulation of at least 25,000 by the end of 1927.

BEN MILLER

Comrade Buehler Is Challenged

DEAR COMRADE MILLER: I received your letter in regard to what "am I doing towards saving The DAILY WORKER." My report will be very short, as I would rather go out and hustle up a few subs than write a long letter.

In the first place I must work on the quiet as I am a member of the Machinists' Union, so that I cannot be a Communist. And second, I visited every member of my nucleus and gave them a colour book. We have 20 members. So far four members paid for their books. Two members paid $1.00, one member paid $2.00 which is a total of $24.00 (very poor showing) but I am keeping after them every meeting.

This evening I went before the executive committee of the Hungarian Workers' Athletic Club and spoke for The DAILY WORKER. They passed a motion that the next entertainment they would hold they would donate 25 per cent of the net profit for The DAILY WORKER. The entertainment will be held some time in February.

Then I go around the section among the members to remind them to keep plugging until we raise our quota.

There are a lot of our members out of work so that it is hard to get subs for The DAILY WORKER but I am trying to get all the members of my nucleus to subscribe for the Sunday Worker. That is the least they can do. As for my doing more it is very hard as I cannot do much running around because I tire very quickly.

You can be sure to hear from me again soon.

Now, I challenge Comrade Buehler of Toledo, Ohio, to show what he is doing.

Yours for the Communist Cause,
Comrade from Cleveland, Ohio.

Hoover Makes an Admission

Even Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce for Wall Street in the Coolidge cabinet, was forced to admit in his New Year's report on conditions during 1926, that the Union of Soviet Republics was rapidly recovering economically. This is a big change since the days, not so long ago, when the Soviet Union was denounced as "an economic vacuum."

This confession of one of the most prominent spokesmen of great business is excellent background for the New Year's statement on the Soviet Union's economic progress issued by Boris E. Skvirsky, director of the Soviet Information Bureau at Washington. Skvirsky points out in part that:

"The Soviet Union enters 1927 with its industrial output advanced beyond the pre-war rate, agricultural production back to the pre-war level, and a general and marked economic improvement during the past year. Since Sept. 1 foreign trade has shown a pronounced favorable balance. During the past year industrial production increased upwards of 40 per cent over the previous year, and a further increase of 17 per cent during the present year is predicted. In every way the situation of the country is far stronger today than at any time since the revolution.

"American-Soviet trade for 1926 will probably be somewhat less than $80,000,000, as compared with the record figure of $110,000,000 for 1925. American experts to the Soviet Union fell off nearly 40 per cent, and both Germany and England gained at the expense of American manufacturers. At present there are obvious handicaps to the development of commercial relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, which I hope will be removed in due course."

One of the handicaps that Skvirsky refers to is the failure of the United States to recognize the Soviet government. With the Soviet trade going to Germany and England it can easily be seen that Mr. Hoover's reports on economic conditions in this country will become increasingly optimistic. This will become increasingly true as Soviet industry appears more and more in the world market with its products, which will certainly be welcomed more in those nations oppressed by American, British and other imperialisms than the goods of these bandit nations. This is especially true of China and other nations of the Orient and the Near East, even of South America, where several countries have already recognized and are trading with the Soviet Union.

Smith Seeks the Presidency

Governor "Al" Smith of New York has tossed his hat in the ring as an aspirant for the democratic nomination for the presidency next year. This has been expected for some time.

Tammany Hall's "Al" made his announcement as part of the inaugural address that opened his new term as governor of the empire state. Before thousands of the "faithful," he said:

"No man would stand before this intelligent gathering and say that he was not receptive to the greatest position the world has to give anyone, but I can say this—that I will do nothing to achieve it except to give to the people of the state the kind and character of service that will make me deserve it."

"Al" Smith will no doubt have an difficult sledding toward the nomination in 1928 as he did in 1924. The democratic south looks upon him as an agent of Wall Street. The cotton crisis has not changed this attitude for the better. Instead it has gone for the worse. The south is also Ku Klux Klan and protestant while "Al" is catholic. The south is dry. "Al" is wet. On top of this the radical eastern democracy is not satisfied with the brand of donkey politics sponsored by Tammany Hall, Taggart and George Brennan.

"Al" Smith, therefore, does not clarify the confusion that exists within the democratic party by announcing himself as an aspirant for the 1928 presidential nomination. Rather he throws it into even greater chaos. Which reveals the conflicts raging within this capitalist political party, that tries to speak for opposing elements of the middle class and at the same time urge the cause of the great capitalists, the financial capitalists for instance, thru its espousal of the league of nations and the world court. "Al's" hat is in the ring. It will be a battered lid indeed when it is thrown out again.

Another Answer to a Challenge

Woodlawn, Pa., December 26, 1926.

DEAR COMRADES: I've been challenged to answer what I have done to overcome the crisis of The DAILY WORKER in the present campaign to Keep The DAILY WORKER.

The members of the party and the supporters of the only workingclass paper, The DAILY WORKER, are anxious to hear what the individual can do when he is aware of the fact that he must always keep in mind his duties as his power especially at the present time when the Daily is passing thru its most acute crisis.

Up to December 26, I've raised $10.00 to Keep The DAILY WORKER and in turn I've challenged all the party members of District No. 5 to go out and do the same and to contribute to our organ, The DAILY WORKER, the only paper that will lead us to victory in the class struggle.

For The DAILY, Always yours, E. Resetar.

Illinois Women Ask Modern Laws on Hours

In place of the legal holiday and Sabbath work now permitted for women in Illinois, an entirely new law with provisions for very special cases is being sought by a joint committee of women's organizations.

Great credit is due to representatives of the Women's Trade Union League for their work in drafting the measure. Other participating organizations include the League of Women Voters and the Illinois State Federation of Women's clubs.

There has been no change in Illinois legislation affecting women's hours of work since 1911.

Nine Bakery Workers in Contempt of Court

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK — Nine delegates of Local 87, Bakery and Confectionery Workers' Union, which is located in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn, were sentenced by Supreme Court Justice Cropsey for contempt of court. They had, it was charged, induced members of the union to violate an injunction against picketing.

The amount of the fines and the length of the sentences are to be announced later when final drafts of the papers in the action have been completed.

A Plea for Industrial Solidarity

The following plea for industrial solidarity from industrial unionism as from the Voice of Labor, official organ of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union. It should be understood that the writer of the article is not pleading for C. I. U.-ism along the lines of the Canadian experiment. He wants to bring about the same result that American radicals seek to accomplish by the amalgamation of craft unions into industrial unions and the linking up of all such unions into a national organization with a general staff which would be in position to bring the entire power of the labor movement to bear in a given situation. The reference to "English trade unionism" relates to the existence in Ireland of branches of British unions. This system has all the vices of dualism.—Ed.

By MURTAGH MORGAN.

Is trade unionism in Ireland an integral and virile part of the working class movement? Is it effective for welding together and consolidating the forces of labor? Does it fulfill its function as a real instrument for resisting attacks upon wages and conditions? Is it an organic whole, capable of expressing a clear and convincing lead upon all the questions affecting the workers thru the class struggle?

Is it Failure?

Only an imbecile would say that trade unionism in Ireland does, or is capable of, any of these things. Not by any means an integral or virile element of the labor army, it is rather, a disjointed and remote part contemptible in its unconscious impotency. As a means of unification it is incongruous. It is difficult to conceive of a more disconnected body. Its inability to defend wages and conditions is daily becoming more apparent, and instead of leading it is inclined to lag. On its existing basis trade unionism in this country is about as useful a weapon to the British workers in their struggle with capitalism as the bow and arrow would be to drag villagers attacked by bombing aeroplanes. Craft unionism, pertinaciously, disunity, "poaching," jealousy, recrimination: these are all common features of that feeble and inert thing we are stupid enough to call trade unionism. Yet leaders mount platforms and naively prate to working class audiences about "our trade union movement," while, as a matter of fact, a movement, in the real sense of the term, does not exist.

Its Day is Past.

When a race slave is no longer able to perform the duties demanded of him by the capitalist system he is instantly "fired." So it is with our trade unionism; for a considerable time now it has been unable to deliver the goods. No verve is manifest anywhere, and initiative or desire to march with the times is entirely absent. The old-fashioned conception of trade unionism has become a veritable old man of the sea to us, and unless we make a supreme effort and cheek him off he will, assuredly, strangle the new departure necessitated by the changing situation. The "crinoline" has passed, this is the age of Eton crop" and dress. Rip Van Winkle unionism is only compatible with a flourishing capitalism. It worked fairly well when England could boast of being the workshop of the world"; it is useless today, when European capitalism is being beaten to its knees by the trustificated and concentrated capital of American business. The more intense the competition for world markets and fresh fields of exploitation, the more severe will become the attacks upon the organized workers.

Our problems are multitudinous, and the sooner we get down to solving them the better for the Irish working class. Multiplicity of unions is a deterrent to progress; it's more than folly—it's fatal. The whole situation is complex. Each separate organization jogs along in its own stupid, desultory way, sublimely oblivious of any other interest but its own—and often unfortunately too jealous of its own futility to protect even its own interest.

The Recent General Strike.

There is no point of contact visible anywhere except, perhaps, during a crisis—when the improvised "unity" achieved becomes nothing more than a sham. Take, for example, the indecision in Ireland during the general strike, and we find that while lip-service in abundance was given to the cause of solidarity, things happened that would make even a trade union fetish unionist blush. Intrigue and deceit marked the whole course of events. When it was no longer felt safe to further prevent the strike spreading Ireland desperate efforts were made to "confine" its ramifications to certain specified areas. Now what did that mean? In the case of a general strike it means this: that at some particular point in the line of battle you are prepared to co-operate with "scab" or "blackleg" labor. Why should a state of affairs such as this be allowed to exist, and what is the cause of all these troubles? I have mentioned one multiplicity of unions—and there are many minor causes, yet there is, perhaps, a greater.

The English System.

There are two distinct, and in many ways opposed, forms of organization or structure in Ireland—both Irish and English unions operate in this country. Here is a difficulty that must be surmounted. It has proved a source of discord and a bone of contention for a long time. Now is English trade unionism advantageous to the workers? No matter whom it offends, I am firmly convinced that very recent events have conclusively proved otherwise. The English unions take their orders from the other side, and at times, of policy, methods and action, dictates an impregnable barrier between the man in the English union and the man in the Irish union, and thus veils the common interest in a welter of dissension.

Disadvantages of "Benefits."

The elaborate system of benefits is another factor which vitiates materially in confusing the real issue, and it tends to make the Union huge administrative concerns rather than active participants in the struggle for emancipation. This benefit idea is exploited to the full. Men are urged to join the union, not because it is their duty to their class, but because of the munificent pecuniary advantages to be derived by so doing. As I heard one man remark who was induced to recede from his own union to join another: "They'll offer you heaven and earth for nine-pence." This benefit business, with all its attendant evils, is more pronounced in the English unions.

Back to Connolly.

The application of some of Connolly's principles is wanted, and wanted badly. Years ago, in the face of silent opposition, he thundered out the grand philosophy of the O. B. U. Will he said then denunciatory of capitulated unionism has been completely vindicated by the events of the past six months. His most vindictive enemies were the class of people who turned a general strike into a general rout.

"Fanatic" the insects hissed, till he taught them to understand
That the highest crime may be written in the highest law of the land.

Connolly's Union.

The organization he helped to found has at least this to recommend it: It has proved itself capable of fighting the capitalists on each and every occasion that working-class interests have been in jeopardy. His fighting strike—that sudden rapier-thrust by which he won so many battles—I have seen in action, and have marvelled at its efficiency.

But, then, Connolly was a leader so different from the type that haunted Dowling street and slobbered over the Socialist Republic as day is from night. They loved the "constitution;" he fought for the workers. They respected established institutions and conventions; he respected the cause of labor and recked little of all else. A difference, yes, and one that has meant much in the workers of Great Britain, and especially the still struggling miners.

New Bottles and New Wine.

New policies need new methods must be devised to meet the entirely new set of circumstances if we are to justify our existence as trade union lists. A complete transformation is imperative if we are to leave the present state of chaos, and a preliminary step should be the abolition of the heterogeneous collection of unions that at the present make concerted action impossible. This will be opposed. Naturally. Because it may also mean the abolition of quite a number of salaries. Most of the big amalgamations and linkings in the past have been rotated more or less as business propositions—men have received "guaranteed" and sinecures, and the real work has been neglected. Let this be the real thing, the solidification of working-class energies is a matter of paramount importance, the salaries of officials is but of minor consequence. Petty considerations must be submerged in the mere immediate aim. The rank and file of the unions must realize that the present effete structure cannot remain; they imply segregation, the O. B. U. implies solidarity.

The Irish Labor party and trade union congress is the responsible agent, and it must, therefore, set about this transformation. The trade unions will become the determining factor in the final inevitable clash between capital and labor. It is, therefore, necessary to perfect a machine capable of controlling production as well as direct the general policy within the capitalist system.

The ideas of a past generation must go. They fall completely to fit into the present scheme of things. Were the great pioneers of trade unionism alive today—Owen, Doherty and the rest—they would readily perceive the need for change, and the best way we can honor their work and perpetuate their memory is to do as they did—evolve new methods and adopt ourselves to the changed situation. Connolly says: "The younger accepts the achievements of the old, but gradually acquires strength to usurp its functions until the new generation is able to abandon the paternal household and erect its own." Sheer economic pressure is compelling us to erect that new trade union household.

We cannot remain static. We must go forward. Let us remember that—Mankind is a marching army, with a broadening front the while:
Shall it crowd its bulk on the farm paths, or clear to the outward files?
It's pioneers are the dreamers who fear neither tongue nor pen
Of the human spiders whose silk is wove from the lives of toiling men.

The Taking of the Winter Palace

Reminiscences of F. F. Raskolnikov.

WE must either fold our useless hands and wait for the revolution to be finished or else there must be a rising there is no middle course." That is how Lenin presented the question on the eve of the October revolution.

Having a majority of the soviets of workers' and soldiers' deputies in both capitals, the Bolsheviks can and must take the state power into their hands," wrote Vladimir Ilyitch somewhat earlier in 1917.

For Comrade Lenin, the winning of the majority in the Petrograd and Moscow Soviets was a most important political fact which proved the undoubted bolshevization of the wide masses of workers and soldiers (i. e., mainly peasants) of all Russia. "The majority of the people are for us," wrote Comrade Lenin in the same September manifesto to the central and Moscow committees of our party.

Bolshevism in its theory and practice infallibly appeals to the masses, wins the majority, and therein lies its radical distinction from Blanquism and from all other forms of conspirative socialism.

But to gain the sympathy of the working and peasant majority is only the prerequisite to the struggle for power. It is necessary to organize these masses and lead them in the process of the armed struggle.

Above all, it was necessary to create a special organ for the direct leadership of the rising.

Committee and Staff Clash.

On October 21 (new style, November 3) the military revolutionary committee appointed its commissaries in all military units of Petrograd and its environs. During the night of October 22 the rupture of the military-revolutionary committee with the staff of the Petrograd military district was accomplished. The M. R. committee declared that orders of the staff not endorsed by its signature were invalid. This practically amounted to a declaration of war. The installation of the two hostile forces was expected from hour to hour. The M. R. committee, which had all the time remained the initiator of the provisional government, put the Kerensky ministers in a depressed mood, engendered lack of confidence in their own forces, in the possibility of any victory whatsoever.

On October 25 (November 7) at 2 o'clock in the morning the winter palace was taken by the concerted efforts of the workers, sailors and soldiers.

Comrade Lenin, who followed the situation at the front with great intensity, frequently visited the military headquarters. I remember once when Vladimir Ilyitch called me into one of the rooms of the district staff. "What ships of the Baltic fleet are armed with the heaviest guns?" was the first question he asked me. I replied that they were the dreadnaughts "Petropavlsk," "Sevastopol," "Gangut" and the "Poltava."

Lenin as Strategist.

Comrade Lenin inquired whether they could be brought up the Neva and if not where they could be placed for bombarding the capitalists of Petrograd; but he was not satisfied with generalisations as an answer, and compelled me to show in detail on the map the ranges of various calibres of naval artillery.

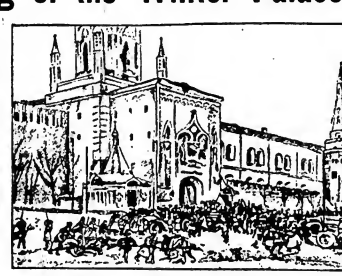
Comrade Podvolsky writes in his reminiscences that when he asked Comrade Lenin whether his visit to the staff meant lack of faith in the military workers, he simply but firmly replied:

"It is not lack of confidence, but the workers' and peasants' government wants to know how its military authorities are acting."

During the report on operations Comrade Lenin was engrossed in the map. "With the sharpness of a profound and attentive strategist and military leader," writes Comrade Podvolsky, "he asked fur explanations as to why such and such a point was not defended, why a certain step was proposed and not some other, why the reinforcements were not summoned from Kronstadt, Vyborg and Helsingfors, why such and such a position had not been worked out and such and such an access closed."

In these questions we have a complete picture of Comrade Lenin. He was never content with bare statements or general phrases; he always got down to the very substance of the matter, entered into details, demanded proofs, verified the words and deeds of every responsible worker. When the operative staff was transferred from the district headquarters to Smolny, Comrade Lenin asked that a table should be placed for him in the staff office as he wanted to be in touch with the military events all the time.

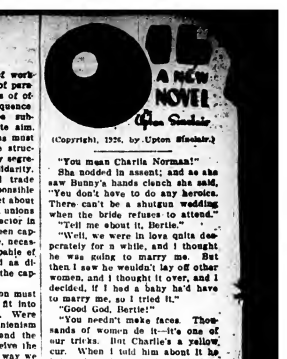
Altho Comrade Lenin was a profoundly ubiquitary man (which he successfully emphasizing), we military workers frequently had occasion to be astonished at how quickly he got an orientation in a military situation and how wise and useful were his advice and instructions on military matters.



THE TAKING OF THE KREMLIN IN OCTOBER 1917

SOVIETS WILL DIVERT VOLGA TO BLACK SEA AND ATLANTIC OCEAN

MOSCOW.—The Volga river, which now flows into the landlocked Caspian sea, is to be diverted by a canal 65 miles long so that it will flow into the River Don and thence into the Black Sea. This will permit ocean-going grain packets to come thru the Mediterranean, the Dardanelles, and thence up the Don



(Copyright, 1926, by Upton Sinclair.)

"You mean Charlie Norman!"

She nodded in assent; and as she saw Bunny's hands clench she said, "Yes don't have to do any fighting. There can't be a shotgun wedding when the bride refuses to attend."

"Tell me about it, Bertie."

"Well, we were in love, quite desperately for a while, and I thought he was going to marry me. But then I saw he wouldn't lay off other women, and I thought it over, and I decided, if I had a baby he'd have to marry me, so I tried it."

"Good God, Bertie!"

"You needn't make faces. Thousands of women do it—it's one of our tricks. But Charlie's a yellow cur. When I told him about it he behaved so disgustingly I told him to go to hell. I got the name of a doctor that would fix me up, and Dad will have a thousand dollars to pay and that's all the damage."

"Bertie," he whispered, "why in the world do you have to do things like that?"

"Didn't marry. I'll not do it again. I had to learn, like everybody else."

"But why did you have to do it once? Trying to trap a rich man into marriage? Doesn't Dad give you enough money?"

"That's very easy for you to say, Bunny, you're satisfied to get off in a corner and read some old book. But I'm not like that. I have to have a little life. Dad gives me pocket money, but that's not what I want. I want a career; something of my own." And don't start preaching at me, because I'm weak as a kitten and can't stand anything just now. I wanted what every woman wants, a home of my own, and I didn't want a bungalow, I wanted a palace I could invite people to, and make some use of my talents as a hostess. Well, I fell down, and now I've got somebody to be kind to me for a few minutes, if you're possibly got that in you."

It looked as if the tears were coming into her eyes, so Bunny hastened to say, "All right, old girl, I'll lay off. But naturally I was taken aback."

"You needn't be. The doctor says it's done a million times a year in the United States. I amused myself figuring that out—it's about once every thirty seconds. Life is a messy business. Let's talk about something else."

It was a time for confidences, and she wanted to know about him and Vee—was he going to marry her? He said he didn't know if she would have him. Bertie laughed—she would have all right, if she was playing her cards cleverly. But Bunny told how many times she got irritated at him, and why, and that gave Bertie occasion for a discourse. She was not sure that she'd be able to smash weaken for a few minutes, and ask him to be kind, but she still believed in money, and the things money could buy. She discussed Vee from that point of view: it would be more dignified, and safer in the long run, for him to marry a woman rather than a actress; but all the same, Vee had a lot of sense, and he might do worse. To go and wreck their happiness for the sake of a fool daydream now—that was just sickening!

Then she wanted to know about Dad's affairs, and how that deal in Washington was going; would they really get the leases? And was it true that Dad had any real pull with the administration in Washington? Bunny was sure he had; and Bertie revealed what she had in mind. "I've been thinking it over—I've had a lot of time to think, lying here. I believe that what I'll do is to go back to Elden Burdick. He's a good deal of a dub, but you always know where to find him, and that seems to me a virtue right now."

"Would you tell him about this?" asked Bunny, wonderingly.

"No, why should I? He's made his mistakes, I guess, and he doesn't advertise them. I guess I've been living with Charlie, but I think he's still in love with me. What I have in mind is that I could make a call at the office as he wanted to be in touch with the military events all the time.

Altho Comrade Lenin was a profoundly ubiquitary man (which he successfully emphasizing), we military workers frequently had occasion to be astonished at how quickly he got an orientation in a military situation and how wise and useful were his advice and instructions on military matters.

"Would you tell him about this?" asked Bunny, wonderingly.

"No, why should I? He's made his mistakes, I guess, and he doesn't advertise them. I guess I've been living with Charlie, but I think he's still in love with me. What I have in mind is that I could make a call at the office as he wanted to be in touch with the military events all the time.

"Oh, you're going to behave yourself," said Bertie, coolly. "This is just a sort of children's complaint that you'll get over."

U. S. IN GESTURE OF RECOGNIZING PEKING FORCES

British Proposals Hit Cantonese

BULLETIN.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 5.— Shanghai is now almost within the shadow of the advancing Cantonese armies which have now reached the Hangchow-Ningpo Railway line in Chekiang province. The southerners were accelerating their advance.

The wealthy Chinese residents of Hangchow are leaving the city, and all trains arriving at Shanghai today were crowded with refugees.

It was reported here that the northern authorities are sending warships to Ningpo to try to prevent the capture of that city by the Cantonese.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, China, Jan. 3.— Attendance of official American representatives at a New Year's reception for Gen. Chang Tso-lin, where representatives from the other foreign powers were also present, is seen as virtual recognition by the United States government of the reactionary warlord as "head" of China.

Greetings of the United States were extended to Chang Tso-lin and he was referred to as the "leader of the pacification movement in China."

Much significance is attached to the reception and the presence of Americans there in view of the new international political situation involving China resulting from the British "memorandum on Chinese policy."

Chang Conducts Campaign.

Chang Tso-lin has been busy lately conducting a campaign among foreign envoys here to get them to recognize the Peking government. He has made personal calls upon all the ministers. A new agreement between Chang and Marshal Wu Pei Fu to continue their joint attack on the Canton government, is reported. They had previously been near a split on account of internal squabbles.

Cantonese Attack British Proposal.

HANKOW, China, Jan. 3.— Great Britain's memorandum on the Chinese situation providing for revision of financial policies pursued by the foreign powers in regard to customs and surtaxes is attacked by the Canton revolutionary government as a means of aiding the North China militarists. Application of the Washington conference principles on the disposition of surtaxes will give the Peking government about $50,000,000 annually, which will be used by the northern war lords to make war on the Cantonese without restraint, it was declared.

Cable Kellogg.

Foreign Minister Chen of the southern republic has cabled the United States department of state a request to refuse the British proposal. The cable said: "We learn it is the intention of the United States government to agree to the British proposals, which mean two-thirds of the now revenue would be given to our political enemies to renew warfare, and thus delay the liberating of China from international control. It means not only that General Chang Tso-lin will receive substantial revenues, but still added security will be created enabling him to float a loan and save his inflated currency from collapse."

Chen also declared that the permitting of this "rich custom looting" would result in a bloody struggle for Shanghai.

Press Unanimously Against It.

The Chinese press is almost unanimous in condemning the British proposals. They declare the appearance of liberality on the part of Great Britain is merely a sop thrown at China. They declare that hypocrisy prompted Great Britain to make the proposal, knowing that the other powers would not accede and that for commercial reasons, allow Great Britain to blame the others for aggression.

France Objects.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The French government has rejected the British government's proposals for a "new policy" toward China, it is announced by the foreign office. The French reply to the British note was not made public, but it is known that it was bitterly hostile.

Italy, it is announced, agreed with the British memorandum, provided that all of the other powers agree.

No reply has yet been received from the United States.

MINERS TO SEEK 6-HOUR DAY AND 5-DAY WEEK IN NEW AGREEMENT, REPORT

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 3.—The Indianapolis convention of the United Mine Workers of America that meets on Jan. 25 will draw demands for a five-day week and a 6-hour day, according to statements made by officials in District Five. The present wage scale, or a higher one will be demanded. Under no circumstances will a decrease be accepted, the officials said.

It was also declared that the conference between union officials and mine operators to frame a new agreement to succeed the Jacksonville agreement will be held in February either in New York or Cleveland, instead of Miami as announced previously.

The officials support their demand for a six-hour day and five-day week with the statement that it will make the miners more efficient and will not increase the cost of production thereby.

MEXICAN CRISIS IS CONCERN OF ALL U. S. LABOR

Victory of Oil Crowd Blow to Workers

By LAURENCE TODD,
(Federated Press)

WASHINGTON—(FP)— Under direct and indirect prompting from the State Department, American all companies controlling 85 per cent of the oil production in Mexico have defied the government of the republic to enforce its oil and land laws, which took effect Jan. 1.

Organized labor in the United States and Canada is affiliated with organized labor in Mexico in the Pan-American Federation of Labor, whose president is William Green and whose vice-president is Luis N. Morones, a member of the Calles cabinet at Mexico City.

Morones is minister of commerce and labor, and as such will have much to do with enforcing the law which requires the oil companies to take out permits for operation and development of the oil lands they claim to own, and which they acquired after the new constitution took effect in May, 1917.

More Serious Than "Oil."

At Pan-American Federation of Labor headquarters, in the A. F. of L. building in Washington, the attempt of Kellogg, acting for Standard Oil and other American oil interests, to coerce the Mexican nation into a surrender of its constitutional rights to its mineral lands is looked upon as something more serious than a dispute over oil.

It is seen as a blow at the Mexican government headed by Gen. Calles and brought to power by the Mexican Regional Federation of Labor. American investors in Mexico find the Mexican labor movement an obstacle to their schemes of quick exploitation, of the country. They see in this labor movement a threat to their future power, not only in Mexico but in Central and South America.

Sea Long Her Ahead.

If the Mexican labor movement, thru the Calles government, is successful in this struggle with Kellogg and the Standard Oil group, Mexican labor will become less and less cheap. It will compete less injuriously with American labor, but will steadily increase its share in the proceeds of industry in Mexico.

If it loses, and Mexico becomes more submissive to American exploiters, to that degree Mexican people will be forced to compete, by lower wage bidding, with American labor in the Southwest. But in the event of defeat the danger of a long war in Mexico against American domination will be increased.

Standard Oil, and Mellon's Gulf Oil, will insist on American intervention to protect their claims. Back of Standard Oil and Gulf Oil are a hundred other big financial and manufacturing interests that look forward to developing Central and South America as economic colonies of the United States. They see Mexico as a hotbed of labor sentiment that may spoil their future supply of cheap labor in the countries to the southward. They hope to break this rebel class spirit now, in Mexico, by a show of force on the part of the Washington government.

One Thousand of Cleveland's Jobless Almost Wreck Building Asking Work at Distributing Directories at $2.50

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CLEVELAND, Ohio—The offices of the Motten Distributing Co., 1010 St. Clair Ave., Cleveland, was the scene of a near riot when over a thousand jobless, seeking work, stormed the building.

The men began gathering at the doors of the company at 5:30 a. m. in response to a newspaper add for 100 men to distribute telephone directories. By 6:45 over a thousand men formed a milling mob in the rear of the building where they had been instructed to apply for jobs. When the rear door was opened the men made a rush forward each hoping to be in time to be hired. In the rush windows were broken and as the crowd inside grew, a panic broke out and the crowd surged into the main office of the company.

The men packed in like sardines, and unable to force their way out, were forced to stand for three hours while waiting to be hired. The company officials did not even condescend to inform them why no one had as yet been hired by 9:00 a. m., whether or not anybody would ever be hired. The men, many of whom had been out of work for months and were flat broke, were in no mood to be bullied and shoved about by the officials of the company, and riots then began to fly. Police received were called out and cleared the building with their usual brutal tactics. Later some 60 men were hired and the rest dispersed, and told to "keep moving."

FRANCE AND ITALY MASS TROOPS ALONG FRONTIER IN LATEST WAR MOVEMENT

This indicates the extent of unemployment in Cleveland at present. One thousand men fought for a job which pays the magnificent wages of $2.50 per day.

The Cleveland News came out with a two-line, seven-column streamer on front page, over its story of this struggle of the men unemployed to make a pitifully small wage.

And then there was a day's delay in the shipment of two car loads of the directories, so that the few who were hired were forced to wait 24 hours before starting in on the job.

LEFT WING DELEGATES TO I. L. G. W. JOINT BOARD ARE OVERWHELMINGLY ELECTED

Left wing delegates were elected by a vote of 800 out of 1,100 voters of Chicago Local No. 66 of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union in the election held this week, carrying into office ten executive board members out of thirteen. This is the largest proportional vote that was ever cast by any local of the I. L. G. W.

Molly Freedman, a vice-president of the International, openly worked with the right wing caucus. She promised all the support that the reactionary machine could deliver, financial or moral. Much money was spent by the machine to get the few votes. They even visited the homes of members and made promises to many of them.

The right wingers now openly talk of using violence if they cannot hold power with legal machinery.

SOVIET BUREAU ISSUES REPORT OF PROGRESS IN 1926

American Imports Fall as Others Make Gains

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3. —The following New Year's statement was issued by Boris E. Skvirsky, director of the Russian Information Bureau:

"The Soviet Union enters 1927 with its industrial output advanced beyond the pre-war mark, agricultural production back in the pre-war level, and a general and marked economic improvement during the past year. Since Sept. 1, foreign trade has shown a pronounced favorable balance. During the past year industrial production increased upwards of 40 per cent over the previous year, and a further increase of 17 per cent during the present year is predicted. In every way the situation of the country is far stronger today than at any time since the revolution.

"The Soviet Union has entered upon the first stages of a notable economic development, in which I am confident that American technical methods and American technicians will play a conspicuous role, in some respects the most important since the United States stood half a century ago. Its natural resources are enormous. Under the most favorable conditions will the many years before these can be fully exploited.

"Railway construction is an index of the recovery of the country. In 1913 Russia had only 42,560 miles of railway, and nearly a third of the mileage was destroyed during the world war and the revolution. Today upwards of 44,000 miles of railway lines are in operation. The new lines in process of construction include a South Siberian trunk line of 1,250 miles. Work on a new line to connect the cotton belt in Central Asia with the Siberian grain and timber lands to the north, 882 miles, will be begun in the spring. The railway service is now supplemented by 10,000 miles of airplane lines in regular operation.

"Notable progress is being made in super-power development. A dozen regional power plants are now in operation. The present capacity of public service stations is more than triple that of a decade ago, and new plants in process of construction will add 420,000 kilowatts. Work on the Dnieper river hydroelectric development, which will be the largest in Europe, will be begun in the spring, and $10,000,000 has been appropriated for the initial construction this year. Col. Hugh L. Cooper, the builder of Muscle Shoals, who has studied both the plans and the site, is now on his way to Moscow to consult with the Supreme Economic Council on the possibility of further association with this development.

"American-Soviet trade for 1926 will probably be somewhat less than $50,000,000, as compared with the record figure of $110,000,000 for 1925. America exports to the Soviet Union fell off nearly 40 per cent, and both Germany and England gained at the expense of American manufacturers. At present there are obvious handicaps to the development of commercial relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, which I hope will be removed in due course."

COMMUNISTS REPORTED EXECUTED SAID TO FACE LIFE IMPRISONMENT

PAN-AMERICAN UNION WITHOUT U. S., IS PLAN

Washington Disturbed Over Developments

NOTE:—The accompanying copyright report was sent out from Washington by the correspondent of the International (Hearst) News Service, George R. Holmes. It gives an important and interesting summary of the situation now facing Wall Street imperialism in Latin-America.

* * *

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3. — President Coolidge and his advisers are considerably disturbed over the increasing evidences of American unpopularity in the countries of Latin-America.

These evidences have been accompanied by circumstantial reports that a strong movement is afoot in Central and South America, backed by powerful influences, for the organization of a real pan-American union, with the United States on the outside looking in, rather than being the directing force, as is the case with the existing union.

Fight Yankee Dollar.

It has for its object the welding of the Spanish-speaking peoples of the western hemisphere into a cohesive organization to combat what many South American statesmen consider the persistent encroachment of "Yankee imperialism," and "dollar diplomacy."

There is reason to believe, from confidential reports reaching Washington, that this movement has gained considerable actual headway in the last few months, and that it centers in Mexico City, where the Calles government shows increasing signs of permanency and power. It is known, for instance, that the project has been seriously discussed, and at length, by high American officials and representatives of other South and Central American countries in Mexico City.

Wateh Chilean Ambassador.

Senor don Miguel Cruchaga Toroonal, the Chilean ambassador here, left Washington last night for Mexico City on a hurried and unexplained mission. He went at the direction of his government. This may or may not be significant, but it was so regarded today in Latin-American circles in Washington. And it was widely, though quietly, discussed.

There is scarcely a country between the Rio Grande and Cape Horn that has not some grievance against the United States. Some of them resent the economic grip of American bankers on their affairs; some the frequent landing of marines "to protect American lives and property"; others the state department's "interference" in their diplomatic affairs.

Mexico's grievances are of a century's standing, complicated just now by the controversy over Mexico's rights to enact and enforce her own laws governing foreign ownership of Mexican lands.

Both Chile and Peru are aggrieved over the age-old Tacna-Arica boundary dispute, which the state department has been for several years trying to "mediate" without success, and

ILLINOIS SOLONS MAY URGE SMITH ON WASHINGTON

Senator - Nominate Is Welcome as Pole-Cat

BULLETIN.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The south rose in revolt in the senate this afternoon against republican threats of political punishment for the democratic opposition to the seating of Frank L. Smith (R) of Illinois and William B. Vare (R) of Pennsylvania. Defending the treatment of Negro voters in the South, Senator Caraway (D) of Arkansas, announced southern democrats would oppose seating both Vare and Smith. He challenged the republicans to carry out their threats to investigate southern elections.

Shortly after the new southern attack was launched, the democrats succeeded in reviving a custom of 100 years standing in having senators take the oath by a majority vote of the chamber. It was revived in the case of Senator Nye (R) of North Dakota, and, of course, will be called up as a precedent when Senator Smith presents his credentials.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 3.—A demand on the United States senate that it seat Frank L. Smith of Dwight, senator-designate from Illinois, is expected to be one of the first acts of the Fifty-fifth general assembly when it convenes in this city Wednesday.

Representative Robert Scholes of Peoria, who will be re-elected speaker, on his arrival here today admitted that he had heard that such a resolution had been prepared and would be offered "right off the bat." He professed ignorance as to the identity of the author of the resolution.

Scholes said that friends of Smith were desirous of early action by the legislature as he (Smith) is expected to present his credentials in Washington this week.

The session is expected to open with thrills, for another resolution has been prepared asked for an investigation into Governor Len Small's defense fund contributions from state employes. As the governor's friends are overwhelmingly in control this resolution is expected to be sidetracked.

WASHINGTON — It is expected here that Frank L. Smith will present his credentials as a member of the senate on Wednesday or Thursday.

SELIGMAN & CO., BROWN BROS. AND WHITE CO. NAMED

Coolidge-Kellogg Rule in the Limelight

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—That the United States government's invasion of Nicaragua was definitely and directly inspired by Wall Street banking houses who have been using the Diaz regime as a means of gaining control of public utilities in the republic, is to be revealed by the senate.

Announcement has been made that the senate committee on foreign relations which has been investigating the Nicaraguan situation since the landing of American troops at Puerto Cabezas, has secured unimpeachable evidence revealing that the state department was following the direction of the bankers in ordering marines to Nicaragua.

Several Banking Houses Named.

The banking houses of J. W. Seligman and company of New York and Brown Brothers company of Baltimore have already been named as directly implicated in the situation, as has the J. G. White company of New York, a financing and engineering corporation. Other banking houses, including some of the biggest on Wall Street, are expected to be named by the senate committee.

"The state department has been playing hands-in-glove with the bankers in the Nicaraguan affair," was one statement made in connection with the exposure by the senators.

Financial relations of the American bankers with the Diaz regime are being probed. It is already known that the bankers loaned Diaz $7,000,000, receiving for the money control of the Nicaraguan National Bank and the railroads, which is legally owned by the people, as well as huge profits and commission fees.

Wall Street had planned to sink its tentacles deeper into Nicaraguan public utilities, but was spotted by the investigators, and saw in the liberal government of Dr. Sacasa a threat against their continuing robbing the Nicaraguan people. They were in control they were able to maintain their control. It was for the purpose of maintaining Diaz as a tool of the bankers and to crush the opposition of the liberals that the state department ordered U. S. gunboats and soldiers to Nicaragua.

A subcommittee of the foreign relations committee, under Senator Shipstead (Minnesota, Farmer-Labor), has been detailed to investigate and pre-

DEMS MUST BACK AL OR NOTHING, SAYS SUPPORTER

Party Threatened With Defeat by Smith Man

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—Unless the democrats will nominate Al Smith for the presidency in 1928 they are threatened and doomed, says an anonymous "Disciple" quoted in a letter to Washington correspondents.

Likens Others to Dogs

"If Smith is turned down," he writes, "a hound dog would do just as well as a human. Just a man's hand of election as any human democratic nominee. Only a fool would think that New York and other eastern states friendly to Smith would support any other democrat. Electing Smith to be the one man of a century worthy of the office of president. It is either Smith, a sure winner, or some other democrat, a sure loser, and many years of disruption and defeat for the democratic party.

Enter, Religion.

"Smith's enemies here feverishly investigated his private and public life and the only thing found to his discredit is that instead of professing some modern religion invented in a Nordic he persistently practices a religion founded by a foreign Jew in Jerusalem in the year A. D. 33."

No religion comes into the 1928 arena.

With the attack on the administration's entire policy in Latin-America that was precipitated by the Nicaraguan invasion already scheduled to break on the floor of the senate, this latest revelation forecasts the worst bombardment that any American administration has had to face, it is predicted.

Operations of the National City Bank, the largest bank in the United States and the world, will come under the spotlight of the senate investigation, it is predicted. It is known that negotiations were conducted between the Diaz government and this institution shortly after Diaz was inducted into office. Reports had it then that Diaz had offered to sell control of the Nicaraguan financial house to the American bankers.

New Victories for Revolution.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Jan. 3.—Liberal forces of Jr. Sacasa's government annihilated the Diaz armies in a battle at Telica on the west coast of Nicaragua and are now within 70 miles of Managua, capital of the conservative "government."

Defeat of the Diaz troops at Telica places the liberals in a strategic position for their march on Managua. The capture of Leon, which is only a short distance from Telica, is expected momentarily. Leon is the transportation center of all railroads leading into Managua and its capture means that Managua will be cut off from outside communication, making its capture comparatively certain.

Reports on the battle at Telica are meager, but it is indicated that many Diaz soldiers were made prisoners and much war material was seized by the liberals. Some 800 liberal soldiers took part in the battle.

Diaz Wails About Mexico.

President Diaz has issued a statement addressed to the "American and foreign public" in which he again makes the charge that Mexico is giving aid to the liberals and asks that the United States take steps to "rid Central America of the Mexican menace."

Diaz said that the present conflict is one "between his government and Mexico." "The future of Nicaragua and eventually of all Central America," he said, "is at stake in the present conflict between my government and the Calles government of Mexico."

He launched into the usual attack on Mexico, calling the government there "poisonous, anti-foreign and Bolshevist."

* * *

See War on Mexico.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The London press is viewing the Nicaraguan intervention by the United States as an attempt on the part of the American state department to prepare the way for war with Mexico.

The Spectator, a weekly review, declares that the United States wants to bring matters to a head with Mexico without exposing itself to the charge of being militaristic and aggressive, and that the Nicaraguan invasion is part of this program.

Other magazines deny the conclusion that the war spirit is growing in the United States and that the world can soon expect serious consequences in Latin America.

RISE OF FRANC BRINGS FRANCE TO FACE GREAT NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

PARIS.—The year 1926 came in with the fear of a floundering franc in the hearts of the French people; it goes out with the spectar of unemployment rising before them.

The rise of the franc has left many manufacturers with large stocks of raw materiel bought when the franc stood at 150 to 200 to the British pound. Importers are likewise stocked with goods bought with cheap money. They cannot sell without a loss and so far have resisted the advice to swallow the loss and go on.

Against the official figures of 60,000 unemployed, the radicals place the number as 200,000.

WOMEN MEET TO AID PAPER BOX MAKERS ON JAN, 7

Will Rally to Feed the Children

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Women's organizations in New York and vicinity are urged to be represented at a conference of the organizations on Jan. 7 for the purpose of enlisting the aid of all the working-class women in the strike of the Paper Box Makers' Union. Each organization is requested to send two delegates to the meeting that will be held at Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East Fourth street, near Third avenue.

On Strike 12 Weeks.

The Paper Box Makers' Union has been on strike for 12 weeks. They have waged a valiant fight against the bosses for better wages and conditions and will continue the fight, but their funds are low and they are in need of assistance to give food and clothing to the families of the strikers.

The women are urged to come to the aid of the strikers and help maintain the strikers' kitchen that was opened by the United Council of Workingclass Housewives, which is feeding from 800 to 1,000 strikers every day.

"We appeal to the mothers, who knew better than others what it means to have hungry children," says the call for the conference. "We appeal to the sisters who helped the Passaic strikers' children to help feed our children and maintain the kitchen and so help the paper box makers win their strike and so better their conditions."

Organizations which do not meet before this date and so cannot elect delegates are asked to be represented thru their officers.

House of Morgan Takes in Three New Members; Now 14 in Money Gang

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—What is considered to be one of the highest prizes in Wall Street—a partnership to J. P. Morgan and company—has been given to Francis Dejright Bartow, Arthur Marvin Anderson and William Ewing.

Announcement of the admission of these men to the firm increases the number of partners to fourteen.

Bartow entered the company in 1924 coming from the First National Bank of New York. He started with the bank in 1902, became assistant cashier in 1911 and a vice-president in 1915.

A. M. Anderson has been with J. P. Morgan since June 1914 as chief of their bond department. Ewing has been associated with the house of Morgan for the past ten years.

Mitchell Laughs At 'Good Will' Flight, Is Jitney Tour, He Says

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 3.—Flight of the United States army amphibian planes on a "good will" tour of Pan-American countries today termed a "jitney" journey by Wm. E. Mitchell, former brigadier general in the air service.

Mitchell, reduced from high rank because of his attacks on American defenses, especially in the field of aviation, said present flight is only "jitney" because it is only a leg of a great flight across the Antarctic which he organized in 1919.

Poor equipment is being used in the flight, he said, and flights are only being made when there isn't a cloud in the sky.

PAN-AMERICAN UNION WITHOUT U. S., IS PLAN

Washington Disturbed Over Developments

with the resultant unpopularity that usually goes with the peacemaker.

Columbia Has Grievance.

Colombia has also brought she received a square deal in the treaty which made a financial adjustment for the building of the Panama Canal.

Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Salvador, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, all have felt the weight of North America's financial or naval power in one way or another in the last quarter century.

Latin-America has seen the gradual encroachment of North American power and dominance into the south year by year. It has seen Cuba, Porto Rico, Panama, Haiti become virtual United States dependencies, with indications now that Nicaragua may go the same way.

The picture is not a pleasing one to those Latin diplomats who have dreams of a great Spanish-speaking union in the western hemisphere.

These recent events have now combined to bring the agitation to a head, according to well informed sources here.

They are:

(1) The controversy with Mexico, in which the United States challenges the right of Mexico to enact her own nation land laws.

(2) The Nicaraguan situation, in which the state department elevated Adolfo Diaz to the presidency and then sent warships and marines to lend him moral, if not actual, support. Diaz is a favorite with the American state department of many years standing.

Panama is Vassal State.

(3) The recently concluded Panama treaty, whereby Panama pledges herself to consider herself automatically at war with any power against which the United States goes to war. This treaty, which reduces Panama almost to the status of a vassal state, has been savagely criticized by the press of South America.

There is no doubt that President Calles of Mexico has been and is a prime mover in the agitation for a Spanish-speaking bloc to resist the creeping United States dominance to the south.

The Mexican government now has as one of its activities its own wireless news service into the Caribbean countries, which tells only what the state department characterizes as "radical propaganda," but which friends of Mexico say is merely "Latin-American views and news."

Propaganda Responsible for "softening" of the state department's policy in Nicaragua, which was somewhat brusque at first, and for the extreme caution with which the government is now dealings with Mexico in the land laws controversy.

Sormenti Protest Meeting Postponed

Due to a number of legal complications in connection with his case, Enea Sormenti, who is under bond awaiting decision on a deportation charge, has been obliged to return to New York City and to postpone the meetings which were planned for him in the course of his tour.

Among these meetings was the one scheduled in Chicago for Thursday, January 6, at the West Side Auditorium, under auspices of the International Labor Defense and Anti-Fascist Alliance of Chicago. Because of the latest development in the tour, the meeting has been indefinitely postponed.

This holds for the Chicago meeting, since in some of the other cities where Sormenti meetings had been arranged, they will be held with other noted Italian and English speakers. Workers are urged to attend these meetings wherever held as that they may add their voice of protest against the plans of the American authorities to deport Sormenti to Italy, where certain imprisonment, and possibly execution, awaits him at the hands of the bloodthirsty fascisti.

Tax Shift Aids Foreign Aggressions.

WASHINGTON. — Untaxing of the wealthy and shifting of the cost of war to the wage earners, farmers and small salaried people has favored foreign concession-hunting and aggression abroad, says Benj. C. Marsh, secretary of the People's Reconstruction League, in a New Year review of tax shifting.

In 1919, he finds, persons whose net income was over $50,000 paid federal income taxes of $729,141,000; while in 1924 this class, altho its total net income was 15 per cent more than in 1919, paid only $440,358,000 in income taxes. The surplus sought investment, and this means an annual addition of about 750,000,000 to the pressure for American domination of weaker countries.

JOHN THE NAVY, JOYS, AND EAT CORNED BEEF HASH FOR BREAKFAST

SAN DIEGO, Calif.—As a result of eating corned beef hash for breakfast, aboard the U. S. S. Ringgold at the destroyer base here, 21 blue-jackets, court-martial prisoners, have been removed to the naval hospital.

Capt. John Church, base commandant, says that the food was apparently spoiled. The 21 bluejackets unanimously concur in that opinion.

APPROPRIATIONS FAIL TO PLEASE NAVY BOOSTERS

Air Service to Get Along on $8,410,000

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The administration's naval program was laid before congress today, thus paving the way for the bitter fight to be waged over strengthening America's sea power.

The program was brought out in the naval supply bill, carrying $316,469,530 for the next fiscal year, a reduction of $5,500,000 and with no money provided for cruiser construction to bring the United States navy up to the 5-5-3 parity with Great Britain and Japan. It was laid before the house by the administration-controlled appropriations committee. The naval committee is on the other side of the controversy and will fight for new cruiser construction.

"With respect to new vessels, the committee is ready to proceed in providing the requisite funds whenever the president shall so recommend," said the committee's report.

The $23,250,000 was recommended for new ships, all either under construction or for which plans and specifications have been completed. These are two aircraft carriers, three submarines, six river gunboats being built in China, two light cruisers under construction and three others for which plans have been drawn.

Marine Corps Cut.

The navy's enlisted strength is kept at 72,500, while the marine corps was slashed 1,200 men over the protest of Major General Le Jeune, commandant of the corps.

Recommending an appropriation of $19,065,283 for the navy's air corps, the committee asserted that this amount will carry on the five-year air program on a slightly reduced scale. This amount is $724,712 above current appropriations.

The committee, however, rejected the appeal of the navy's air experts for $1,500,000 to begin construction of a huge dirigible, of more than twice the capacity of the Los Angeles.

The navy's air secretary, Edward P. Warner, took issue with Coolidge's recommendations for delay, a record of hearings on the bill disclosed. Congress last year authorized two dirigibles, but made no appropriation.

Five-Year Program.

The bureau of aeronautics had requested $9,072,300 to purchase new planes, and this amount was cut to $8,410,000. Reduction of plane wastage, however will make possible substantial progress on the program, which calls for a strength of 1,000 planes at the end of five years, the committee reported.

Galaxy of Stars in Baseball World Are Summoned in Probe of Scandal

Clarence Rowland, former manager of the Chicago White Sox, and Ray Schalk, present manager, are in Chicago, the first to arrive in answer to telegrams sent out by baseball commissionar. Kenesaw M. Landis, requesting all members of the White Sox and Detroit teams of 1917 to appear in the commissioner's office here on Wednesday to answer "crooked baseball" charges made by Charles "Swede" Risberg.

Risberg, former White Sox shortstop who was expelled from organized baseball for his alleged part in the crooked world series of 1919, opened before Commissioner Landis that the Chicago White Sox "bought" a Chicago series from Detroit in September of 1917. He named practically every member on the Chicago team at that time, including Ray Schalk, Eddie Collins, and Urban "Red" Faber.

Rowland, now an umpire in the American League, came to Chicago from Milwaukee to "face the charges." His first impression was, Risberg is a barefaced liar." Schalk, who hurried here from Farmersville, Ill., where he was visiting relatives, was equally emphatic in denouncing his former teammate.

At least 21 of the 38 men summoned are still affiliated with organized baseball and will be affected by whatever decision Landis makes.

Oscar Felleck's reported offer to furnish additional testimony for a consideration of $1,000 fell on deaf ears at the commission's office.

The Core of American Capitalism's Apple of Prosperity Is Rotten

By J. LOUIS ENODAHL.

THE huge overdoses of "business optimism" injected into the capitalist press "reviews of 1926" were unable to put a healthy aspect on the bitter condition of agriculture.

Even the most adept of the prosperity painters had to put in huge black spots indicating the dark outlook for the farmers.

When the purchasing powar of farm products has fallen from 89 per cent of the pre-war par, that prevailed last year, to 81 per cent this year, then there is something to worry about.

The attitude of big business toward agriculture, in these days of the splitting of huge stock dividends, can well be stated in the words of United States Senator George W. Norris (republican-Nebraska) in an article in the magazine, Current History, as follows:

"Mr. Richard B. Mellon, brother of our secretary of the treasury and president of the Mellon National Bank of Pittsburgh, on the eve of his recent departure for Europe, was quoted as saying that fundamental conditions were sound. To prove this he cited the steel business, which showed that great improvement was taking place and that the rolling mills were operating at a greater capacity than ever and turning out large orders. Incidentally, he said, 'Grain prices have fallen off, which is as it should be.' When the great leaders of banking and industry can see no further than the artificial prosperity that comes to big business while those who tell us the farms are getting no return for their labor, than indeed we have a right to question the wisdom of our financial leaders."

Senator Norris, of course, asks his questions and then remains in the same party with the Mellons, this financial leaders with the Mellons in control. So he gets the Mellon answer.

The Mellon answar was recently given in part by Coolidge. It was that where there is a surplus crop, as in the cotton belt, the planting area should be cut down. Other crops should be raised. But the republican senator from Nebraska, who remains in Wall Street's party, is compelled to declare that, "The farmers of America produce a surplus of nearly all the principle farm products."

It will do the cotten farmers of Texas, for instance, no good to quit raising cotten and return to cattle raising. That will be only the inevitable meat surplus. Today the cry goes over the land to, "Wear more cotton!" Tomorrow it will be, if the farmers desire to cattle raising, "Eat more meat!" Today the demand also is, on behalf of the corn belt, "Eat more corn!" But if the corn farmers switch to wheat manner. In view of the pressing conditions, however, the Farmer-Labor elements lined up behind this latter measure. The McNary-Haugen bill, especially as it appears in its changed form before the present session of congress, is merely lookad upon as an emergency measure made necessary by the depressed condition of agriculture.

* * *

It is to be hoped, therefore, that the forthcoming Farmer-Labor conference at St. Paul will go into this problem much more fundamentally. It must be realized that legislation that is acceptable to the multi-millionaire, Frank O. Lowden, and the Chicago banker, Vice President Charles G. Dawes, can be of little or no benefit to the farmer, except to continue his bondage to the great predatory interests. This bondage helps also to shackle the workers still more securely in the cities. The Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party must take up this question and receive it from the viewpoint of the workers and farmers as a class, the producing class.

It must expose the rotten core of American capitalism's apple of prosperity.

Farmer-Labor Party Has Always Been Interested in Relief for Farmers, Says Shipstead

The Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party has always been interested in relief for the farmers, it originally favored the Norris-Sinclair bill in 1924, When the McNary-Haugen proposition came along as a compromise, it was admitted that it did not meet the situation in a thorough manner. In view of the pressing conditions, however, the Farmer-Labor elements lined up behind this latter measure. The McNary-Haugen bill, especially as it appears in its changed form before the present session of congress, is merely lookad upon as an emergency measure made necessary by the depressed condition of agriculture.

STUDENTS SHOW OPPOSITION TO WAR EDUCATION

Imperialism of U. S. Also Flayed

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 3.—Only the inveking of a precedent that it is against the policy of the national student conference to pass resolutions prevented the passing of a resolution condemning compulsory military training in the colleges of the United States by an overwhelming vote. The resolution was not passed, but there was no mistake about the attitude of the 2,000 students who attended the conference here. They are against military training in the colleges.

Scora U. S. Militarism.

The guns of Young America, as represented by the delegates, were trained on American imperialism at the conference as well as at military training. A resolution condemning the U. S. government's imperialism was introduced and warmly supported, but was not passed for the same reason as the military training resolve.

Fight Progress.

Progress is being made to gain the abolition of the training in the colleges, Roswell Barnes and Prof. George Coe of the committee on militarism in education, told the students The number of colleges where it affects is now cut to 81, they reported. A fight is being conducted, they said, with chances for victory in Minnesota, Nebraska, and Oklahoma, where military training exists in its worst form.

The students were warned of a possible war with Japan by a Japanese student, Susumu Kobe, who declared that anti-American feeling is strong in Japan because of the U. S. immigration laws.

Turn to Sex.

Turning from militarism and imperialism, the students launched into a discussion of the "sex problem."

Dr. Edith H. Swift, lecturer on social hygiene, told the students that "compulsory postponement of sex gratification until after marriage adds to happiness and promotes the environment into which children come into the world." She said that when "sex gratification can come from my career and is easy to obtain there is no spiritual or sentimental element."

Jail Conspiracy Case Still in Spot Light; Say Jury Was Fixed

Charges that the jury was fixed which acquitted Sheriff Peter M. Heffman, Frankford Lake, Terence Brennan and five others in federal court on accusations of conspiracy to obstruct justice were being investigated today by the federal attorney's office.

"I believe the jury was fixed," Assistant Federal District Attorney Thompson, prosecutor at the trial, declared. "The government presented evidence which we thought and the presiding judge thought was conclusive evidence of guilt, and we were confident of convictions."

Judge Leon Henderson of the Peoria district, who presided at the trial, has been notified of the investigation and was expected by Thompson to issue warrants upon the evidence obtained.

EVERYONE HAPPY AND CONTENTED IN PHILIPPINES, WOOD

General Doesn't Like Thompson Report

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—General Wood, military governor of the Philippine Islands, has attacked the Thompson report on the situation in the islands, in a statement made public here. Wood declared that the Filipinos should not be given any more autonomy than they now have, hitting the Thompson statement that the Filipinos should be given more local government discretion. He also declared that Thompson was "all wrong" in reporting there was a universal demand in the islands for independence.

"Have Enough Government."

Speaking on autonomy, Wood remarks: "Indeed the autonomy granted, as represented by Filipino participation in the government, is so great that American participation in the government has been reduced to the lowest point consistent with the maintenance of that decree of authority that is necessary to discharge effectively the obligations and responsibilities of sovereignty." He did not explain just what "obligations and responsibilities of sovereignty" entailed.

"All Happy and Contented."

"The people are contented and happy. I know of no people who are more so," said Wood in answer to Thompson's statement that there was widespread demand for independence. "There has been little or no political agitation outside of Manila," says the governor, painting a rosy picture of satisfied and contented Filipinos.

"Unselfish United States."

"The unselfish policy of the United States government in the Philippines is being better understood by the people," Wood declared.

Wood blames the "radicals" for the impression that the Filipinos are dissatisfied. "There have been no responses on the part of the people to the efforts of the radicals," he said. "That they have not responded is highly creditable to their good sense and loyalty and is indicative of their contentment and satisfaction with the existing government," he says. "Had they not been loyal and contented the efforts of these agitators might have caused some trouble," the general philosophized.

Wood waxed angry with the "radicals," who he says, attack the character of the Filipinos who do not agree with them, "charge them with being disloyal to their own people and attempt thus to destroy their standing in the communities in which they live."

Germany Wants French Soldiers Disarmed to Stop Civilian Attacks

BERLIN, Jan. 3.—The Rhineland commission has been requested by the German government to prevent French soldiers who are stationed in the occupied territory from carrying guns while dressed in civilian clothes and off duty. The request was made in those made in negotiations that have started to obtain better relations between German citizens and the allies' soldiers.

A recent incident, when a French officer, who was off duty, killed one German and wounded another, in a brawl, prompted negotiations.

Boy Mourned as Dead Found by Girl

Some weeks ago a seven-year-old boy was found lying in a New York street with an artery of his right foot severed. Taken to Flower hospital, an operation saved his life, but he could not identify himself. During a party in the children's dispensary at the hospital the boy was wheeled thru a neighboring ward, where Frances Trobato, 7, recovering from pneumonia, recognized the boy as her playmate, Nicholas Ritzo. His parents had mourned him as dead or kidnaped. Photo shows young Nicholas with Frances and their nurses, Helen Reese and Frances Maguire.

Disbursements in Dividends and Interest in 1926 Almost Equal to Total Wages Paid Factory Workers

By LELAND OLDS, Federated Press.

Corporation profits for 1926 may reach $12,000,000,000 William P. Helm estimates in the Chicago Journal of Commerce. Out of this, he figures that the corporations have handed the stockholders more than $6,000,000,000 in cash and stock dividends. Never before has there been such a jubilee for the rich.

"In addition to dividends," says Helm, "American corporations paid out nearly $3,500,000,000 in interest, mainly on their funded debt. Thus the total payments to American stock and bond holders in 1926 run to more than $9,000,000,000. No other year of which there is a record shows so large a distribution generally of the rewards of business."

The aggregate cash dividends distributed in 1926 by the corporate groups were:

| | In Millions |
|---|---|
| Mining and quarrying | 250 |
| Construction | 50 |
| Tobacco and food products | 200 |
| Textiles | 100 |
| Leather and products | 37 |
| Rubber goods | 20 |
| Lumber and products | 120 |
| Paper, pulp and products | 60 |
| Printing and publishing | 80 |
| Oil | 550 |
| Stone, clay, glass | 55 |
| Metal manufacturing | 1,000 |
| Other manufacturing | 125 |
| Transport and utilities | 1,100 |
| Trade | 750 |
| Banking and insurance | 900 |
| Miscellaneous | 200 |

The largest stream of dividends to the owning class flows from transportation and public utilities, that is, from railroads, telegraph and telephone companies, rapid transit, lighting and power corporations. These furnish nearly one-fourth of all the dividends. If we could ascertain the dividends on equipment for railroads and other utilities we would probably find that at least a third of all dividends originated in this group of services.

The $9,000,000,000 paid in 1926 to the owners of the country's corporations was nearly equal to all the wages paid to real producers in the country's factories. But the wages went to people who spent them almost immediately for the necessaries of life. Dividend and interest payments on the other hand, went to individuals with such large incomes that only a small part could be spent for the necessaries and comforts of life. The remainder went to provide the rich with unnecessary mental services or to increase the insecurity of the wage earner's life by over-expanding the country's productive power.

BANK PRESIDENT DROPS DEAD IN PLACE WHICH HIS EMPLOYEES LOOTED

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 3.—A bank president dropped dead here after most of his subordinates had looted the institution.

First Rush Parke, bookkeeper, disappeared and was found to be $105,000 short in his accounts. The assistant cashier fired a bullet into his head, and an investigation disclosed that he had taken about $300,000 of the bank's money.

Two weeks ago the bank closed what there was left to close.

Then Harry Cohn, the president of the leased bank, the American Savings Bank and Trust Co., while in the building, dropped dead at the age of 78.

ENGLAND UNEASY AT NEW FRENCH-GERMAN ENTENTE

Sees France Breaking Away from Britain

LONDON, Jan. 3.—What appears to be great friendship now between the French and German foreign departments is looked upon with distavor by Downing street. That France is growing farther away from Great Britain and closer to Germany is exemplified, it is indicated, by the present Chinese situation, in which France refused to agree with even a part of Great Britain's memorandum.

Friday Independant.

France is now feeling more independent from both England and the United States, it is indicated here, as the result of increasing "friendship" with Germany.

England had hoped to draw Germany into the British group in the league of nations, since Germany's admittance, but the exact opposite is occurring, it is said, and this is causing England some chegrin.

Briand Makes Promises.

It is understood that M. Briand, French foreign minister, has promised Stresemann that he will not invoke the auntry of the league on German disarmament within the next two years, and as a further gesture of good feeling said that he would bring up the matter of complete evacuation of the Rhine in six months, provided there were no complications with Poland during that period.

Italy with England.

Italy's acceptance of the British Chinese proposals is said to be prompted, not so much by Italy's agreement with the British policy as because Italy is anxious to ally with Great Britain against France.

Fascist Italy Is Hard Hit in Boosting Lira

ROME.—Having to choose between inflation and the seizure of short-term treasury bonds, Mussolini compelled Count Volpi to take the latter course in boosting up the value of lira. As a result many manufacturers are short of working capital, since exports are falling off.

The big Fiat automobile concern closed down for 15 days at Christmas. The "Italia" works have closed indefinitely. It is reported that when the director of the Viscosa artificial silk works threatened to close, Mussolini told him he would be arrested if he did. When he replied: "Then I'll be arrested," Mussolini backed water and sent him home with 200,000,000 lira to carry on with.

Count Volpi is said to be virtually a dictator, and the Duce will not permit him to resign in disgust.

Predictions are that if there is no inflation to keep the gills and factories running, spring will see wide sale unemployment. In that event, it is expected that the government will take over industry. The middle class are especially hard hit and have been stripped as well of all civic responsibility, since the fascists now rule where formerly the middle class had charge of local government.

Back to Ghendi.

GAUHATI, India. — "Back to Ghandi" is the slogan of the recent sessions of the Indian National Congress. It favors a return to the policy of non-cooperation with England and the boycott of foreign-made cloth.

COOK, OF BRITISH MINERS, FAVORS LIQUIDATING MINERS' INTERNATIONAL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW.—The old 'Miners' International is far too rotten ever to be reorganized, in the opinion of A. J. Cook, the general secretary of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, who is here on a visit. Cook favors the liquidation of the old international and the formation of an Anglo-Russian Miners' Committee as the basis of a new international.

His again charges the General Council of the British Trades Unions with having liquidated the general strike.

During the strike, he said, the British miners received financial support of 19,000,000 rubles, of which over 11,000,000 came from the workers in the Soviet Union.

FASCIST GOVERNMENT IN LITHUANIA ATTACKS JEWS, GERMANS IN NEW TERRORS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WARSAW, Poland, Jan. 3.—Fresh terror is being launched by the fascist Lithuanian government, this time against Jews and German nationals in the country, are reported. More than 150 Jews have been arrested on the orders of the new reactionary government and court martialed. All Germans who are acting as officials in the city of Memel have been ordered to leave the country by Jan. 1.

Workers and peasant organizations have been ordered to disband on the same date. Newspapers unfavorable to the government have been suppressed.

These actions followed the murder of leaders of the Communist Party in Lithuania last week and the general reign of terror against proletarian leaders thruout the country.

Italy Tightens Grip, by Pact, on Near East

GENEVA.—It has leaked out here that an Arab paper published in this city that a treaty was signed on Sept. 2 between Italy and Yemen, on the Red Sea.

By the treaty Italy will widen her policy of penetration in the Near East and encircle Abyssinia. The move is watched with anxiety by both France and England. Yemen has a population of ten millions and could easily put into the field an army of 200,000 men.

Hamburg Port Bureau Offers Its Facilities

HAMBURG.—"Stay away from all missions, churches and such places, and leave the capitalist press to ship owners and their petty slaves," reads a card, printed in English, which the international port bureau of this city is handing out to unsuspecting seamen. The card invites them to make use of the bureau's reading and conversation rooms, where they are assured of finding workingmen papers and a library in various languages.

Polish Magnate Plans Trust.

WARSAW.— M. Keidron, the steel magnate of Upper Silesia, is planning to buy interest in the iron industries in Austria, Hungary, and Czecho-Slovakia to complete negotiations for a merger, which he hopes later to unite to the great steel trust of France, Germany, Belgium, and Luxemburg.

U. S. CATHOLICS BACKING VILLISTAS IN NEW ATTACK ON MEXICAN GOVERNMENT

DURANGO, Mexico, Jan. 3.—Two former Villa lieutenants are attempting to foment religious feeling here against the Mexican government. They are Juan Gallindo and Nicholas Fernandez, who have joined hands to lead a proposed rebellion on religious grounds. They are backed by American and Mexican semi-religious organizations, reliable reports assert.

U. S. Refuses to Sell Planes to Mexico, Will Build Own As Result

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 3.—Refusal of the United States government to allow the Mexican government to purchase airplanes made in that country has prompted the Mexican government to negotiate with European firms for machinery with which to build its own planes.

Planes were wanted by the government to be used to crush the rebellion of the Yaqui Indians, which was started several months ago by catholics. The Indians are holding out in mountain passes, which make attacks by ordinary means unavailing.

An airplane factory existed here several years ago, but it was discontinued because the government believed it could purchase United States planes more cheaply. The United States embargo caused it to decide to reopen the factory with the latest equipment—bought in Europe.

Pilsudski Would Put Strong Gag on Press

WARSAW—Editors of all shades of opinions and politics have united to protest against a new press decree, more drastic that the recent one which was killed in parliament. They charge Pilsudski himself of being the author of the new repressive measure. This he denies.

Under the new decree, which is not yet in effect, any paper offending the government may not only be suppressed but suspended, its printing plant dismantled, and its editor barred from editing any other paper.

France Imports From U. S.

PARIS—The chief source of French imports for the first nine months of 1926 was the United States. Gain was chiefly in oils, copper, cotton, motors, fruits, and paint. There was a falling off in cereals and tobacco.

Island People Starving

MANILA. — Several hundred persons, the sola inhabitants of the Batanes islands, the most northern of the Philippine group, are starving, as practically no food is left them. So far the authorities have failed to find a ship to go to them with succor.

No Sole War Guilt.

LEAGUE MAY GO INTO U. S. LATIN-AMERICA CRISIS

Treaty With Panama Is Especially Under Fire

PARIS, Jan. 3.—Possibility that the United States' policies in Latin America would be made the subject of discussion at the league of nations, especially its present invasion of Nicaragua and the treaty with Panama, is being voiced in diplomatic circles.

Members to Protest.

It is highly probable, it is said, that protests will be made by Latin-American members of the league. This would definitely bring the United States before the league of nations "bar." But even if no protest is made the subject is likely to come up, as Panama is a member of the league.

Panama Under Fire.

The treaty that Panama signed with the United States, by which she virtually surrenders her sovereignty and makes her into a colony of the United States, violated a number of her obligations as a member of the league, it is pointed out.

There is perhaps more protest in international law discussions against the Panama treaty than the Nicaraguan affair.

Denounces Imperialism.

Pertinax in the Echo de Paris says that if the world accepted the arrangement between the United States and Panama it will be difficult to say anything tomorrow if Germany makes a similar arrangement with Austria.

"The absorption of Panama proves, no matter what one says," he writes, "that American imperialism exists. It differs from European efforts at hegemony only by the weakness of the obstacles that it meets."

Davis Would Ratify Yankee-Turkish Pact

NEW YORK.—John W. Davis, who ran as democratic nominee for president in 1924 on a platform that opposed the American-Turkish treaty negotiated at Lousanne, now favors its ratification.

He writes that at least 27 other nations have made treaties with Turkey on no more favorable terms than are offered us, and says it is our strength, but vanity, to utterly ignore the considered judgment of other sovereign powers."

NEW JAPANESE MIKADO TO STRIVE FOR SAME 'GREAT AIMS' AS ANCESTORS, SAYS

TOKIO, Japan, Jan. 3.—The new emperor of Japan, in a statement to the people on his accession to the throne, has declared that he will follow the same policies that his "illustrious ancestors" laid out.

"It is our resolve to observe the fundamental rules of state, cultivate our inherited virtue and maintain intact the glorious tradition set by our ancestors," he said.

He said he would "unite the efforts of the whole empire in promoting the solidarity of the nation, in strengthening and further the foundation of the national existence and securing forever the prosperity of our people to the end that the brilliant work of the imperial restoration may shed fresh lustre."

The empire must progress and improve, he declared.

The Bloody Fascisti Are the Masters of Lithuania

By ANTHONY BIMBA.

LAST Tuesday a cable brought the news from Moscow that four of our comrades, leaders of the Communist Party of Lithuania as well as leaders of the awakened labor movement of the country, were shot down in cold blood by the newly established fascisti government of Lithuania. Their names are K. Pozela, Greifenberg, Chorny and K. Giedris. The news of the same day also informed us that about 500 class conscious workers and poor peasants were hunted down and placed in dungeons. One hundred and fifty "Jews" that is Communists, are being court-martialled and no doubt, many of them will have to face the firing squad. Every newspaper opposed to the bloody fascisti has been closed, their headquarters ransacked and burned, trade unions have been disbanded and their leaders arrested. Working class and peasant co-operatives have been destroyed, clubs and societies closed.

There are some of the deeds of the new regime which has been established only a few days ago, to be concrete—on December 17, 1926. Who are these fascisti? How did they come into power?

UNTIL May, 1926, the clerical regime has ruled the country almost since the establishment of the Lithuanian Republic, nine years ago. It was the most reactionary, the most bloody regime known in the history of the human race. It was established with the help of German machine guns and with the financial assistance of England and America. It ruled the country ruthlessly. A real bloody inquisition of the middle ages was brought into life in that little country. With the exception of the opportunistic social-democratic party of Lithuania, none of the labor organizations, sincerely fighting for the interests of the working class, were allowed to exist legally. No working class newspaper was allowed to be published. Priests, bankers and kulaks were the masters of the country. Hundreds of workers were thrown into prison and tortured in the most dastardly manner. Many of the leaders of the Communist movement were murdered. Many of them went insane from the tortures in the prisons.

Economically the country became absolutely disorganized. Even those industries that were in existence during the time when Lithuania was ruled by the Russian czar were now ruined. Thousands of workers could not find employment. Peasants were overburdened with taxation, they could not make the ends meet. Only the masters were fattening.

THEN came the elections of the new parliament or seimas. It was in May, 1926. There were many different parties participating in these elections. On the side of the clericals there were three main groups—the christian democratic party, the federation of "labor," and the farmers' party composed of kulaks. Then followed the populist party representing mainly the middle class farmers, then the social-democratic party, and the nationalist party composed of avowed supporters of the owners of large estates. The leaders of the last mentioned party are Smetona and Voldemaras, the present leaders of the bloody fascisti. There were also national minority parties, which took part in the elections, too. The Communists could not take part in the elections under their own name, but they tried to take part under assumed names. This made it a very difficult job and they could take part only to a very limited extent.

The clerical regime used the most coercive measures to win the elections. The priests of the catholic church told the faithful that if they voted for the opposition parties, they will go directly to hell. Nevertheless, the clerical regime became so corrupt, so oppressive, so bloody, that the workers, the peasants and the middle class farmers were about ready to get rid of them and in spite of the terror they cast their votes for the opposition parties. The results of the elections were as follows: The clerical bloc elected 20 representatives to the seimas out of a total number of 85. The social-democratic party, 16 representatives; the populist party, 22; the nationalist party, 3. The national minorities sided with the social-democrats and populists. Also, the nationalist party with Voldemaras and Smetona swung to the side of populists and social-democrats. Therefore, the opposition parties had a majority to the newly elected saimas and they formed a coalition government. The clericals became the opposition party.

AT the time of the elections there was a question whether the clericals would give up the government to the social-democrats and populists. It was thought that they would use force to maintain the power, but it seems that they weighed the situation and found that the occasion was not opportune at that moment to maintain power by force. They saw that the masses are against them. They could not trust the ranks of the army, therefore, they decided to submit to the results of the elections and allow the social-democrats and populists to establish a new government.

The coalition government began to work by allowing a little more freedom for the masses. The workers were permitted to openly organize into trade unions, amnesty was declared for political prisoners. That is about all. The Communist Party of Lithuania, of course, was still forbidden to function, nevertheless, the released Communists found ways and means to get into contact with the masses of the workers.

Now a struggle began for the control of the trade unions between the Communists and the social-democrats. The Communists saw danger in the splitting of the trade unions and, therefore, worked very hard to save them from disruption. They saw that the reactionaries, tho defeated in the elections, were rallying their forces and were preparing to make an onslaught upon the workers at the first opportunity. Therefore, the Communists again and again proposed to the social-democrats to form a united front against the reactionaries, but of course, the social-democrats would not even listen to this proposition. In view of the fact that the latter were now in the government they could use police force against the Communists. Trade unions which sided with the Communists were suppressed in many places, but in spite of this new persecution of revolutionary workers, the influence of the Communists increased by leaps and bounds.

In the meantime the coalition government turned its face from Warsaw and sought peace with the Soviet Union. The result was the signing of the non-aggression treaty with the Soviet government.

NOW let us come to the clericals or the reactionaries. They became the most militant and the most active element in the country. They worked day and night, openly and secretly, to capture the power of the government. Finally they were in secret alliance with the Polish fascisti, they raised the cry that the coalition government is working in the interest of the Poles by giving them freedom in the country and is selling the country to Russia by signing the non-aggression treaty and allowing the trade unions to function in the country, which are falling into the hands of the Communists. Their press became the most violant opponent of the government, openly propagating the necessity of the overthrow of the government. They revived the organization of the so-called "volunteers," which in 1920 slaughtered the rebellious workers of Lithuania. The association of "Shaulial," composed of the sons of the kulaks, was effectively used by the reactionaries. The students also joined hands with the reactionaries.

What did the coalition government do? It simply allowed the clericals and the fascisti to organize openly and it did not take a step to save its own skin. It even did not do anything to weed out the clericals or reactionaries from the army. The social-democrats and the populists had the cabinet, but the army was in the hands of the clericals. It was as clear as daylight that the reactionaries are about ready to make a coalition government and take over the power once more. Now they began to make open manauvers against the government.

ON November 21 a demonstration of the students of the University of Kovno was organized with the slogan for the overthrow of the government. The police of Kovno tried to suppress the demonstration. The fascisti led by the former clerical ministers, fought the police with sticks and knives. Still the coalition government did not make a step to suppress the fascisti movement. On the other hand, the clericals or the fascisti raised a cry all over the country that the police of the coalition government smashed the heads of the "patriots" who are ready to "die" for the country.

Then came the fateful day of December 16. The seimas opened. The reactionaries openly declared that they are ready to smash the government. To the great consternation of the social-democrats and populists, the leaders of the nationalist party, Smetona and Voldemaras, appeared on the side of the reactionaries and said that they are also ready to smash the coalition government. By the way, it is important to note here that the right wing of the populists also, especially after the Fascisti demonstration of November 21, were openly sympathizing with the reactionaries. It seems that they even had secret dealings with the clericals on the question of the overthrow of the coalition government.

The discussion in the seimas dragged on all day with the ministers pleading and appealing against the attack of the reactionaries. Night came and the session still dragged on. Three o'clock in the morning and the seimas was still in session. About this time Voldemaras and Smetona appeared at the door of the hall with a group of armed officers and declared that they are the masters of the situation, that the coalition government exists no more, that the seimas is dissolved and the army is taking over the reigns of the government. The work of the reactionaries is completed and the bloody fascist dictatorship is established. The labor movement is smashed. The revolutionary workers are being jailed and shot down.

How long the Lithuanians will tolerate this bloody regime we cannot say now. The future alone will answer this question. In the meantime, it is the duty of the labor movement of this country to intensify its fight against fascism, which is engulfing one country after another in Europe. Its poison is being spread in this country also among the workers, especially by the foreign born.

FIRE FIGHTERS WANT EQUALITY IN PENSION PAY

Propose Disregard of Official Rank

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—Old age pensions for city fire fighters in the United States and Canada should be based on a flat rate of pension, regardless of the rank of the pensioner, and every fire fighter should be required to contribute from 1 to 2 per cent of his salary toward the pension fund, says President W. Baer of the International Association of Fire Fighters.

Based on Survey.

His opinion is based upon the experience of scores of municipal fire departments, disclosed in replies to a general questionnaire which the union has sent to 800 cities. This questionnaire covers all the important facts as to conditions in each city fire department, and the results of the study are to be made the basis of recommendations by a special commission of the International union.

Firemen Contribute.

"The ideal pension plan," Baer told the Federated Press, "is one in which the city creates a board of pension administration, to which the firemen are by ordinance authorized to elect some of their own representatives. They earn this right by contributing a considerable share of the pension fund. If they pay from 1 to 2 per cent of their salaries into this pension fund their contribution is likely to be from 20 to 30 per cent of the total. In cities where the firemen have no representation on the board the fund has generally been depleted by granting big pensions to the chiefs and sub-chiefs.

"The only sound policy is to pay the same amount to a retired chief as to a retired man of the rank and file. Where the men have a say that is done. In those cases the chiefs do not contribute any more than the ordinary fireman."

Half pay is the pension rate favored by the union officers. They propose that the rate be calculated as half of the normal pay of the "largest body" of men in each department. This keeps all pensions equal in each fire department. No scheme is advanced to equalize pensions as between one city and another, beyond the general rule that firemen in each city will tend to agitate for a wage rate equal to that in other places of equal size and of like living standards.

Predicts Big Fight in Bituminous Coal

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—A strike in the bituminous coal industry next spring was predicted here by Paul U. Kellogg, editor The Survey, who addressed the American Association for Labor Legislation. He said it would be "deeper, more bitter, more searching, more baffling than any we have had in the country in years."

EMPLOYMENT BUREAU FEELS GOOD ABOUT '26

Jones Sees "Healthy" Year Ahead

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Optimism, the official keynote of statements from appointees of the Coolidge administration, marks the review of 1926 issued by the U. S. employment service, of which Francis J. Jones is chief. He says the past year was more than prosperous, and 1927 should equal or surpass it in opportunities for jobs.

"Remarkable Year."

"The year just passed into history," says Jones, "was remarkable for its industrial activity; its building construction, which almost equalled the phenomenal record of 1925; the soil producing bumper crops; railroads scoring new high records; the automobile and truck industry with the banner year to its credit, and road construction on a large scale—all reflecting in a tremendous volume of employment.

Sees Healthy 1927.

"The business outlook for the year now beginning, according to our survey, indicates a healthy condition thruout the country. Optimism and confidence prevail; capital and labor has a better understanding, and with no apparent dark spots on the horizon the volume of employment should equal, if not surpass, the year just closed."

The report fails to mention the possibility or destreability of raising the wages of the workers of the country. It is concerned exclusively, as usual, over the prosperity of the business men and big scale industry.

A. F. OF L. SEES NO HOPE OF GETTING LABOR LAWS THRU

Everything to Be Side-Stepped, Report

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—Reports by legislative exents of labor unions to the legislative board of the American Federation of Labor indicate that no labor measures will get thru congress at the present session unless great pressure is exerted in support of a chosen few of them. One such measure which may be driven thru is the longshoremen's accident compensation bill.

Discuss Retirement Act.

Changes in the federal old age retirement law will probably be discussed in the house committee, but will not get to a vote on the floor. The long-debated coolict labor bill forbidding the interstate shipment of prison-made goods will not even get out of committee.

The workmen's compensation measure for the District of Columbia is also scheduled for another year, unless congress is jolted by letters and telegrams of protest from all over the country.

DON'T LET LACK OF AID FOR PASSAIC TURN WINS INTO FINAL DEFEAT, PLEA

NEW YORK, Jan. 3. — "Think what it will mean for orderly industrial progress in America if at this last moment the utter failure of relief should turn victory into defeat in Passaic," Norman Thomas, chairman of the Emergency Committee for Strikers' Relief, stated in a holiday appeal for aid to the striking textile workers.

"Let no one think that such a defeat would mean peace in Passaic or in the textile industry generally. The settlements with the Botany Mills and a number of others mark the beginning of better conditions and of something like orderly self-government in industry. Such opportunities must not be lost at the last minute."

Funds should go to the committee at 799 Broadway, New York, or the General Relief Committee, 743 Main Ave., Passaic, N. J.

Spokane Answers

DEAR COMRADE: I will answer your letter of the 21st and will say that what little I do for The DAILY WORKER I don't want published—I merely want end did what I could and I am willing to do that any time. I have got to make a living in my trade and business and this is a very conservative town.

We have only five members in good standing and we can practically do nothing until we get a larger membership. Up to date I have sent you $50 from this branch. This is the same as $10 per member, and only three of the paid-up members have paid—the other two are too hard up to do so.

Now, I believe in action over so little is better than none. This is my answer to your challenge.

YOUR COMRADE.

Average Hourly Wage and Week's Pay in Clothing Industry Falls Below 1924

By LELAND OLDS, Fed. Press.

Workers in the men's clothing industry thruout the country in 1926 earned an average wage of 75 cents an hour, according to a survey of the industry by the U. S. department of labor. For the average full-time week this meant earnings of $33.23. Both averages mark a slight decline from 1924 when the last survey was made. The department attributes this decline to an increase in the percentage of female labor in the industry.

The survey covers canters like Chicago, Rochester, Cincinnati and New York where the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union has established high average wages. It includes Cleveland, Philadelphia, Boston and St. Louis and also the small towns of eastern Pennsylvania to which some manufacturers have gone in an attempt to evade decent union conditions.

The average hourly wage of men in the industry was 93.7 cents compared with 93.7 cents in 1924. Their average weekly earnings rose from $41.18 to $41.51 in the 2-year period. For women workers the hourly averages were 54.4 cents in 1924 and 54.8 cents in 1926, while the weekly average rose from $23.94 to $24.38.

These figures must be combined with others showing the average annual employment in the industry to obtain a fair picture of the earnings of these workers. The clothing industry is highly seasonal, its employes are fortunate to secure steady work 40 weeks in the year.

The report shows that the proportion of men to women workers is much greater in New York than other important centers. For instance, the report includes 890 men coat tailors in New York, but only 97 women. In Chicago there are 897 men and 861 women coat tailors. In Rochester the figures are 85 men and 366 women. Similarly the report includes 1,587 women in New York, but 404 men and 563 women in Chicago, and 136 men and 363 women in Baltimore.

The average week in the industry in 1926 was 44.8 hours. This meant about 44 hours a week in Baltimore, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Rochester and St. Louis, in Cincinnati the average drops somewhat under 44 hours approximating 41 hours for several occupations. In Cleveland the average falls between 45 and 46 hours. In the small towns of eastern Pennsylvania the average ranges from 48 to 53 hours.

The Rich Boy and the Poor Boy

By JENNIE BURTON,
Detroit, Mich.

ONCE there lived a rich boy and a poor boy near each other. The rich boy's name was Roland Wealth and the poor boy's name was Johnny Red. All the boys liked Johnny and hated Roland. The boys called Roland "Fatty Arbuckle" because all he did in school was eat candy all day long. The teacher had to give Roland good marks or he would be fired because Roland's father was a capitalist. Johnny was the best student in his class.

One day Johnny and Roland had a fight. All the boys cheered for Johnny to win. Johnny gave Roland two black eyes and kicked him off the street. This is what the workers should do to the capitalists. They should kick them off the earth.

Answers to Picture Puzzle in Issue of December 28.

Dear Comrade: I am sending you my answer to the puzzle.

The millionaire capitalists are trying to shake hands with the worker man and the capitalists want to make believe they are good to the workers. The working man puts his hand back and then begins to think.

Then the workingman hits the capitalists for he doesn't like them.

If the workingman would shake hands with the capitalists, the capitalists would squeeze him. What the workingmen did was right.

Yours truly,
Rosie Jancha, Delmont, Pa.

Dear Comrades: The picture in The DAILY WORKER in the Young Comrade Section means that the bosses are asking the workers to give them more money and better things, but instead the workers give the bosses a taste of the hammer and make them feel the power of the workers.

Dear Comrade: This picture means that the capitalist wants to shake hands with the workers to fool them but the workers were fooled so much that they got tired and hit them with a sledge hammer.

Your Comrade,
George Kvaternik, Kansas City, Kansas.

Answer to Puzzle.

Last week we had a puzzle which asked for the following places:

1. A place where workers are free and not under the bosses' rule.
2. A place where the people are fighting the priests and where the priests are being kicked out.
3. A place where there is misery for the workers and workers' children.

These are the answers sent in by—Jonnie Burton of Detroit, Mich., and George Kvaternick of Kansas City, Kans.

1. Soviet Russia.
2. Mexico.
3. United States and all other capitalist countries.

Three attractive prizes are offered this week, as an added incentive. They are:

1—KING COAL, by Upton Sinclair. A splendid working class novel of the coal miners. Cloth-bound.

2—RUSSIA TODAY. The famous report of the British Trade Union delegation.

3—BARS AND SHADOWS, by Relph Chaplin. Poems written in Leavenworth penitentiary, where the author was committed during the war as a member of the I. W. W.

Send in that story, workers!

Hudson River Tragedy Shows Need to Enact Federal Compensation Measure

By FREO HARRIS.
(Worker Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Longshoremen and Hudson workers to the number of 250,000 thruout the United States demand the enactment of a federal compensation law. Of these men, 50,000 are in the state of New York. That such a protective measure does not exist is due mostly to the nefarious influence of the shipping interest on congress.

This fact is forcibly brought forward by the recent disaster in New York, when over fifty longshoremen drowned while being carried across the Hudson river on the ill-fated launch, "Linseed King." The boat foundered midstream, causing the men to drown in the ice cold river. Lacking a protective law, the dependents of the 50 drowned men are unable to demand any compensation, and are being destitution.

The outstanding fact is that the U. S. Supreme Court has ruled in the law suit of "Jensen versus the Southern Pacific Railroad, that the employment at docks and boats is maritime, subject to maritime laws, and that accidents and deaths at such places is not the concern of a state insurance act. This decision necessitates enactment of a federal compensation law.

Bill is Introduced.

A bill for such a law was introduced Feb. 17 by both Senator Cummins and Congressman Graham. It had a leading in both houses and was reported favorably on June 3. The only thing preventing the bill from becoming a law immediately was a slight technical difference in its presentation by the senate to that of the house judiciary committee.

Congress, adjourning on July 3, had a full month's time in which to adjust such minor technicality, but it didn't. It is openly admitted that the shipping interests intervened. The reason given is, that the bill was not embracing enough and should include the seamen. This, however, is just a subterfuge, for it is well known in Washington that such an all-inclusive bill would never carry, its main opposition mostly coming directly from Andrew Furuseth, president of the men involved in the case. Furuseth, as president of the International Seamen's Union of America, has placed himself on record by stating that sailors and lonshoremen are of two different trades, and can not be governed by identical laws. He has also stated his opposition to any compensation law unless it should include "the right to sue for demages after the injury has taken place."

Shipping Interests Interfere.

To show further influence of the shipping interests to interfere with the passing of the bill it will be well to mention that a low maximum of compensation payment ($25 a week) had been agreed upon by the longshoremen and the legislative sponsors. This was done as a compromise, to cause the least opposition and expedite the passage. The shipowners, originally posing as friends of such a compensation bill, had given out information that they would favor a $20 weekly payment, no doubt still hoping, that the bill as a whole could still be prevented from becoming a law. However, when the senate took such payments into consideration and reduced them to $15.40, and thereby showed that some sort of bill would eventually be passed, the shipping interests immediately maneuvered all its forces to defeat the bill in its entirety. The objection at this time was that the law would be too much of an expense burden, also repeating the former stand that seamen should be included.

The latest information on this matter is that the bill will be presented as "annihilated haulness" to the present congress. It is hoped in labor circles, that this recent tragedy on the Hudson river will help to offset the influence of the shipowners, and that the Cummins-Graham bill will finally become a law.

Dr. Strong of Seattle Speaks Well of Soviet

By a Worker Correspondent.

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—Before the main speaker of the evening took the floor at the Open Forum here, Dr. Sidney Strong, father of Anna Louise Strong, of Seattle, Wash., made a short speech. He is a member of a delegation of 30 on its way to study conditions in Mexico.

"I will have a talk with the representative of the Soviet Union, too. Soviet Russia is the most hopeful place on earth today. Conditions over there are as near perfect as it is possible to make them under the present disorder in the world," he declared.

As the doctor went away, he expressed regret, which sounded ecstatic, over not having time to learn something about the new American god, the subject of the next speaker, which was created here in Los Angeles out of printers' ink, not mud, and kept alive by scabbing on such gods as are to be found in the temple of Aimee Semple McPherson and in the church of the atheist-baiter, Rev. Bob Shuler, who wants to deport damned souls.

The delegation will make a report to the American people when it comes back from Mexico, Dr. Strong said.

YOUNG WORKERS SHOULD WRITE AS THEY FIGHT

The Importance of Youth Correspondents

By NAT KAPLAN,
Editor of Young Worker.

BESIDES the need for the organization of a cadre of worker correspondents around The DAILY WORKER there is the need for the organization of the young worker correspondents around the Young Worker. Altho they have not yet been crystallized organizationally, there are some 34 young worker correspondents who participate in the writing of the Young Worker.

The Young Worker went thru three main stages in its development as the organ of the Young Workers' League—a development similar to the league itself. These stages were (1) the period of isolation of the league. During this period the Young Worker was a literary magazine. (2) The period of propaganda for the struggles of the youth. During this period the Young Worker was quite loud, exaggerated to a certain extent and remained a pure propagandist and not an organizer of the working youth. (3) The period of breaking of the isolation, when we actually participate in some of the struggles of the working youth. During this period the Young Worker, besides being a propagandist, becomes an instrument for the organization of the working youth.

We are in the latter stage now. During the first two periods there was no great need for a large cadre of young worker correspondents. The present period into which the Young Worker is living implies that it must have such a force. Not only that, but the paper is trying to pursue a broad and flexible policy in order to become the organ not only of the Communist youth but of the non-party working youth as well. What better guarantee for the realization of the policy than the encircling of the paper with a large group of non-party young worker correspondents.

In considering this question we have decided that writing for the paper cannot be separated from the question of the distribution of the paper. What concrete organizational gains can the Young Worker make if it prints the story of a young broaker boy on the conditions in his authracite collier and this story is distributed only among neadle trades workers in New York and Chicago? The writing of a shop story must be the signal for the rallying of the workers in that shop around the issues raised by the story. This means that a young worker correspondents must not only write for his paper, but arrange for its distribution and boost its circulation in his field. That is why we are combining our young worker correspondent groups into Young Worker Booster Clubs, which will have the function of training young worker correspondents and boosting the circulation of the press.

Besides the other well-known benefits of worker correspondence, our experience has shown us the following: (1) The Young Worker is a collective organ more than ever before. (2) It has helped to develop a correct policy of criticism and self-criticism, and thus we have corrected many errors. (3) It has helped to do away with a flamboyant revolutionary phraseology and the casseless use of Communist slogans.

There must be systematic co-operation between the young and adult worker correspondents. The building of a movement of young worker correspondents around the Young Worker means the building of such a movement around The DAILY WORKER at the same time.

Advocates Law Violation.

TULSA, Okla., Jan. 1. — Violation of the government anti-trust and anti-combination laws is advocated by Thomas A. O'Donnell of Los Angeles, oil man attending the convention of the American Petroleum institute. O'Donnell says that the only way the oil resources of the country can be "conserved" is by combinations and trade agreements. To do that, he said, "it is necessary to violate the laws, until they are amended."

The Old Must Go!

CONSTANTINOPLE.—The Department of Oriental Music in the Turkey National Conservatory has been abolished. The teaching of Turkish music in the public schools is prohibited. This is a part of the campaign to Westernize the Turk. The old Turkish musical instruments and their sounds, say the authorities, must go.

NOTICE TO CHICAGO READERS

Oil Damages Oklahoma's Cotton Crop

A SCENE IN SEMINOLE COUNTY WHERE OIL IS DESTROYING THE COTTON CROP.

Oil, the same black fluid which has brought millions to many, may reduce cotton planters in Seminole and Hughes counties, Oklahoma, to poverty since it is constantly reducing their acreage. The Seminole pool has ruined more then 1,000 acres of fine cotton land and promises to ruin as many more. Other counties in the state are likely to be effected also.

SECTION HANDS ON U. S. RAILROADS STARVED BY WAGE SCALES THAT GIVE WORKERS BARE SUBSISTENCE, AT BEST

By LELAND OLDS, Federated Press.

The low wages paid by the railroad industry to the men responsible for the track and roadway are revealed in an interstate commerce commission report on comparative operating averages for the years 1921 to 1925. The average pay of section men in 1925 varied from 23.2c. an hour on the Georgia & Florida up to 75.2c. an hour on Henry Ford's Detroit, Toledo & Ironton.

Ford's road is exceptional because Ford speedup methods force his employes to give more then a dollar's worth of work for every dollar that he pays. Taking only the country's major systems, the average varies from 26.8c. an hour on the Atlantic Coast Lines up to 44.1c. on the Boston & Maine. These averages include pay of section and gang foremen as well as common labor.

Average 39c. an Hour.

The straight-time earnings of these workers thruout the country in 1925 averaged just 39c an hour. This is a gain of less than 1c. since 1923.

How little the 22 leading railroad systems paid their maintenance of way workers in 1921, 1923 and 1925 is shown in the following government figures:

| Section-man's Wages | 1925 | 1923 | 1921 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Atlantic Coast Line | 26.8c | 26.2c | 29.9c |
| Baltimore & Ohio | 42.3 | 41.8 | 41.7 |
| Chi. Mil. & St. Paul | 41.8 | 41.1 | 43.0 |
| Chi. & Northwest. | 42.1 | 41.3 | 42.6 |
| Delaware & Hudson | 42.6 | 42.4 | 42.4 |
| Del. Lacka. & West. | 41.0 | 44.0 | 41.7 |
| Great Northern | 42.9 | 41.2 | 42.7 |
| Illinois Central | 36.3 | 35.8 | 37.5 |
| Missouri Pacific | 37.8 | 37.7 | 39.4 |
| New York Central | 42.4 | 42.0 | 42.0 |
| N. Y. N. H. & Hart. | 43.0 | 42.8 | 42.4 |
| Norfolk & Western | 40.6 | 40.1 | 41.6 |
| Northern Pacific | 42.7 | 41.5 | 42.7 |
| Pennsylvania | 43.0 | 42.2 | 42.7 |
| Rock Island | 38.4 | 37.3 | 38.3 |
| Santa Fe | 37.8 | 36.6 | 38.9 |
| St. Louis-San Fran | 35.7 | 34.8 | 37.9 |
| Seaboard Air Line | 29.5 | 27.6 | 30.9 |
| Southern | 33.0 | 31.7 | 36.2 |
| Southern Pacific | 38.3 | 38.3 | 40.9 |
| S. P. (Lines in La. and Tex.) | 29.6 | 29.3 | 32.1 |
| Union Pacific | 40.5 | 39.6 | 40.8 |

Get Bare Living at Best.

On roads paying the highest rates for section work, a man never missing a day thruout the regular working year would earn only about $1,075. On the Atlantic Coast Line he would get a little over $650. The average yearly fulltime pay for the country as a whole would be under $1,000. But such steady work never misses the average section man. Bad weather alone would cut his possible earnings far below the averages shown here. At best the section worker's earnings will not provide even a bare subsistence for a normal family.

Reversal of U. S. Policy.

This is a reversal of the wage policy followed under government control. Then an attempt was made to establish a minimum wage so that unskilled workers should receive enough to support a family and that additions for greater skill should be made to this minimum. The U. S. rail labor board, however, under the whip of the railroads, reduced the wages of section men nearly 30% in 1921 and 1922. The slight increases since then leave the minimum wage in the industry still about 20% under the 1920-21 average.

Governor Blaine Has Settled Another Klan and Anti-Klan Rumpus

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 3. — Governor Blaine announces he has pardoned six men convicted of rioting at Marinette last June in a fight between klan and anti-klan forces, because leaders were not prosecuted while the six were made the "goats."

The six are Meddie Villineaure, Clyde Barrett, Eugene Sequin, Leo Hollaire, Harlod Bennett and Leo Sequin.

All were sentenced to three months in the Marinette county work house but Villineaure who was given six months. They were given a reprieve at the start of the investigation, serving a short time.

The fight, according to Attorney F. M. Wylie, Madison, who made a special investigation for Governor Blaine, followed a big klan-anti meeting at which lecturers criticized catholics.

The klan tent was burned and in the resultant police investigation the six were named as participants. Klan attorneys were instrumental in prosecuting the six, Wylie's report indicated.

Militarist Manifestations

The refusal of the University of Oklahoma to permit a speech on peace to be delivered on its campus because of the protest of a lieutenant-colonel of the reserve corps is one more incident added to many showing that the war department and its hangers-on are interfering more and more in affairs of civil life.

The speaker who was refused the use of the campus happens to be a clergyman and even without hearing the speech which was delivered on other than university premises we are quite sure that we would not have agreed with it. It doubtless was the stereotyped pacifist utterance but because it did not glorify war, the protest of one militarist was sufficient to cause its cancellation by the university authorities.

The military mind so-called, which sees its particular and perfectly parasitic occupation as the sum total of all that is great and good in modern life, is not properly a military mind at all, but is the quintessence of the imperialist epoch. It is possessed by every beneficiary of imperialism and its chief characteristic is a burning hatred of everything and everybody who does not believe in the unchallengeable righteousness of the domination of workers and peasants in the "backward" countries by the American ruling class and its agents.

At the same time the imperialist seeks to install over the working masses of the home nation who do the hardest and the lowest paid work, a system of government similar to that which makes possible the golden stream of profit from the colonies. In pursuing this aim, the militarists campaign against all dissenting opinions and use the power and prestige of the suppressive machinery of the government to accomplish their aims.

To say, as the Chicago Tribune does, that the lieutenant-colonel who made the protest was simply exercising his right as a citizen to put the whole question on the basis of a difference of opition between individuals. It is nothing of the sort. The war department itself is now a highly efficient propaganda machine and its publicity organization is just as much a part of the military machine of American imperialism as are the gunboats, airplanes and other specialized destructive apparatus.

In the schools and universities there is developing a rather broad movement, of a pacifist and semi-pacifist character, against militarism. So far there seems to be no direct line among these lower middle class student elements against imperialist war as such, but the war department is busy just the same.

The American labor movement could build a great movement against imperialism and imperialist war if its official leaders were not part of the war machinery. The Nicaraguan incident has shown that there is a tremendous reserve of anti-militarist sentiment in the United States which could be organized into a powerful force, with the labor movement taking the lead.

But the labor officialdom upholds the hands of the war and state departments so that from the left wing workers who endorsed the Communist program against imperialist war, and the penetration and intimidation of the Philippines, Mexico and Latin-America which leads to war, must and will come the mass impetus which alone can stop war.

In the meantime it is possible to establish a united front against such manifestations of the militarist spirit as closed the University of Oklahoma campus to a lecture on world peace.

Impeach Kellogg!

Adolfo Diaz, dictator of Nicaragua by grace of some six American gunboats which we listed the other day, is undoubtedly the most brazen of the numerous puppets American imperialism has used from time to time in Latin-America.

His most recent statement issued "to the American and foreign public" makes the following assertion:

The charges against my government and the conservatives in respect to the United States and the American bankers, so assiduously propagated by the poisonous anti-American, anti-foreign Bolshevist Mexican propaganda agencies are . . . . unfounded.

To appreciate properly the above statement it must be remembered that it is issued with the knowledge and consent of the American state department and is made at the time when public protest against armed intervention by American forces is coming from all parts of the United States and after a United States senator has introduced a resolution specifying the acts of the war department in Nicaragua and demanding that they be stopped.

It appears that Diaz has been commissioned to insult the ears of the sympathizers of the Mexican and Nicaraguan masses with the same lying story which Assistant Secretary of State Olds tried to foist upon the American people and which has already been exposed as war department propaganda manufactured expressly for home consumption.

The whole scheme of which the Diaz statement is only a part is of such a character as to justify impeachment of Secretary of State Kellogg. This demand should be raised by the official spokesmen of the labor movement and resulting dramatization of the whole conspiracy would focus public attention on an arbitrary use of power by the Coolidge administration which is inseparable from its imperialist character.

Impeach Kellogg and make President Coolidge repudiate him or share the responsibility for making war without consulting the legislative wing of the government!

This alone will not stop imperialist war, but it will bring before the American masses in vivid form the danger of war inherent in a system of society and government which makes the protection of loans and investments abroad its first order of business.

The Result of the British Miners' Fight

By JOHN PEPPER.

THE fight of the British miners is approaching its end, and one district after another is concluding separate agreements with the mine owners. The ranks of those who have not returned to work are becoming thinner and thinner. The guerilla warfare is only being continued in a few districts, but even there the resistance of the workers is growing weaker from day to day.

For seven whole months has this struggle lasted, one of the greatest events in the whole international labor movement of recent years. Now that it has entered on its last phase in this time has come to draw up the balance of this heroic mass struggle and to draw the logical conclusions. How can we explain the enormous significance of the fight of the British miners? In the first place in that the background of this fight is the decline of the British empire, a situation in which the British capitalists, in view of their desperate struggle for the world market, are no longer able to make great concessions to the working class, and in which any great fight of the workers to maintain their former standard of living must inevitably meet with resistance from the whole bourgeoisie and their government and must necessarily develop into a political fight.

THE character of the fight was determined above all by the circumstance that the British coal mining industry is now passing thru a severe crisis which places the British bourgeoisie before the dilemma of getting rid either of its "superfluous coal" or of its "superfluous miners." All the characteristic features of the great fight are due to these chief factors. We can only complete our analysis of the significance of this struggle if we take the following circumstances into consideration.

The struggle of the miners, which lasted for seven months, was connected with the first general strike and was to some extent simultaneous with it. Chamberlain, the great theorist on military strategy, has said that it is only possible to understand the significance of a war if we take into consideration that it is carried on in an atmosphere of danger. It is equally difficult to understand the struggle of the miners unless we take into consideration that during the whole seven months there was on an atmosphere of emergency conditions, i. e., the open application of dictatorial power on the part of the capitalist government.

FROM the very beginning the situation was characterized by an unusual intensification of the relations between the classes. Above all, two great armies, the coal magnates and the miners, came into collision, according to the excellent expression of the Economist, "an irresistible force coming into contact with an immovable object". Then, however, the fight of the miners started the general attack of the bourgeoisie on the whole trade union movement rolling.

Finally, one of the most important characteristic peculiarities in the fight was the circumstance that not such pronounced "right" leaders as Hodges were at the head of the Miners' Federation, but Herbert Smith and Cook, who are known as "left" leaders. Perhaps no fight has ever led to such important economic consequences as the present fight of the miners. In the course of the seven months' fight not only the political but the whole economy life of the country depended on it. All the important branches of industry were paralyzed, as were also the whole exports and imports of Great Britain. For several months the whole world market was under the influence of the British miners' fight and the economic crisis in Great Britain, as well as the improvement in the juncture of affairs in the countries of Central Europe were connected with the struggle. As regards the economic side, the strike proved a very strong weapon and now, when the struggle is nearing its end, we can state that the miners were compelled to capitulate not so much by the pressure of dictatorial power of the government, not so much because of the superiority of the forces of the coal magnates, not so much by hunger, as by the fact that place, first, because of the treachery of the leaders of the British labor movement and owing to the efforts of international reformism THE heroic fight of the British miners will always remain one of the most glorious chapters in the history of the struggle for the emancipation of the proletariat. The history of the defeat of the miners is purely and simply the history of the treachery of the reformist leaders. The analysis of this great struggle shows four different periods. In the first period the whole British working class fought with the miners and even compelled the official leaders of the trade union movement to place themselves at the head of the general strike. In the second period the miners' union was left alone in the fight and the treachery of the official leaders of the trade union movement became apparent from the other workers. Nevertheless, the Miners' Federation, altho it was isolated, represented a tremendous fighting force, which if it had had every prospect of success had there been a united leadership and had the struggle taken the course it ought to have taken. In the third period, the leaders of the Miners' Federation, having till then vacillated, showed a tendency to capitulate. They recommended accepting the proposals of the bishops, they sabotaged the extension of the fight recommended by South Wales, they called upon the workers to accept the conditions of capitulation laid down by the government. The fourth period of the struggle began at the moment when all the former leaders (with few exceptions) left the fighting masses of the miners to their fate. In the most critical period of the fight these old leaders failed, and destroyed the united front of the miners by assenting to district agreements being concluded.

Side by side with the general treachery of the old reformist leaders, we see now leaders cropping up. These new leaders were provided by the Communist Party of Great Britain and the minority movement. Wherever the influence of the Communists and the minority movement made itself felt the miners passed resolutions which testified to their determination to fight having remained unshaken.

THE same picture was seen in an international measure. The reformist trade union leaders and social democracy left the fighting miners to their fate in the most shameful way, and only the communists and the revolutionary trade unions fulfilled their international duty. The attitude of the trade unions of the Soviet Union, which gave evidence of their solidarity, was a brilliant example for the whole international working class.

After seven months of fighting and starvation, the miners are returning into the dark depths of the shafts. This time the battle is lost; the working day is lengthened, wages are reduced and the miners have been forced to enter into long period agreements; the importance of the united trade union has been considerably reduced, thanks to the conclusion of district agreements.

These are facts which no one can deny, and the reformists are sure to use them in order to draw the conclusion that there has been better not to fight at all. After every defeat of a revolutionary fight the reformists once come to Pischanow's conclusion that "it would have been better not to have taken up arms at all." The reformists, however, are telling lies. The medal has its reverse side. The fight of the miners has not been useless. Not only the miners, but the whole British working class and the world proletariat will have much to learn from this fight. The British working class, which has for decades been deeply sunk in the slough of opportunism, has now learned from the experiences of the general strike and the miners' fight how to fight against the bourgeoisie. The general strike, the seven months' struggle of the miners and the emergency conditions have greatly altered the British working class. It is passing thru a deep reaching process of revolutionisation, and many British workers have already found the path leading them towards the Communist Party.

THE British and the international proletariat have learnt the following important truths from the experiences of the miners' fight:

1. The efforts of the bourgeoisie to stabilise capitalism inevitably lead to great mass fights and hasten the overthrow of capitalism.

2. Every important event in the labor movement of any country will now inevitably become an international event and must be regarded by the international proletariat as a common cause of the workers.

3. Every great economic fight of the workers with the background of disintegrating capitalism turns into a political fight. It must be carried on with the application of political means.

4. The workers cannot be victorious in great economic fights or in great political fights as long as the reformists are at their head. Only when they are led by new revolutionary leaders will they be able to carry on their struggle for their standard of living and for political freedom to a victorious end.

An International Trust of Financial Capital

(By L. . . NG (Frankfort a Main.)

An international trust of financial capital has recently been formed. It is under the leadership and administration of American and British large-banks which, as institutes of the export of capital to Germany, already play an important part. Ten of the chief large banks in Europe belong to the trust. The Darmstadt and Dresden bank—which has for a long time been dependent on American and British financial capital—has taken part in its foundation.

The original share capital amounts to 14 million dollars (10 millions of first preference shares and 4 millions of second preference shares). To these must be added ordinary shares without a nominal value. The amount of the share capital—without the ordinary shares, it is true—is not particularly overwhelming. It is, at any rate, quite out of proportion to the figures (a milliard) the report of which was officially given out when the project of the trust was made public.

The activities of the trust are to consist in granting loans and credits—but especially in buying securities (shares). The territory to be exploited is the whole world. It is an open question whether the Trust could not enter into connection with any—at present very distract—construction with regard to reparations and debts (the mobilization of the German debt—say and industrial debentures). In any case, the imagination of certain newspapers which are dependent on the banks functioning in this sphere. Even a trust of financial capital has its advertising department.

The function of the trust will in reality consist in investing capital in some form or other (loans, credits, shares) in all countries in which it is worth while—stable conditions of currency being a prerequisite—especially in Germany, Austria, Bolgium and finally in France also), and in which the conditions of political power make it possible. I. e., not in the Soviet Union, whose doors are closed to exploiters from the circles of financial capital.

The control of the business is in the hands of American and British financial capital (especially American). The banks of the other countries concerned in the trust will in essentials play the part of middlemen, of agents, in return for special allowances, they have to see that loans and credits are taken out from the trust, i. e., from American (and British) financial capital, and they have to carry thru the purchase of shares and the transactions on the stock exchange. Thus, the trust, called the A. B. C. trust after the initials of the words composing its name (American, British Continental Corporation), turns out to be an organisation of American (and British) financial capital with the object of directing the export of capital with the greatest advantage and security, the banks of the other countries acting as agents. The following passage from a New York announcement in the "Frankfurter Zeitung" is characteristic

"In the opinion of the banks concerned, the present time seems to justify the foundation of the trust, for several states in Europe and other continents can, as the result of the successful stabilisation of their currency, boast of financial conditions better than they have ever been since the end of the war, so that there is considerable security for the investment of American capital."

The A. B. C. trust means an intensification of competition for the banks which have not been included in it. For this reason, things will not stop at this one trust of financial capital. Under the leadership of American and British financial capital further international financial trusts will come into being, which already exist in their grouping (their dependence on one another). The fight of the international trusts for financial capital means an intensification of the pressure at the expense of the working masses in all countries ruled by capitalism and means an intensification of the danger of war. The struggle for spheres of investments. The international trusts of financial capital also of course involve an increased danger of intervention against the Soviet Union. The sabotage of the financing of German export to the Soviet Union (the 300 million credit), which at one time played such a part, is only one of the German large banks (undoubtedly supported by American and British financial capital, as a kind of model for the

Mr. Aswell Introduces American Fascism

By EDITH RUDQUIST.

THE Aswell bill. If it becomes a national law, as is the urgent desire of all America's large, powerful industrials, would put the fate and well-being of America's more than ten million toiling foreigners in the hands of a dictator. This proposed act contains outspoken, unguarded provisions that can be interpreted in no other way than as American fascism.

This dictator will have the title of secretary of labor; upon him will rest the duty of getting up a set of laws, "regulations" for the enforcement of the Aswell bill.

What these "regulations" shall contain is of most vital concern to the foreign-born workers. These regulations will namely be the laws that will directly interfere in their everyday life, stipulating what the workers can, cannot, should and must do in order to earn the means of existence. The Aswell bill's provisions are only general, these "regulations", for enforcement will specifically and unequivocally dictate. Once congress has voted in favor of the Aswell bill the fate of the foreign-born workers is sealed, because there is no escape from these "regulations," more dangerous than the bill itself.

Section 16 provides "Secretary of Labor shall make all regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act." To whom could the steel, textile and coal interests more properly delegate the job of keeping in a straitjacket the great mass of their workers, than one who is now their official arbiter and mediator in industrial disputes, (strikes, wage-contracts etc.) than one who already has the sanction and OK of these industrial rulers? He certainly would not be likely to make a non-beneficial nor non-profitable regulation, informed as he is of their every wish and requirement. No doubt, he is capable of finding all the demagogic phrases necessary to conceal the real motives. He has a whole thesaurus at his disposal of such phrases as "the public welfare", "the general welfare", "the welfare of the United States", "the welfare of the wage earners", "the welfare of the people", "the welfare of the citizens", "the welfare of the country", "the welfare of the laboring men", "the welfare of the workers", "the welfare of the laboring classes", "the welfare of the ## Looney Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

IT is interesting to note that out of the total of one hundred local unions represented at the conference held recently in New York to initiate a war on Communist influence in the trade unions, at least half of the locals misrepresented are in the clothing business and of the remainder another fifty per cent came from unions associated with the needle trades. The so-called "American unions," mostly led by frisky catholics, sent a few observers and gave lip service to the war on Communism, but to those gentlemen, socialism under any other name is just as repugnant.

IT is also significant that the officers of this fake committee to preserve the trade unions are socialists. The president is the officials of the A. F. of L. that they are waging war against the Communists because the latter wish to control the trade unions. But it is quite obvious that the socialists have the same object, the with this difference: The Communists aim at changing the mental processes of the trade union members. The socialists want to capture offices and salaries. The latter aim is quite agreeable to the A. F. of L. officialdom, unless there are personal reasons involved. But such an aim is not at loggerheads with the business of trade union leadership as understood by Green, Woll and Co.

* * *

THIS great American revolt against Communist influence in the trade unions is led by Beckerman of the Amalgamated Clothing workers, a socialist, by Shipleoff of the Pocket-book (not pickpocket) Workers a socialist, and by Morris Finestune of the Hebrew Trades. The Americanism of those lads is beyond question. At least they possess that great American quality which puts the retention of a good job above all other considerations. Those Jewish socialist labor fakers are afflicted with an inferiority complex in the presence of the old aristocrats of the A. F. of L. What wouldn't an official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers do in return for a cordial slap on the back in the presence of Richter of the United Garment Workers? So, those socialist lackeys are killing two birds with one chunk of mud. They are making a desperate effort to save their salaries and also helping the more respectable labor fakers scotch the Communist snake.

* * *

THE Tammany Hall labor leaders are not crazy to be in the company of the Signans, Shipleoffs or Finestones. The latter are "Eastsiders" and the boys who run the New York Central Trades Council are closer to Hell's Kitchen. The lads from the "Kitchen" are by no means as intellectual as the boys from Rutger's Square. But their neck; are stouter and they make a better showing at a ball game. So you will see the boys from Rutger's Square soliciting nods, winks and backslaps from the Hell's Kitchen lads, tho in their Greenwich Village haunts they hurl ridicule on the crawthumpers. A renegade Irish nationalist crawling before Buckingham Palace or a Negro taking off his hat in a "mo'ton" posture before the palace of the imperial wizard of the K. K. K., would find themselves in the same inferiority complex cancer with the socialist boys who are now doing a little political pimping for Green, Woll and Company. It is a united front proposition and it must be admitted that it has an economic basis.

* * *

IN connection with those remarks a conversation the writer once had with an important New York trade union official is apropos. He had a finely equipped office in city hall during the regime of Mayor Hyland. He was not an official of the Central Trades Council of New York and points east, but he openly boasted that he ran the show in a little of an Irish cognomen but I afterwards learned that he was a Pole, who got himself naturalized for business reasons. I had occasion to visit this gentleman in behalf of a victim of capitalism who was incarcerated in Sing Sing. What could he do to alleviate the prison hardships of this man? A

SMITH BATTLE FINALLY GETS BEFORE SENATE

McKellar of Tennessee Fires First Shot

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The long anticipated battle to bar Senator-designate Frank L. Smith, (R) of Illinois, from the senate was formally launched this afternoon with Senator McKellar (D) of Tennessee, firing the first shot.

In a speech charging Smith with having violated the public service laws of Illinois, McKellar called on his colleagues to slam the door of the senate in Smith's face. He declared the exclusion of Smith would be a "notice to the people" that seats cannot be bought in the senate. If Smith is seated, he added, it would be a notice that any "men who has sufficient money can buy a seat in this body."

Cites Statute.

The battle was opened by McKellar even though the senate has no definite information whether Smith plans to keep the appointment to succeed the late Senator William B. McKinley or intends to decline it.

Touching on the charge that Smith violated the law of Illinois in accepting campaign contributions from Samuel Insull, and other public utility magnates while serving as chairman of the state's utilities commission, McKellar cited the statute. It read. "No commissioner shall solicit or accept any gift, gratuity, emolument or employment from any person or corporation subject to the supervision of the commission."

Fraud and Corruption.

"The penalty imposed," McKellar said, "is removal from office and other punishment for a misdemeanor in office."

"Here was a law that disqualified him for holding office in the event he received any gift from anyone connected with public utilities. He knew of this law, of course, and he knew according to his own evidence that Samuel Insull contributed $100,000 to his campaign, and yet, in a mock heroic way he wants to know who is bringing such charges against him. The truth is there is an evident desire here to conceal the truth. I do not see how any senator can read his testimony and feel that a man, who has his idea about truth and corruption, can ever be seated."

McKellar accused Smith of "fraud" and corruption" in the Illinois primary.

FUR WORKERS OBTAIN FIVE-DAY WEEK FOR SLACK PART OF YEAR

A five-day working week has been won by the Fur Workers' Union of Chicago. It has signed a new agreement with the Chicago Fur Manufacturers' Association which is dated as of July 1, last, to continue until July 1, 1929.

Under this agreement there will be a five-day week of forty hours each year during the slack season from Jan. 1 to Aug. 15. The 44-hour week will prevail during the rest of the year. There will be no overtime work during the slack season.

The workers in close two get an increase of ten percent in the minimum wage for that class. Since the workers in close ons almost invariably are paid much more than the minimum now provided for, no change is made in their schedules.

The manager of the local union, Irving L. Israelson expresses himself as well satisfied with the results of the negotiations between the union and the employers.

JOHNSON LEADS SENATE DEMAND FOR BIG NAVY

California Jingo in War-Monger Effort

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4. Charging that the sea-power of the United States has fallen below not only that of Great Britain but of Japan as well, Senator Hiram Johnson, republican California, led a jingo demonstration that included both houses of congress, in a speech couched in terms of an arraignment of the administration, the California senator raised the cry of more ships of war in a way calculated to be sensational and declared that the United States, as defense matters now stood, was open to "any murderous assault."

Entirely ignoring the Nicaraguan events of the past weeks, Senator Johnson said: "Our country, peaceful in intentions, desires no nation's lands nor the conquest of any people and by precepts and examples will lead in peaceful paths. But dumb is he to the lessons of the past, blind to the conditions of the present, who will strip us of our defensive armor and leave us at the mercy of any murderous assault.

MEXICO PLAYS CAREFUL GAME IN OIL FIGHT

Deputies in Pledge to Fight Aggression

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 4. — Theoretically, the Mexican government is in possession of all foreign-owned oil lands acquired prior to 1917 for which the owners failed to file concession claims before Jan. 1. But so far, the government has made no effort to actually take over the properties whose values, present and potential, run into many millions of dollars.

Precisely what the Calles government proposes to do is not clear. The fact that the government did not immediately take over the properties as the laws and the constitution gave it the right to do is looked upon as a strategic move planned for the present to avoid immediate difficulties with the United States

Plenty of Time.

It seems to be the opinion in official circles that there is plenty of time to enforce the laws and that Calles did right in not giving the United States an excuse for drastic action by taking over the oil lands from American owners on Jan. 1.

The situation is complicated also by events in Nicaragua, which are being watched closely here. The combined propaganda of the U. S. state department and the bogus President Diaz of Nicaragua, which had as its object to involve Mexico in the Nicaraguan affair as a smoke screen for American aggression, is receiving much attention from the Mexican press and is directly connected up with the oil dispute

Deputies Swear Allegiance.

A patriotic wave was started over the country by a banquet held jointly between members of the chamber of deputies and the senate. Deputy Gonzales Santos, leador of the socialist alliance, made an address in which he declared: "Truly this moment is difficult, but what provides a better opportunity for a revolutionist than a difficult memant? I do not believe that any foreigner would dare to injure our rights, but if they resolve to inflame any Mexican faction, of which some unfortunately exist, then we will have the opportunity to prove the form of our revolution. And I exhort you that when the moment arrives you will leave your political posts temporarily and definitely take up your redeeming carbines."

Against Mexico.

His main belt is discharged against what he, with Secretary of State Kellogg, terms "Mexican radicalism." He charges that Sacasa's liberals are directly supported by arms and ammunition from Mexico and that Mexico's aim is to set up a government of its own in Nicaragua.

In contrast to the parrot-like declarations of Diaz is the wireless message broadcast in the form of a statement by Dr. Sacasa with regard to the manner in which rear-Admiral Latimer, in charge of American forces here, has obstructed the liberals in every possible way in their struggle for the overthrow of Diaz.

Surround Residence.

"On the 23rd, without any record of any abuse of foreign interests, the warships Denver and Cleveland violently disembarked troops, machine guns and cannons, and with bellicose display my small presidential guard and my private residence were surrounded.

"Immediately after I received the following notification:

" 'Memorandum for Dr. Sacasa: Confirming my conversation of this afternoon, the following territory is hereby declared a neutral zone: Puerto Cabesas and Bilwi, including the outskirts, for a distance of two miles. There will be no carrying of arms, ammunition, knives, etc., in the neutral zone. There must be no recruiting or any other activities carried on in the neutral zone which have any bearing on the prosecution of hostilities. Dr. Sacasa and his forces may leave the neutral zone by 4 p. m., the 24th of December, 1926, by water, with their arms if they so desire. Otherwise they must disarm and deliver such arms to the Cleveland's landing force commander. The radio station may send only plain messages and these messages must have no bearing on the prosecution of hostilities.

Coolidge Cabinet, Defying Senate, Orders Marines to Remain in Nicaragua

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The American marines will stay in Nicaragua—this was the verdict of a long cabinet session held today on the Mexican and Nicaraguan situations. It is in the nature of a reply to the resolution introduced in the senate Monday by Senator Wheeler demanding the withdrawal of troops as well as to the deluge of press criticism that has been invoked by the high-handed invasion of the Latin republic.

This cabinet decision is defiant in its nature and fitfully caps the growing brazenness and disregard for opinion that has characterized the present administration's conduct of its imperialist adventures to the south. As usual, the reasons given for the action are that, "The national interests demand the continued maintenance of armed forces in Nicaragua."

It serves notice on the senate and the house of representatives that Coolidge and Kellogg will brook no interference from the legislative branch in their conduct of affairs with Mexico and Nicaragua. Strangely enuf, Kellogg denied that New York bankers controlled the banks and railroads of Nicaragua and that the continued presence of American troops there was to protect those interests.

Sanctioned Loan.

But he admitted that the state department had approved an agreement drawn up in 1917 between U. S. bankers and the Nicaraguan government in which a portion of the customs was set aside to satisfy the government's debt to Wall Street.

The White House "spokesman" has been working on the press again. He expressed surprise recently that there should be criticism in the press of the state department's handling of the Latin American affairs and pleaded with the correspondents to stand behind the administration.

U. S. MARINES HELD LIBERAL FORCES AT BAY

Sacasa Reveals Truth of Troop Landings

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Jan. 4.—At a time when the liberal forces were prosecuting a successful military drive against the puppet President Diaz, Admiral Latimer, in command of the U. S. naval unit in Nicaragua, landed forces from two ships of war at Puerto Cabezas, the liberal headquarters, surrounded the residence of Dr. Sacasa the liberal leader, placed an guard under virtual arrest and disarmed all his followers within the city. This is the charge contained in a radio message from the liberal leader, who is also the constitutional president of the republic.

Two Statements.

Two statements by the leaders of the contending groups clearly reveal the role of the United States and its armed forces in the Central American republic. One is issued by Adolfo Diaz, Wall Street's and the U. S. state department's puppet and illegal president, the other by Dr. Sacasa.

Diaz' statement, the third or fourth of its kind addressed to "the American and foreign public," is plainly, like his other statements, written for him by the American charge d'affairs. He maintains a virtuous freedom from any connection with Wall Street bankers and defends the landing of American marines as an act intended solely to protect American property.

Against Mexico.

His main belt is discharged against what he, with Secretary of State Kellogg, terms "Mexican radicalism." He charges that Sacasa's liberals are directly supported by arms and ammunition from Mexico and that Mexico's aim is to set up a government of its own in Nicaragua.

VACA EXPOSES KELLOGG'S LIE ON CENSORSHIP

Nicaraguan Liberal Pins Him Down

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Dr. Vaca, Washington agent of the Sacasa government in Nicaragua, which has been virtually taken prisoner by Admiral "Roughneck" Latimer, called at the state department on the morning of Dec. 30 to make a personal protest to Secretary Kellogg.

He was escorted to the waiting room. There he was met after some delay, by Kellogg's private secretary. Outside the door stood the veteran private messenger to whom had been handed Vaca's formal letter of protest two days earlier. Kellogg had decided, on talks with the press on the 29th and 30th, that the department had "ever received any communication from Vaca," or that a censorship existed at Sacasa's capital, Puerta Cabezas, which had been "neutralized" by Latimer.

Vaca showed the private secretary a letter from the Washington manager of the Postal Telegraph Co., with dispatches from the Tropical Cable Co. and the International Radiograph Co., declaring that censorship at Puerta Cabezas had been established despite all assurances to members of the Sacasa government there. The messages reach the town, but the censor set up by Latimer does not permit their delivery.

Kellogg Dodges Vaca.

The private secretary smoothly assured Vaca that he would inform Kellogg of this evidence. When asked to take the documents to Kellogg, he declined, saying it "was not necessary." A few minutes later the press relations officer of Kellogg's department informed newspaper men that Kellogg now positively declares there "is no censorship at Puerta Cabezas."

Press Angered at Lies.

Kellogg has affronted the majority of press correspondents in Washington by his persistence in denying obvious facts about his raid against the constitutional liberal government in Nicaragua. These men gathered around Vaca, eagerly made copies of his documents, and discussed Kellogg in terms of ridicule and contempt, while predicting that the whole country would soon be aroused against his stupidity in threatening what the last claim of the Coolidge administration to international morality.

Borah is Funny.

One of the absurdities of the situation is the wobbling attitude of Chairman Borah of the senate foreign relations committee. When he emerged from one of his talks with Kellogg and assured the press that he was no longer sure that anything more had been done than afford protection to American lives and property in Nicaragua, he was questioned as to what evidence Kellogg had given him. He admitted, reluctantly, that he had "not thought to ask" whether any American had been injured or even threatened by any of the liberal revolutionary forces who have seized by Latimer's force.

ADMIRAL LATIMER HELD LIBERAL LEADER UNDER VIRTUAL ARREST, CHARGE

Mexican Rebels Repulsed.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 4.—Rebel attacks on three Mexican towns were reported today. The newspaper Excelsior reports a rebel attack upon Leon, Guanajuato, was repulsed by the small garrison there, with the aid of the police. Reports that eleven citizens were executed for complicity with the rebels are unconfirmed.

MINERS' LOCAL FLAYS ELECTION STEAL BY CHIEFS

Brand Officials' Action as Disrupting

MILLBERRY, Kan., Jan. 4.—Action of officials of District 14, United Mine Workers of America, in keeping off the ballot the names of duly nominated candidates because they are opposed to the Lewis "machine" is condemned in a resolution passed by Local Union No. 2397 here.

More Than Bosses' Attack.

"Our district officers in the election just held have been unjust to the rank and file of our union," says the resolution, continuing: "The edict delivered by our officers in keeping the names of duly nominated candidates off the ballot will do more to disrupt our organization in years to come than all the opposition from the coal operators."

The union took the case to court here and received a verdict against the district officers. The resolution flays the officers for forcing such a step on the union and also reminds them that previously they asked the members to support for election the judge who gave the verdict because he "is fair to the union."

Flay Two-Faced Action.

"We condemn the action of our district officials in not accepting the decision of a judge who they said was fair to our membership," the resolution states, "and also condemn their action in employing the law firm of Pinaru, Nulton and Stevenson in their effort to defeat justice."

Summon Home Chinese Minister.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—John V. MacMurray, American minister to China, has been summoned to Washington for conference on the Chinese situation, it was announced by the state department today.

AUSTIN, Tex., Jan. 4.—Twenty-six full pardons were announced today by Governor Miriam A. Ferguson, bringing her clemency total for her two-year term to 1,006.

HIGH COURT ORDERS DEPORTATION OF VAJTAUER, COMMUNIST EDITOR

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Emanuel Vajtauer, editor of the Czecho-Slovak Communist weekly Obrana published in New York, will be deported as the result of a ruling by the United States Supreme Court. The decision sustained an expulsion order made against him in April, 1924 by the immigration bureau.

Vajtauer was arrested while editor of Spravedlnost, Chicago daily. He had entered the country from Czecho-Slovakia in 1922. The charge against him was "Dissemination of inflammatory propaganda urging the overthrow of the government of the United States."

International Labor Defense has conducted the appeal to the Supreme Court and did everything possible to prevent the deportation. The charges of the usual liberal kind, were based on speeches and writing by Vajtauer in which he explained the Communist viewpoint.

WAUKEGAN COPS JAIL PICKETS OF AMALGAMATED

Boss Breaks Agreement, Locks Out Workers

By MAUD McGREERY,
Federated Press.

WAUKEGAN, Ill., Jan. 4.—Several pickets of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were arrested by Waukegan police in front of the Grunert & Rothschild man's clothing factory. The arrests do not mean, however, that the police have reversed their attitude toward the strikers, which was favorable in the earlier strike that was carried to victory in September, it is said. The present strike was called Dec. 8 to compel the firm to live up to its agreement made after the September walkout. Of the 87 employes 67 were out.

Shortchanged Payroll.

The principal grievances of the unionists are shortchanging on the payroll and the use by the boss of an anti-union "plan" who refused to pay union dues in order to provoke a showdown with the union. The protest stoppage by the workers was converted into a lockout the next day by the employer.

Boss Hired Gangsters.

Repeated searches by the police, who had been very sympathetic with the just and moderate demands of the strikers in September, revealed that in the present strike the pickets were completely unarmed, while a group of private guards hired by the company carried blackjacks and pieces of gaspipe for slugging the union men and girls. Frank and Gazella Adam, two professional strike-breakers, were found carrying a soldering iron and a two and a half-foot gas-pipe, wrapped in newspapers.

Builders Aid.

The union building trades workers of Waukegan, who average $12 a day, became active in support of the strike when they found that one experienced worker in the clothing factory had received a check of only 66 cents to cover a half day's work. Another experienced clothing worker got $1.69 for two days at Grunert & Rothschild's. The state's attorney has received a number of complaints of back wages due from the firm.

The new demands of the union, which are receiving general labor support in Waukegan, are the closed union shop, 44-hour week, time and a half for overtime, impartial chairman to decide disputes and a general wage increase.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 4.—An engagement which is believed to herald a new offensive was fought between vanguards of the Cantonese and Sun Chuang-Fang armies, said a dispatch from Hankow today. and all the world carrying our prosperity, it is the height of folly to hamstring our first line of national defense."

After claiming that in speed, gun elevation and number of craft, the U. S. navy was behind that of Britain and Japan, Johnson lashed on the universality of hatred among other nations for the United States. "It is a regrettable but none the less obvious fact that there is scarcely a nation on the earth that does not regard us with hostility and ill will and in many cases downright hatred."

"Navy of First Rank."

Calling attention to the economic and commercial importance of this country, the senator said that these facts, together with the enmity displayed by other nations towards it, "in prosperity and peacetime made necessary a navy of the first rank."

In the meantime, the appropriations committee of the senate entered with a report calling for expenditures on the navy of $814,652,680.

SAYS PREACHERS OVER RADIO CAN BE SHUT OFF JUST BY TURNING KNOB

By JOE CARROLL,
(Federated Press)

"If you don't want to hear the sky pilots, turn the little knob and you are off of them," declared Secy. Ed Nockels, Chicago Federation of Labor, in winding up discussion at the regular meeting accelerated by the sale to two churches of time on WCFL, the federation broadcast station (491.4 metres.)

Complaints that the preachers were using their purchased time to knock such labor aspirations as the 40-hour week were made by delegates who had tuned in and demands that the contracts with the churches be canceled were heard. The cancellation could be made on 30-day notice.

LABOR PARTY HEADS AND TORIES PLANNING JOINT ORGANIZATION

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Jan. 4.—An alliance between the conservative wing of the British labor party and Trade Union Congress with leading tories for a joint effort at the extermination of the liberal party and united war upon the living standard of the workers is seen in a dinner held at the home of Lord Wimborne, former lord lieutenant of Ireland.

On the labor party side were a group of conservative Trade Union Congress officials present in company with Phillip Snowden, former chancellor of the exchequer in the labor government. Among the tories were Winston Churchill, present chancellor of the exchequer, and Lord D'Abernon, former ambassador to Germany.

The dinner were apparently so overdone by the unprecedented good will that pervaded the gathering that they set a date for a future meeting at which the establishment of an organization comprising representatives of labor and employers will be considered.

STATE PREPARES TO ELECTROCUTE THREE SLAYERS

Final Appeal to Fuller Is Made

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—The shadow of the electric chair today was drawn closer to the so-called Waltham car-barn slayers: John J. Devereaux, Edward H. Hemblen and John J. McClaughlin.

On a New York train came the executioner. He went at once to Charlestown state's prison to perfect preparations for the triple electrocution, which is likely to take place at midnight.

Within the grim walls of the prison death cells near the electric chair today a terrible drama was enacted. Three heart-broken mothers prepared for the awful ordeal of bidding good-bye to their sons. Brothers and sisters and the wife of Mellauchlin together with the three mothers made up the party for the last visit. Each family was given an hour to spend with its loved one.

The men who are to pay the supreme penalty for the murder of James H. Fenton, aged Waltham carbarn watchman, seemed reconciled to their fate. They have not been informed of the exact time they are to be electrocuted but it is certain that there is no hope left, that death now is but a matter of hours.

Previous visits of Rev. Michael J. Murphy, priest, Chaplain, has enabled books on religious subjects and acute farewells.

While in the death house, the trio have all the rites and ceremonies they wish and anything they desire in the way of food.

A final appeal to Governor Fuller to commute the death sentence on the ground that Devereaux, the actual killer, was insane, was made by a committee of the clemency committee today.

Reveals Capital as Among Worst Cities in Dry Violations

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Violation of the prohibition laws is rampant in the national capital, under the noses of government officials. Representative Cochran, democrat of Missouri, declared today in introducing a light wines and beer bill in congress.

Cochran asserted he had figures from the police department showing that 18,209 persons were arrested in the capital during 1926 for violation of the dry laws, instead of the 8,305 announced by the police.

Here in the national capital, where 50 per cent of the populace is identified one way or another with the federal government, prohibition cases had a busy year, according to figures announced today.

The capital's prohibition enforcement record for 1926 showed:

5,305 arrests for violation of the dry laws.

32,000 gallons of liquors seized.

2,000 stills captured and confiscated.

566 automobiles seized.

Judge Sends to Grand Jury Case of Police Who Beat Up Morales

In the case of Agustin Morales, held in connection with the shooting at Melrose Park Dec. 7, Judge William J. Lindsay referred to the grand jury the application made by Mary Belle Spencer, Morales' attorney, for bench warrants for the arrest of officers who beat and mistreated the man.

The Mexican consul-general in New York has interested himself in Morales' case and has sent on funds of the Mexican government for his defense.

The adjourned inquest of the coroner's jury will be held at Melrose Park today at 1 o'clock. Morales will take the stand and tell, thru an interpreter, what happened on the night of Dec. 6-7. His friends confidently expect the jury to exonerate him.

SECOND STUDENT CONFERENCE HITS MILITARY DRILL

Collegians Urged to Join with Labor

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—While student representatives were attacking military training in colleges and universities at the national student conference at Milwaukee, other students attending the annual intercollegiate conference of the league for industrial democracy were doing the same thing here.

Closer contact between students and the workers was also urged at the New York conference.

Four Charges Made.

Four indictments against military training in the schools were presented by the students. They were: Compulsory military training is peacetime conscription; so-called optional drill is really worse because it is a subterfuge; it has the effect of bureaucratic control in education; that all preparedness and all drills are wrong. Felix Cohen of the Harvard law school made the report on military training and led the discussion.

Urge Student-Labor Combine.

William Spofford of the church league of industrial democracy urged the students to join the struggle of labor against exploitation. To get closer contact, he said, the students should even help on picket lines in strikes to better understand labor and its problems.

The students were told that if necessary they should stage student strikes and mass meetings on college campuses where academic freedom was denied instructors and students.

Told to Work For Labor Party.

Nathan Fine, a former organizer of the Farmer-Labor Party, pointed out to the students the part they could play in building a labor party in the United States. He said that practically every country had an independent labor party except the United States.

More than 20 colleges were represented at the conference.

Landis Refused to Sift the Evidence of 1917 Ball "Throw"

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Commissioner K. M. Landis, baseball "czar," was supplied with information back in 1932 that two baseball club owners together with a number of players were involved in the "throwing of games" but Landis refused to investigate the matter, according to a telegram received today by Frank G. Menke, sporting writer, from Ray Long, Milwaukee attorney. Cannon acted for Oscar "Happy" Felsch, former Chicago White Sox star, when the latter sued Charles E. Comiskey, president of the Chicago club, for back salary following his dismissal from baseball.

"What's all the shooting about?" wired Cannon from Los Angeles referring to the present baseball scandal. "In 1922 Felsch served Comiskey with an affidavit giving all the facts about the thrown games of 1917 and 1919. We offered proof of our charges to Landis but he refused to investigate. Two club owners were concerned in the throwing of the games."

WHY WAIT TEN YEARS TO GET GOLD WATCH?

DETROIT.—When 117 employes at the Packard auto plant were given gold watches by the company for completing 10 years of faithful service, the Detroit Labor News remarked:

"If the workers of the automobile factories in the city of Detroit could get their eyes off of gold watches long enough to see the value of an organization of their own creation they might be able to improve their working standards so that it would not be necessary for them to wait 10 years in order to get a gold watch."

Fight the Exploiters at Home By Aiding Fight of Nicaraguan People

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

PRESIDENT Coolidge claims the United States is maintaining a huge fleet of warships in Nicaraguan waters to "protect American lives and property." Secretary of State Kellogg supports the claim and gives all possible aid thru his department, in support of the dictator intervention by Rear Admiral Latimer, who has been busy examining the "facts on the ground" that harrassed Central American republic.

It is perfectly clear, however, that whatever U. S. property exists in Nicaragua is there for the purpose of exploiting the native population and resources. The "American lives" endangered are those of the agents of the exploiters who themselves remain at a safe distance here at home in "the states."

The Washington government, being the instrument of the profit takers, is organized and maintained to protect the interests of the exploiters. But that is exactly the reason why all American labor should develop its fight against the exploiters at home by opposing the attack of this same class of pillagers of the Nicaraguan people.

Workers and farmers join in combat against the mine owners, railroad barons, bankers at home. They can develop this struggle by joining forces with those combating these same interests abroad.

It is shown that fruit companies, railway and banking interests constitute the principal connection between the United States robber interests and the Nicaraguan people. It is the same connection that produced the historic strike of textile workers at Passaic, New Jersey, when the police, with poison gas and armored tanks were ordered out, instead of warships and the marines to do the fighting for the master class.

He shows that the United Fruit Co. has 171,000 acres of unimproved land with an approximate investment of $170,000 according to its own report.

The Atlantic Fruit Co. has 132,000 acres under cultivation, while the Tuyamal Fruit Co. imports bananas which are grown by the New Orleans and Bluefields Fruit & Transportation Co. (a subsidiary of Cuyamel) on the latter company holding in its own name about 150,000 acres of land in Nicaragua.

The Central American Exploitation Co. has a "concession" covering four million acres. The La Luz and Los Angeles Mining Co., owned by Mellon's friends in Pittsburgh, has been operating since 1901. The Gold Mines Co. has carried on some exploration work. Contracts for the exploitation of petroleum lands were signed with the Standard Oil company and a subservient Nicaraguan government, the territory covered being about 200,000 hectares. The Tonopah Mining Co., a large American company owns a majority of the $1,000,000 stock of the Eden Mining Co., has also carried on construction work in the gold fields. It owned a railroad to travel in the Tonopah Nicaragua Co., operating the Santa Rita mines.

The Pacific Railway or National Railway of Nicaragua, in which American bankers formerly shared control, is again nominally in the hands of the government, but under the management of J. G. White & Co., bankers. The fruit companies have short branch lines. Now railroad extensions are being contracted for between the "government" and an American corporation, notably the pan-American railway.

The Bragsmann's Bluff Lumber Co., in 1923, obtained a concession thru Leroy T. Miller for 20,000 hectares of nationally-owned land. An oil concession was granted Robert J. McKinlay of Kansas in 1924.

The United American corporation owns 24,000 acres in lands devoted to banana, sugar cane and pineapple cultivation.

Altho the National Bank of Nicaragua, formerly controlled by Brown Bros. & Co. and J. and W. Seligman & Co., was bought back by the Nicaraguan government in 1915, nevertheless, the new directorate includes three "Americans," Robert F. Loroo, president of the Bank of Central and South America; Abram F. Lindsey, financial expert, and Jeremiah Jenks.

Dunn then gives a long list of additional American firms reported as operating in Nicaragua, including the following: Cia. Mercantil de Ultramar, the Grecia Mines, San Albino Mines, Casa Commercial and Moravian Mission, Bluefields Tanning Co., Samual Wall & Co., Arnot Mahogany Co. (thru its subsidiary, the Nicaragua Mahogany Co.) & T. Williams & Sons, Wm. Cooper-Nicol Co., Pritchett Commission Co., H. F. Springar, A. Fagot & Co., Central American Sawmills, Consolidated Gold Mines, Nicaragua Mining Co., and Monpel & Co. As a result over 75 per cent of the foreign trade of the country is conducted with the United States.

Some of these names may sound native to Central America. But that is no doubt camouflage to offset local prejudice. It would be interesting for American workers, victims in this country of mining companies operating in Central America, to tell of conditions under which they are forced to toil in the United States. The metal mining industry at Rome is nearly 100 per cent unorganized. No more vicious attack against labor has been made in this country than that launched by metal mine owners against the metal mine workers. It is the same breed that invades Nicaragua and calls on the United States government "to protect its property."

* * *

American labor can develop its fight against the exploiters at home by declaring their solidarity with the oppressed people of Nicaragua and the other Central and South American countries.

Nicaragua, the a small country, is a typical victim of American investments abroad that totalled nearly two billions of dollars $1,906,395,-1013 during the year just closed. These are the figures compiled for 1926 by Dr. Max Winkler, vice president of Moody's Investors' Service, who declares that "the export of American capital during the coming year (1927) is not likely to be interrupted." Dr. Winkler continues:

"It would seem that the American dollar is becoming the mainstay of world finance, public and private. Our total investments abroad aggregate at the end of 1926 the impressive total of more than $13,000,000,000, nearly reflecting the steady expansion of American finance and industry into every section of the civilized world."

It was on July 1, 1925, that the New York Times carried the headline, "See Loans Abroad 12 Billions by 1926." But the actual figures have surpassed that mark by one billion dollars.

The significant fact revealed by the figures is that the greater part of these foreign investments have come into Latin-America, thus is now flaring into open rebellion against the tyranny imposed by the United States in protection of these investments. Foreign investments at the end of 1926 were distributed as follows:

| | 1926 | 1925 | 1913 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Canada | $3,515,000,000 | $3,027,000,000 | $750,000,000 |
| Europe | 137,400,000 | 3,025,000,000 | 350,000,000 |
| Latin America | 4,306,000,000 | | 1,500,000,000 |
| Miscellaneous | 1,086,000,000 | 898,000,000 | 205,000,000 |

In 13 years American investments in Latin-America have nearly quadrupled while during the past year they have increased by more than half a billion dollars. That is why American warships patrol Nicaraguan waters today. They are immediately rushed everywhere that the American dollar is threatened. Workers and farmers are blind to their own interests if they join in the hypocritical cry to protect "the lives and property" of American dollars infested abroad.

OLD FIGHTER UP IN KLONDIKE SENDS US MONEY AND MESSAGE

It makes the business manager of The DAILY WORKER feel good to receive a letter such as we give below. It is one of those which is passed around among the office force and editorial staff, as a character-builder and life-sustainer. More of 'em!

Tofty, Alaska, Nov. 26, 1926.

Dear Friend:

Inclosed find money order for $6.50, the best I can do. This is written in a cabin all by myself, 20 miles from the camp and pastafice. Am prospecting. This camp is all worked out and most of them left and the few that are left are all Henry Dubbs and none of them will read The DAILY WORKER. So you see, it is impossible for me to raise a dollar and I have very hard scratching myself. Am past 71 and ready for the scrap pail but I like to see the exploiter licked, being a fighter myself far over 40 years from Arizona to the Klondike.

Very truly yours,

Sam Houkin.

THREE ARRESTED IN ATTEMPT TO BUY UP JURORS

Investigation May Hit Many Others

The trial of corruption of the jury which tried and acquitted Sheriff Hoffman, Terry Druggan and Frank Lake in the jail conspiracy case has resulted in the arrest so far of three persons, with a prospect of further startling revelations.

Leslie Tashjian, deputy U. S. marshal, has confessed that he told another deputy, Thomas Smith, that there would be $15,000 in it if the latter would see that Joseph Plunkett, son of former Police Chief William Plunkett, got on the jury. Tashjian is under arrest.

Another who is held is Leo C. Moran, a lawyer who shares an office with Daniel M. Trevor, the mayor's son. He is the go-between who introduced Plunkett to Tashjian. Plunkett is also under arrest.

Deputy Smith, who refused to accept the bribe offered him, was allowed to go to his home, altho he is censured for failing to report the matter to his superior officers.

Hoffman denies any knowledge of jury fixing in his behalf, and Hope Thompson, assistant to the U. S. district attorney, declines to say whether any of the defendants in the trial are under suspicion. But he adds: "There is no telling whom this investigation will hit."

THE great man was sitting at a desk as I entered and when I told him about my mission he was graciously inclined to do anything to do any body a favor. Radical? Hell! Who was more radical than he was? Not discretion must be used. That man who was now in Sing Sing was Irish, so what right had he to disregard the West Side for the East Side? Why forsake Hell's Kitchen for Chrystie Street? Was the headquarters of Tammany Hall on the East Side? But that was different. However, this Irish Pole promised to forgive and to some extent forget.

IN those days the New York Call, a socialist daily, existed even more precariously than a financial way than our paper. Charles Ervin had a row on the payroll of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers as managing editor. The Call was always crazy enough to think that if they did a little boosting in front of the Tammany Hall color fakers, the latter might produce the said advertising. What happened, however, was quite different. It is a dirty trick even to pull off on a yellow socialist. The Tammany Hall labor fakers took the show but when the bill was presented they were conveniently in the washroom. And they laughed like the devil as Charlie Ervin and myself paid for the head quarters of the New York Central Trades Council looking for alms and not getting them. The fakers took a keen pleasure in seeing a bunch of atheists on their uppers. Some day I would tell the world they were more harmless than the Communists but they struggled hard to bring them money. The New York Call died and the Tammany Hall labor fakers chortled uproariously.

YES, Sidney Hillman Abraham Cahan and Morris Hillquit will pass the rest of the war against Communist influence in the trade unions but Sidney Hillman, Abraham Cahan, Hillquit, perhaps, since they are adept in the art of getting paid. The socialist functionaries who have nothing to do in the needle trades unions or access to a shop. They were well born in on the secretaryship. The A. F. of L. will lend the prestige of its grand old name to the crusade. And after a while the crusade will peter out and the right wing socialist leaders will know what they are fighting for—their jobs. This particular crusade will peter out, but the struggle between those elements in the trade unions who want to develop the unions as organs of struggle against capitalism and those who would use them to bolster up capitalism will continue until the latter find themselves taking up space on the historical dump heap.

Detroit Auto Plants Resume with New Year

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT.—After shutting down its most cases for inventory and repairs the automobile plants are again in operation. The Ford company reports that all of its plants are in full operation on a five-day per week basis. Dodge Bros are running with 17,000 employes. The Chrysler plant is operating at capacity. The Hudson people report that they did not shut down this year-end, but are going 20 per cent of a full force at this time.

An Answer from Pocatello

Pocatello, Idaho, Dec. 27, 1926.

DEAR COMRADE:

Looks like some of the "dormant boys" are in for some unfavorable publicity if they don't wake up. Apparently there are a number of the comrades to whom this term might be applied, but from here on it's to be business with me. As a starter and until I am able to figure out something better, I am pledging 10 per cent of my salary to the Keep the Daily Worker Fund, beginning this week and continuing until the $60,000 has been raised. On my salary of $42.50, this will amount to $4.25 weekly.

Also please send me a book of The DAILY WORKER stamps which I will sell and remit money as quickly as possible.

Am enclosing a one-year subscription to The SUNDAY WORKER and will continue to work for subscriptions for both The SUNDAY WORKER and The DAILY WORKER.

I am not so sure that the above entitles me to a "challenge," so intended will urge the comrades in District No. 10 who are not already active in behalf of The DAILY WORKER to adopt a similar system and put the fund across the goal without further delay. With best wishes I am

Yours sincerely,

S. E. RAMEY.

THE THREAT OF 1927

By LELAND OLDS, Federated Press.

That 1927 and 1928 will see a drop in labor's purchasing power appears in the report of a committee of credit-finance leaders, stock exchange firms and banking houses. The report is based on a sweeping survey of credit conditions in 24 industries, with special reference to deferred payment plans. It admits dangerous credit conditions.

Partial payment plans were developed, according to the report, primarily to provide a market for the overexpanded plant capacity which manufacturers created from the war. Foreign markets could not absorb the surplus. Rather than scrap the excess capacity they developed an artificial stimulant for the domestic market.

As with any dope, however, increasing doses of the partial payment stimulus proved necessary. Bankers and brokers now realise that it can't go on forever. So they are trying to forestall a critical collapse.

In automobile financing, says the committee, "comp-etition has torn most, if not all, the bones out of strict conservatism."

The economic conditions on the immediate horizon tend toward a decline of business. Since 1920 the building industry has increased its volume year by year, until now it gives employment to close to 3,000,000 persons, directly, and indirectly, because being linked with steel, paint, lumber, cement and many other trades which give employment to millions of others. It is now fairly certain that the peak of construction has passed, and it is only reasonable to assume that 1927 and 1928 will see a considerable decrease in the volume of building, with a correspondingly diminution of employment in the building and allied industries. This decrease in building will accentuate the decline in labor's purchasing power.

This studied report of financial leaders, for business consumption only, shows more nearly the true New Year outlook for labor than do all the forecasts turned out for newspaper front page copy. A large amount of available labor means a lowering of the wage scale. That sentence sounds ominous. What will be labor's answer?

Workers (Communist) Party

PARTY SUFFERS LOSS IN DEATH OF ORGANIZER IN GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Jan. 4.—The body of Comrade Peter G. King, city organizer of the Workers (Communist) Party of Grand Rapids, who died recently, was accompanied by a large number of friends and comrades to his final resting place at the Lalsva Cemetery.

That Comrade King was an active comrade and well beloved by his comrades was attested by the large number present, more than 200, and by the many floral offerings from the various organizations of which Comrade King was a member or with whom he was in contact.

The organizations sending flowers were the following: The Workers (Communist) Party of Grand Rapids, the Young Pioneers, the International Labor Defense, the Freiheit Club, the Lithuanian Chorus, the Lithuanian Dramatic Society, the Sons and Daughters of Lithuania and the Lithuanian Alliance Aid Society.

A number of speakers addressed the assembled comrades and friends of the deceased in Lithuanian and English, first at his home and later at the cemetery where the simple and solemn Communist ceremony was concluded by the singing of the Internationale by the members of the Young Pioneers.

Comrade King has been a leading spirit in the movement in the notorious "Open Shop Furniture City" of Grand Rapids.

Comrade King has been a member of our party ever since it was organized and his untiring activity, his unflagging enthusiasm and unselfish devotion to the movement was to a large degree responsible for whatever small successes were achieved in this city.

His fine spirit will be missed by those who have worked with Comrade King and the whole membership is agreed that in his death our party has sustained a very serious loss which can only be made up by an increased activity on the part of every member of the party. They feel as Comrade Barkin, the spokesman of the Young Pioneers so well expressed it, that "Comrade King was a link in a long powerful chain which reached around the world. This link is now broken. And it is up to us who remain to heal the breach; to replace the link and to weld the chain closer together by our renewed activity for the cause of revolution and the emancipation of the workers of the world."

Peter Nenonen

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 4.—The Workers Party in this state loses a very valuable member with the death of Peter Nenonen of Allston, Mass., who died here Dec. 30.

The funeral will take place Wednesday, at Evergreen Cemetary, Brighton, Mass.

Comrade Nenonen was a very loyal and devoted member of the party, particularly in the field of work among the Finnish workers. Until his illness he was District Organizer of the Finnish Bureau of the party and was well-known as a devoted leader and very capable speaker. He was well-known in the party and particularly among the Finnish workers.

Comrade Nanonen was a painter by trade and it was this occupation which was responsible for his contracting consumption from which sickness he died.

The District Executive Committee is sending expression of sympathy to the family. He is mourned by a wife and son.

ANOTHER CHALLENGE ANSWERED

Gentlemen: Stratford, Conn., Dec. 28, 1926.

I have received your letter of recent date in regards to the "Challenge." I have contributed $9.50 to your "Keep The DAILY WORKER Campaign" and I am not a Comrade or Party member and also I do love my dollars that you wrung from the "Guardians of the Gold Bags," but, who can sit and read that splendid paper, "The DAILY WORKER" and fail to send in their spare dollars to sustain it? I refuse to allow my loose dollars to get mouldy when I read the wonderful, inspiring, articles from Russia, China and other lands, where men and women give freely, even of their lives, in order to carry on.

CHELSEA, Mass., Jan. 4.—Boosters of The DAILY WORKER here have an affair planned for Jan. 9 at the Labor Lyceum to raise funds for the Keep The DAILY WORKER campaign. The entertainment will be vaudevillian, and everyone who attends is promised a real good time.

Comrade Shklar will be the speaker of the evening. Comrades here are working hard to raise their quota, and this affair is for that purpose.

Chicago Policewomen to Get Same Pay as Policemen in Future

The city council, after a struggle in trying to balance the budget, has granted the city's firemen and policemen a raise in pay. Instead of granting immediately the $300 raise asked for by these employes, it was decided to put a $150 raise into effect Jan. 1, followed by a second of like amount on July 1, which will make the total increase for the year $300.

On the matter of pay for policewomen there was a wrangle. These women have been receiving about $400 less per year than a patrolmen. Those who favored equal pay for both sexes for equal work finally prevailed. The policewomen get a raise of $300. Thirty are affected by this increase.

Employes of the house of correction get raises varying from $120 to $180 a year, while those at the contagious disease hospital come in for sums ranging from $60 to $80.

Superintendents of various departments fared somewhat better, for example, the superintendents of streets who come in for a raise of $1,000.

The aldermen protest that they have pared expenditures in other departments to the bone to grant these increases to various classes of employes.

Big Corporation Is Organized to Promote Buying on Installments

NEW YORK.—To boost instalment buying, a giant corporation has been formed with a capital of $31,000,000. It is the American Rediscount Corporation, patterned after the federal reserve system and incorporated in Maryland. It will operate with the Credit Corporation of America.

The new corporation was formed after a survey of 34 lines of business which pertain to a large extent to instalment selling.

Mother Killed "On Ride."

Police today sought a man known only as "Jammer" for the slaying of Mrs. Valeria Tymns, 17, a mother, whose body was found on a lonely highway.

The girl had evidently been "taken for a ride" and shot to death. Frank Tymns, her husband, and several who attended a party earlier in the evening were questioned.

Harmon Awards Bestowed.

NEW YORK.—Public ceremonies in handing out the awards of the Harmon Foundation for distinguished achievements among Negroes were held at St. Mark's Church, 137 street and St. Nicholas avenue on New Year's day. The four Negroes, who were residents of New York and prize winners, received cash and medals. Similar services, coinciding with Emancipation Day celebrations, were held in other cities where winners of awards lived.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, I. L. D. DEMANDS WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM NICARAGUA

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 4.—The International Labor Defense branch here has passed a resolution condemning the action of the United States government in the Nicaraguan invasion and calls for the immediate withdrawal of the troops from that country. A copy of the resolution was sent to Sen. Borah, chairman of the senate committee on foreign relations.

"We believe that the landing of troops in Nicaragua is exceedingly ill-advised and without ample cause," says the resolution, "and that the great mass of the American people are not in accord with the imperialistic policy of our country. Therefore, the Columbus local of the International Labor Defense, whose purpose is the furthering of the interests of the working class, enters an emphatic protest against the continued presence of armed American troops in Nicaragua and urge their immediate withdrawal."

The Views of the Secretary of Labor

SECRETARY OF LABOR DAVIS says the majority of employers in the United States "are paying their workmen what I term a saving wage."

This will doubtless surprise a good many workers, but it is only one of a number of surprising things to be found in the annual report of the secretary of labor for 1926. The secretary says that, "The prosperity of America today is one in which the American workers fully share. The American worker demands the best of all that is made and produced, and he is receiving it."

"Never has the Communist, the radical of every sort," says Mr. Davis, "had so little to complain of, and never has his sort of criticism been so little heeded, never has he been so few in numbers."

"Our people have never had greater need of observing thrift than in this period of well doing and being."

Mr. Davis believes—or says he does—that "today American industry is pervaded with a contentment, a harmony of effort, a spirit of partnership, greater and warmer than has ever been felt before. Industry itself is, for the most part, at peace. Except for conditions in the coal and textile industries which still call for adjustment, the workers, with little to complain of, are very generally employed under satisfactory conditions."

SINCE Mr. Davis acknowledges that there are a few details to be attended to in the textile industry, it is interesting to read his account of the department of labor's part, thru its conciliation service, in the great Passaic strike.

"Representatives of the conciliation service, Commissioner John A. Moffitt and William C. Lilier, made every possible effort to compose the differences existing between the mill operators and the strikers. The mills were visited; city, county and state officials consulted; conferences held with the clergy of various denominations and representatives of the press and numerous religious, civic, fraternal and other organizations.

"The striking employes were organized into a semi-military marching organization under the leadership of Albert Weisbord, who it was alleged, was a member of the Workmen's Circle, a Communistic organization affiliated with the Third International. The mill owners repeatedly stated that they were willing and anxious to take up and adjust any grievances that the strikers might place before them, but that they would not deal with 'Communistic leadership.'"

"The department's representatives being unable to formulate a plan acceptable to both sides, finally recommended to the department that an invitation be extended to the employers to confer with the secretary of labor and the director of conciliation for the purpose of devising an agreement on a tentative proposal which might be acceptable to all those involved in the controversy. Accordingly, on the week prior to March 17, the secretary of labor and the director of conciliation held conferences in Washington with representatives of the mills affected by the strike. At these conferences a tentative proposal was finally worked out.

"On March 17, a committee representing the strikers, headed by Albert Weisbord, with Hon. Frank P. Walsh, of New York, as counsel, visited Washington for the purpose, as stated, of asking for a congressional investigation of the Passaic situation. The department was informed that the committee conferred with several senators and congressmen, and following these conferences appeared at the White House and asked for an interview with the president. At the White House the committee was referred to the department of labor by the president's secretary as had been done in the case of the mill representatives. Mr. Walsh arranged with the secretary to meet the committee on the afternoon of March 17, and a committee of 15, headed by Mr. Weisbord, conferred with the secretary for more than two hours. The secretary presented the plan which the department had been able to have the mill representatives agree upon, which was in effect that the strikers return to work; that when they did return to work the mill management would meet, with such committees as the workers selected to take up any grievances concerning wages, working conditions, and the like, and that in the event of failure to agree, the employes should select one, the employers select one, and the secretary of labor name a third member of a committee to hear and determine any matters in dispute, and that any decision so reached would become effective and retroactive to the time the grievance was presented. In connection with this proposal, however, the employers informed the secretary, and he so stated to the committee, that under no circumstances would they deal with Weisbord, his associates, or any one who was not a textile worker or who had not been previously employed in their mills, but that they would deal with committees of their own employes, selected by their own methods, and in their own way. The conference adjourned after a two-hour session. The next afternoon the committee appeared at the department and presented a counter-proposal. The proposal submitted had previously been given to the press at Passaic that morning."

ALTHO Secretary Davis' report later reiterates the statement that the mill owners would not deal with Weisbord, it makes no mention of the fact that Weisbord withdrew and the hosses still refused to negotiate with the strikers. Of course, the report is not up-to-date enough to include mention of the settlements, but closes with the assurance that "representatives of the department, in line with their duty in the premises, from time to time visit the locality for the purpose of keeping in touch with the exact conditions, and in order to be of such assistance as they can if and when an opportunity is presented whereby a mutually satisfactory settlement would be reached that would clear up the whole matter."

At the conclusion of his report, Secretary Davis says: "The problems of the future in America are more and more certain to be not political but industrial and economic problems." Even he can read the signs of the times, altho he interprets them in terms of the rulers.

Judges "Too Busy."

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 4.—That a proposal to change the judicial district by which circuit judges are chosen will be made at the session of the legislature opening Wednesday is now practically a certainty. Each of these circuits have three judges under the present system and in some districts they are unable to handle the large amount of work which faces them.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

THE GERMAN COMMUNIST YOUTH

By IRVING M. GLAZIN.

IN Germany only about 300,000 young workers under the age of 18 are organised in the trade unions. This makes it one of the main tasks of the Young Communist League to work for the unionization of the working youth. At the same time energetic work is being carried on in the youth sections of the trade unions and once a month there is a special trade union day on which all union fractions must meet and the trade union policy of the league discussed.

Anti-Militarist Work.

The greatest achievement in this field is the creation of the united front working youth organisation—the Red Young Storm (sometimes called Red Youth Front). This organization with its 25,000 members is not only quite effective in combatting the fascist monarchist youth organizations, such as the Bismarck Youth, the Steel Helmet Youth, etc., but is also an excellent weapon in the fight against militarism and imperialist wars.

Means of Agitation.

The agitational means of the league are quite effective. Demonstrations with red flags (which is prohibited in our land of liberty) and orchestras are quite the usual thing. Extensive use is being made of posting proclamations, etc., on the walls in the streets. During the campaign for the referendum groups of comrades were walking from one building to the other and by singing songs made the people look out of the windows and thus they were able to agitate them for the referendum and to get contributions for the campaign fund. Many other means of agitation are being made use of, but space is too limited to dwell on all of them.

Propaganda.

The decision of the last congress that every member must go thru an elementary political course is being carried out quite successfully. The four-week league course for leading comrades was a great achievement, but a mistake was made in not sufficiently utilizing in the districts and sections the comrades who were thus trained. The influence of the mass organ, Die Junge Garde (The Young Guard), and the theoretical organ, Der Junge Bolschevik (The Young Bolshevik), is growing from day to day.

Reorganization of League.

This problem (similar to the situation in other leagues) was not dealt with correctly by the German Y. C. L. in Berlin, for instance, the reorganization had so many shortcomings that it was quite difficult to correct it. The mechanical aspect consisted of setting too short a period of time for the reorganization, there was an improper distribution of comrades among the factory groups, while the residential organizations were simply liquidated. These mistakes have since been corrected and the league is now being completely reorganized on the basis of factory and street groups. This makes the league more active and influential than ever before.

Fight Rights and Ultra Lefts.

The Y. C. L. is fully supporting the line of the comintern and the party against the right and ultra-left, as well as against the opposition in the Russian party (Trotsky, Zinoviev, Kameneff). The opposition existing in the league some time ago has been liquidated. At the last conference five-sixths of the delegates voted for the line of the central committee. Since then the leaders of the districts then in opposition (Hamburg, Erzgebirge, Vogtland) have acknowledged in resolutions that the standpoint taken by them at the congress was wrong. Comrade Gramkow, who signed up with the ultra-left at the enlarged plenum of the E. C. I., was not a representative of the Hamburg League district, but merely an advisory member of the youth delegation and thus solely represented his personal viewpoint.

Thus we see that the German Young Communist International is well on the road to accomplish its task of leading the young workers towards the approaching proletarian revolution in Germany.

KUOMINTANG IS DEFENDED BY U.S. PUBLISHER

North China Star Scores Extradition

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, Jan. 4.—Charles James Fox, editor of the American newspaper published in Tientsin, the North China Star, has published a leading article in his capacity as defending lawyer for the Kuomintang members arrested in Tientsin, signed with his own name, in which he declares that the explanations of Locker Sampson in the British house of commons in answer to the questions concerning the extradition of the arrested Kuomintang members were not in accordance with the truth.

Fox writes that the Kuomintang is absolutely no traitorous anarchistic secret society, as Locker Sampson declared in the house of commons.

He says: "If the police did not know that a committee of the Kuomintang was in the party office when they raided it then they knew at least on Nov. 25, for I personally informed them and the British consul about it. The British authorities therefore knew before the delivery of the prisoners to the Mukden authorities who it was they were handing over.

Deny Guilt.

"On the morning of Nov. 24 the British police and the British consul were informed that the arrested men had declared themselves not guilty of any political crime. The arrested had, therefore, already declared that they were political refugees. The search warrant and the arrest warrant were actually made out after the event, as only the Chinese legal authorities have the right to issue such documents, and not the police, as Sampson declared. Further, the arrested were not delivered to the Mukdeners on Nov. 6, but on Nov. 26.

Asks Questions.

"If the delivery of the arrested to the Mukdeners took place on the ground of nsance, why was the British ambassador in Pekin first of all asked?"

Defends Attacks.

With regard to the contention that the confiscated literature contained attacks on Mukden and upon the local officials, Fox points out that the Peking and Tientsin Times has carried on an extremely anarchistic campaign for years against the Chinese officials without being prosecuted in any way.

Mexican Towns Hurt by Mild Earthquakes

CALEXICO, Cal., Jan. 4.—In spite of recurrent tremors, several of them of considerable intensity, which shook this city and Mexicali, just across the border, early yesterday, the citizens of this city today were preparing to rebuild the city which was badly damaged by a succession of earth shocks early Saturday.

The tremors yesterday started a fire in Mexicali in which two buildings were destroyed, causing a loss of several thousand dollars. Other damage, however, was slight. A number of loosened bricks were knocked into the streets but nobody was injured.

Damage to the cities of Mexicali and Calexico by the shocks of Saturday is estimated to be in the vicinity of $1,000,000.

Black Butte, a dormant volcano 40 miles south of the border in Mexico, is reported to be active today. No alarm is felt, however, as the country surrounding it is uninhabited for a radius of many miles.

Real Reason.

"Foreign capital is not and has never been in danger. Hence I must understand that the declaration of a neutral zone for the protection of foreign interests is only an apparent reason, but that the real motive is for protecting the de facto government of Adolfo Diaz, who counts on the effective influence of Wall Street bankers.

"At the same time a similar action occurred at Rio Grande, the principal place for the deposit of our war materials.

"In 1912 Diaz also solicited, as he now does, the support of the American government, maintaining himself in power only thru the said support. It is obvious that the purpose of the American marines is to obstruct the operations of my army.

Saved Diaz.

Wheeler Asks Withdrawal.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4. — Senator Wheeler, democrat, Montana, has introduced a resolution in the senate demanding the immediate withdrawal of all American armed forces from Nicaragua. The resolution declares that U. S. marines are blocking the efforts of the liberal supporters of the rightful President Sacasa to restore "constitutional government."

The order of Admiral Latimer establishing neutral zone in the region of Puerta Cabezas, the liberal headquarters, was cited as a hindrance to the Sacasa supporters and a help to the usurper, Diaz.

Coolidge Defends Nicaraguan Intervention.

By LAURENCE TODD, Fed. Press

WASHINGTON—(FP)— While the liberal government headed by President Sacasa in the eastern half of Nicaragua has been virtually taken prisoner by American naval forces under Admiral Latimer, and while protests are pouring in upon Washington from every quarter of Latin-America, President Coolidge has made plain to the press correspondents that he is back of the present intervention.

Admiral Latimer, who wrote the notorious legal opinion for the navy department, upholding that Teapot Dome and other naval oil lands could be handed over to Albert Fall, is Coolidge's trusted agent in deciding what steps shall be taken. If Latimer decides that the Sacasa government shall not receive or send any telegrams or use its own radio station, as seems now to be proven to be the case, Coolidge remains calm.

Coolidge Claims "Absurd."

Senator Norris, progressive leader, pointed to this claim of need for protecting American lives and property in the liberal strongholds as being too absurd for belief. The first principle of sensible conduct by the liberals, he said, would be careful safeguarding of American lives and properties. Senator King of Utah echoed this suggestion that the administration is offering a fraudulent excuse for its war in support of Wall Street bankers.

King remarked that the shame of the whole record of American financial operations in Latin America and the Philippines is that the bankers have been able to mold the policy of the state department to advance their private interests by the use of the American government's armed forces.

Chairman Borah of the senate foreign relations committee, after Secretary Kellogg had again asserted him that the intervention was not interposition, withheld direct comment for a while, but said that he had received evidence that six or eight men in the United States, had for business reasons created the present war in Nicaragua. Since this war was made by the bankers' puppets, Chamorro and Diaz, now recognized by the American government, Borah's comment was interpreted as a rebuke to Coolidge and Kellogg.

Cablegrams received by Dr. Vaca liberal agent in Washington, after his own messages to Sacasa had been stopped by the naval censor at Puerta Cabosas, showed that the liberal agencies in Mexico, Guatemala and Costa Rica were likewise cut off from communication with Sacasa. He was, as Dr. Vaca said in a letter of protest filed with Kellogg, virtually a prisoner of the American forces.

Diaz an Old Tool.

Diaz, the militarist president recognized by Kellogg last month, was first set up as dictator in 1912 by American marines after Gen. Mena had been duly elected president. Diaz, unpopular in the capital then as he is now, appealed to Washington to have the marines "protect all the interests of the republic." He asked that Washington furnish him armed help. On Sept. 21, 1912, Minister Weitzel sent a note to Diaz' foreign minister, in reply, saying that the policy of the American government would be to protect its own nationels "and at the same time to use its influence thru all adequate means for the protection of the legal and recognized government," which has the Diaz regime set up by American rifles. This was an act of the Taft administration. Coolidge's present policy appears to be a repetition of the Toft scheme of conquest in favor of Diaz, the bankers' man, but it is less frank in declaring its purpose.

LONDON.—The captains of industry here profess to be optimistic about the year 1927, in spite of the inroads of the coal and general strikes. Whoever suffered, the banks did not. With the bank rate held at 5 per cent the banks are not worrying.

Latin America Uniting Against American Imperialism

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

THE revolt against American imperialism in Latin America is spreading rapidly and the struggle is becoming sharper.

A number of events in the last few weeks justify this conclusion.

They are:

1. The popular revolt in Nicaragua led by Sacasa against the Wall Street tool Diaz.

2. The recognition of the popular forces as the Nicaraguan government by Mexico in defiance of the American state department.

3. The statement of Pedro Zepeda, representative of the Sacasa government in Mexico City, in which he said:

The intervention of the United States in favor of Diaz has fanned the patriotism of every Nicaraguan into such unquenchable fire that all are ready to fight unyieldingly against foreign invasion.

4. The crushing defeat of the Diaz forces by the popular army AFTER the United States had instituted a blockade and landed troops in support of Diaz.

5. Open aid, by munitions and otherwise, of Mexico to the Sacasa army AFTER being "warned" by the American state department to discontinue all support.

6. Well-founded reports from Guatamala that a similar situation is developing there.

7. The unanimous condemnation of American intervention in Nicaragua by the Latin American press in a tone which shows a development of a Latin American consciousness far higher than any evidenced hitherto and which perceives American imperialism as the most dangerous foe to unity and independence of the Latin American people.

A NUMBER of occurrences combined has speeded up the tempo of the movement against American imperialism and given it a coherence which Wall Street and its state department, backed by the war department, have prevented it acquiring until now. These occurrences can be divided into two categories—one directly affecting American and Latin American relations, the other listing events outside the western hemisphere and indirectly influencing the Latin American nations.

THE first category of occurrences can be listed as follows:

1. The continuous offensive conducted against Mexico by Secretary of State Kellogg designed to force the withdrawal of the provisions of the 1917 Mexican constitution relating to oil concessions and titles.

2. The palpable connection between the offensive of the state department and the attempt of the Roman catholic hierarchy to stir up counter-revolution in Mexico.

3. The resolute attitude taken publicly by the Calles government against a policy of an interpretation of Mexican law to suit American investors.

4. The internal strength shown by Mexico in liquidating the crisis created by the catholic clergy.

5. The interference of America in the Tacna-Arica dispute and the dispatch of a militarist (General Pershing) to supervise the negotiations and plebiscite.

6. The one-sided treaty forced on Panama which makes this republic nothing more than a military and naval base of American imperialism and is concrete proof of the intention of the imperialists to grab and use, in the struggle for world domination, such Latin American countries as it desires.

7. The altimetum to Mexico that it stop supporting the popular govarnment in Nicaragua, tantamonnt to a declaration that Mexico cannot recognise a Latin American government on which Wall Street has not put its seal.

8. Open armed intervention by America in Nicaragua in behalf of a Wall Street loot AFTER the warning to America against interference.

9. American repudiation of the pledge of Filipino freedom.

THE second category of events which by reason of the colonial and semi-colonial status of the Latin American nations is in relation to America exert great influence in stimulating resentment of American domination and inspiring hope of success in the struggle against it may also be divided into two parts—one the list of events which indicate the existence of other forces hostile to American domination, the other including those struggles which show a world-wide upsurge against imperialism on the part of colonial and semi-colonial peoples and, more important still, the evidence that such struggles are no longer forlorn hopes but that each one of them holds the prospect of victory within a measurable period.

THE first group consists of:

1. Evidences of a renewal of the rivalry between Great Britain and America in Latin America shown by the acceptance of the terms of the Mexican government by British oil companies thus placing British interests in a more favorable position.

2. The acquisition of tracts of rubber land in Panama by British interests and the consequent furore in the American press.

2. The lack of sympathy expressed in the European press for the latest adventure of American government such as the Panama treaty and the characterisation of them as "imperialistic." The comment of Perstimes, semi-official political writer for the Echo de Paris, is typical:

The absorption of Panama proves, no matter what one says, that American imperialism exists. It differs from European efforts at hegemony only by the weakness of the obstacles it meets. . . . . After the conquest of the Spanish colonies in 1898 there came the subjugation of Panama in 1904, the Dominicon republic in 1907, Haiti in 1915, Nicaragua in 1916 and Honduras in 1924.

BELIEF in "American idealism." In American desire to "do good" for the Latin American peoples is fading rapidly. The complete lack of support by the leadership of the American Federation of Labor for the struggles of the Latin American masses against American imperialism, has shown to large sections of the Latin American workers the falsity of the promises that were made at the Pan-American conference in return for the institution of an expulsion policy against the Communists.

THE second group consists of:

1. The growing successes of the Soviet Union at home and its appearance in all colonial struggles as a friend of the nationalist liberation movements.

a. The constant denunciation of the workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union by the imperialist powers serves only to attract the favorable attention of colonial and semi-colonial peoples to its achievements. (Accusations of "Bolshevist influence" in Mexico by the American imperialist press, etc.).

2. The great sweep of the Chinese national liberation movement and its defiant attitude towards the imperialist powers based on its amazingly rapid victories and internal consolidation.

a. The statement made recently by Chang Kai-shek, commander-in-chief of the people's armies in which he announced that their victories were not for China alone but that New China would assist all colonial peoples struggling for national liberation from imperialism.

3. The great mass movement and armed uprising of the Javanese workers and peasants against British imperialism.

THE tone of the Latin American press always leaves no doubt that the "big brother" role of American imperialism is played out so far as public opinion in Latin America is concerned and that it is now seen in its proper light as a "big bully."

Writing from Buenos Aires, the correspondent of the Chicago Daily News says:

A visitor from Mars getting his first earthly impressions from the Buenos Aires newspapers would be convinced that the ONE GREATEST EVIL IN THE WORLD IS THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Two of the leading morning newspapers DEVOTE NEARLY TEN COLUMNS to cable dispatches which picture the UNITED STATES AS PLUNGING RUTHLESSLY AHEAD ON ITS IMPERIALISTIC PATH AND TRAMPLING DOWN THE WEAKER REPUBLICS. . . . . (Emphasis mine.)

AS in China where the weapon of the Nationalist has been used so successfully against British and Japanese imperialism, the Argentine press suggests this means of combatting American domination. The Daily News correspondent continues:

The . . . . . suggested solution is to find means to stop buying in the United States.

La Nacion declares this is the proper time to develop the coal resources of Argentine and cease buying American coal. IT SUGGESTS THAT CHILEAN COAL COULD BE USED IN THE MEANTIME.

THE former enmity between Argentina and Chile seems to have disappeared in the face of the danger from the common enemy.

The Brazilian press is also critical. The Journal of Rio Janeiro, quoted in a dispatch in the New York Times, characterizes the American policy in Nicaragua as "audacious and imprudent" and says that the landing of marines "shows a spirit capable of causing consequences certain to disturb continental tranquility."

JUST as much significance must be attached to the utterance of the press on the east coast of South America where no such open hostility to imperialism has manifested itself before. so must great importance be attached to the expression of the Mexican press, whose country would undoubtedly bear the brunt of armed intervention by the United States. El Universal, published in Mexico City, speaks plainly and uncompromisingly in an editorial published Dec. 28:

. . . . . the motives for indignation are not less when the hypocritical letting efforts used to cover it are contemplated . . . . .

No one takes the disemberking of marines in Nicaragua as anything but the culmination of the policy of attempts against the integrity of the Latin American republics . . . . . are nothing than the consequences of that aggressive imperialism which, at times, has tried to establish, under the mask of the Monroe Doctrine, and at other times under or with the names of the Wilson or Hughes doctrine . . . . . we hope these facts will serve to unmask before the American people the MAGNITUDE OF THE PROBLEM WHICH IS NOW OPENED FOR THE FUTURE OF PEACE IN AMERICA. (Emphasis mine.)

THREE points are to be noted in this editorial expression:

1. The challenge is made directly to the Monroe Doctrine—hitherto considered as the whole basis of relations between the United States and Latin America.

2. Latin America is spoken of as a bloc of nations whose interests are opposed to those of American imperialism.

3. An appeal is made over the head of American government to the American people.

THE general line of development of policy indicated in the three points above is the line which the increasing sharpness of the struggle and the open aggression of American imperialism will force the anti-imperialist movement to take in Latin America.

The entry of Latin-America, led by Mexico, into the ranks of nations which are part of the world struggle against imperialism is of the greatest importance for the American labor and revolutionary movement. A number of conclusions can be drawn for this which will be of value in shaping policy:

1. The conflict with Latin America, particularly its rapid development, shows the instability even of the prosperous American imperialism in which is becoming increasingly unstable.

2. The world situation and the growth of American penetration of Latin America while serving to industrialize these smaller nations is likewise creating a stern resistance to the increased exploitation.

3. The need of American imperialism for Latin America as a market and a source of cheap raw materials makes it especially vulnerable to forces set in motion by the rise of anti-imperialist sentiment and organization.

IT is the duty of our party to intensify its aid to the struggles of its brother parties, the Latin American labor movements and the whole struggle against American imperialism.

The Communist parties of Latin America must be given every assistance possible so that they may be able to develop strength and influence in the labor and peasant movements sufficient to enable these to play a decisive role in the struggle.

In the United States we must, to the limit of our resources, see that the American working class and its organized section wages a struggle to prevent armed intervention and bloody suppression of the Latin American peoples.

AROUND such slogans as, "Hands off Mexico, the leader of the Latin American peoples against Wall Street domination," and "Hands off Latin America. No Wars For Wall Street," the fight against American imperialism can be conducted with promise of success and the Latin American peoples shown that they possess in the American working class and its advanced section powerful allies in their ever-sharpening struggle.

Not the least of these tasks at home is the systematic and untiring exposure of the present trade union leadership as dangerous allies of imperialism and deceitful foes of both the Latin American and American

PARTY SUFFERS LOSS IN DEATH OF ORGANIZER IN GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Jan. 4.—The body of Comrade Peter G. King, city organizer of the Workers (Communist) Party of Grand Rapids, who died recently, was accompanied by a large number of friends and comrades to his final resting place at the Laisve Cemetery.

That Comrade King was an active comrade and well beloved by his comrades was attested by the large number present, more than 200, and by the many floral offerings from the various organizations of which Comrade King was a member or with whom he was in contact.

The organizations sending flowers were the following: The Workers (Communist) Party of Grand Rapids, the Young Pioneers, the International Labor Defense, the Freiheit Club, the Lithuanian Chorus, the Lithuanian Dramatic Society, the Sons and Daughters of Lithuania and the Lithuanian Alliance Aid Society.

A number of speakers addressed the assembled comrades and friends of the deceased in Lithuanian and English, first at his home and later at the cemetery where the simple and solemn Communist ceremony was concluded by the singing of the Internationale by the members of the Young Pioneers.

Comrade King has been a leading spirit in the movement in the notorious "Open Shop Furniture City" of Grand Rapids.

Comrade King has been a member of our party ever since it was organized and his untiring activity, his unflagging enthusiasm and unselfish devotion to the movement was to a large degree responsible for whatever small successes were achieved in this city.

His fine spirit will be missed by those who have worked with Comrade King and the whole membership is agreed that in his death our party has sustained a very serious loss which can only be made up by an increased activity on the part of every member of the party. They feel as Comrade Barkin, the spokesman of the Young Pioneers so well expressed it, that "Comrade King was a link in a long powerful chain which reached around the world. This link is now broken. And it is up to us who remain to heal the breach; to replace the link and to weld the chain closer together by our renewed activity for the cause of revolution and the emancipation of the workers of the world."

Peter Nenonen

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 4.—The Workers Party in this state loses a very valuable member with the death of Peter Nanonan of Allston, Mass., who died here Dec. 30.

The funeral will take place Wednesday, at Evergrsen Cemetery, Brighton, Mass.

Comrade Nenonen was a very loyal and devoted member of the party, particularly in the field of work among the Finnish workers. Until his illness he was District Organizer of the Finnish Bureau of the party and was well-known as a devoted leader and very capable speaker. He was well-known in the party and particularly among the Finnish workers.

Comrade Nenonen was a painter by trade and it was this occupation which was responsible for his contracting consumption from which sickness he died.

The District Executive Committee is sending expression of sympathy to the family. He is mourned by a wife and son.

Chicago Policewomen to Get Same Pay as Policemen in Future

The city council, after a struggle in trying to balance the budget, has granted the city's firemen and policemen a raise in pay. Instead of granting immediately the $300 raise asked for by these employes, it was decided to put a $150 raise into effect Jan. 1, followed by a second of like amount on July 1, which will make the total increase for the year $300.

On the matter of pay for policewomen there was a wrangle. These women have been receiving about $400 less per year than a patrolman. Those who favored equal pay for both sexes for equal work finally prevailed. The policewomen got a raise of $350. Thirty are affected by this increase.

Employes of the house of correction get raises varying from $120 to $180 a year, while those at the contagious disease hospital come in for sums ranging from $60 to $80.

Superintendents of various departments fared somewhat better; for example, the superintendents of streets who come in for raises of $1,000.

The aldermen protest that they have pared expenditures in other departments to the bone to grant these increases to various classes of employes.

Big Corporation Is Organized to Promote Buying on Installments

NEW YORK.—To boost installment buying, a giant corporation has been formed with a capital of $31,000,000. It is the American Rediscount Corporation, patterned after the federal reserve system and incorporated in Maryland. It will operate thru the Credit Corporation of America.

The two corporations are formed after a survey of 34 lines of business which operate to a large extent in installment selling.

Mother Killed "On Ride."

Police today sought a man known only as "Jemmor" for the slaying of Mrs. Valeria Tymms, 17, a mother, whose body was found on a lonely highway.

The girl had evidently been "taken for a ride" and shot to death. Frank Tymms, her husband, and several who attended a party earlier in the evening were questioned.

Similar services, coinciding with Emancipation Day celebrations, were held in other cities where winners of awards lived.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, I. L. D. DEMANDS WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM NICARAGUA

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 4.—The International Labor Defense branch here has passed a resolution condemning the action of the United States government in the Nicaraguan invasion and calls for the immediate withdrawal of the troops from that country. A copy of the resolution was sent to Sen. Borah, chairman of the senate committee on foreign relations.

"We believe that the landing of troops in Nicaragua is exceedingly ill-advised and without ample cause," says the resolution, "and that the great mass of the American people are not in accord with the imperialistic policy of our country. Therefore, the Columbus local of the International Labor Defense, whose purpose is the furthering of the interests of the working class, enters an emphatic protest against the continued presence of armed American troops in Nicaragua and urge their immediate withdrawal."

The Views of the Secretary of Labor

SECRETARY OF LABOR DAVIS says the majority of employers in the United States "are paying their workmen what I term a saving wage."

This will doubtless surprise a good many workers, but it is only one of a number of surprising things to be found in the annual report of the secretary of labor for 1926. The secretary states that, "The prosperity of America today is one in which the American workers fully share. The American worker demands the best of all that is made and produced, and he is receiving it."

"Never has the Communist, the radical of every sort," says Mr. Davis, "had so little to complain of, and never has his sort of criticism been so little heeded, never has he been so few in numbers."

"Our people have never had greater need of observing thrift than in this period of well doing and being."

Mr. Davis believes—or says he does that "today American industry is pervaded with a contentment, a harmony of effort, a spirit of partnership, greater and warmer than has ever been felt before. Industry itself is, for the most part, at peace. Except for conditions in the coal and textile industries which still call for adjustment, the workers, with little to complain of, are very generally employed under satisfactory conditions."

SINCE Mr. Davis acknowledges that there are a few details to be attended to in the textile industry, it is interesting to read his account of the department of labor's part, thru its conciliation service, in the great Passaic strike.

"Representatives of the conciliation service, Commissioner John A. Moffitt and William C. Liller, made every possible effort to compose the differences existing between the mill operators and the strikers. The mills were visited; city, county and state officials consulted; conferences held with the clergy of various denominations and representatives of the press, and numerous religious, civic, fraternal and other organizations.

"The striking employes were organized into a semi-military marching organization under the leadership of Albert Weisbord, who it was alleged, was a member of the Workmen's Circle, a Communistic organization affiliated with the Third International. The mill owners repeatedly stated that they were willing and anxious to take up and adjust any grievances that the strikers might place before them, but that they would not deal with 'Communistic leadership.'"

AFTER quoting the strikers' demands, Mr. Davis goes on to say, "The department's representatives being unable to formulate a plan acceptable to both sides, finally recommended to the department that an invitation be extended to the employers to confer with the secretary of labor and the director of conciliation for the purpose of devising an agreement on a tentative proposal which might be acceptable to all those involved in the controversy. Accordingly, on the week prior to March 17, the secretary of labor and the director of conciliation held conferences in Washington with representatives of the mills affected by the strike. At those conferences a tentative proposal was finally worked out.

"On March 17, a committee representing the strikers, headed by Albert Weisbord, with Hon. Frank P. Walsh, of New York, as counsel, visited Washington for the purpose, as stated, of asking for a congressional investigation of the Passaic situation. The department was informed that the committee conferred with several senators and congressmen, and following these conferences appeared at the White House and asked for an interview with the president. At the White House the committee was referred to the department of labor by the president's secretary as had been done in the case of the mill representatives. Mr. Walsh arranged with the secretary to meet the committee on the afternoon of March 17, and a committee of 15, headed by Mr. Welshord, conferred with the secretary for more than two hours. The secretary presented the plan which the department had been able to have the mill representatives agree upon, which was in effect that the strikers return to work; that when they did return to work the mill management would meet with such committees as the workers selected to take up any grievances concerning wages, working conditions, and the like, and that in the event of failure to agree, the employes should select one, the employers select one, and the secretary of labor name a third member of a committee to hear and determine any matters in dispute, and that any decision so reached would become effective and retroactive to the time the grievance was presented. In connection with this proposal, however, the employers informed the secretary, and he so stated to the committee, that under no circumstances would they deal with Weisbord, his associates, or any one who was not a textile worker or who had not been previously employed in their mills, but that they would deal with committees of their own employes, selected by their own methods, and in their own way. The conference adjourned after a two-hour session. The next afternoon the committee appeared at the department and presented a counter-proposal. The proposal submitted had previously been given to the press at Passaic that morning."

ALTHO Secretary Davis' report later reiterates the statement that the mill owners would not deal with Weisbord, it makes no mention of the fact that Weisbord withdrew and the hosses still refused to negotiate with the strikers. Of course, the report is not up-to-date enough to include mention of the settlements, but closes with the assurance that "representatives of the department, in line with their duty in the premises, from time to time visit the locality for the purpose of keeping in touch with the exact conditions, and in order to be of such assistance as they can if and when an opportunity is presented whereby a mutually satisfactory settlement could be reached that would clear up the whole matter."

At the conclusion of his report, Secretary Davis says: "The problems of the future in America are more and more certain to be not political but industrial and economic problems." Even he can read the signs of the times, altho he interprets them in terms of the rulers.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

THE GERMAN COMMUNIST YOUTH

By IRVING M. GLAZIN.

IN Germany only about 300,000 young workers under the age of 18 are organized in the trade unions. This makes it one of the main tasks of the Young Communist League to work for the unionization of the working youth. At the same time energetic work is being carried on in the youth sections of the trade unions and once a month there is a special trade union day on which all union fractions must meet and the trade union policy of the league discussed.

Anti-Militerist Work.

The greatest achievement in this field is the creation of the united front working youth organization—the Red Young Storm (sometimes called Red Youth Front). This organization with its 25,000 members is not only quite effective in combatting the fascist-monarchist youth organizations, such as the Bismarck Youth, the Steel Helmet Youth, etc., but is also an excellent weapon in the fight against militarism and imperialist wars.

Means of Agitation.

The agitational means of the league are quite effective. Demonstrations with red flags (which is prohibited in our land of liberty) and orchestras are quite the usual thing. Extensive use is being made of posting proclamations, etc., on the walls in the streets. During the campaign for the referendum groups of comrades were walking from one building to the other and by singing songs made the people look out of the windows and thus they were able to agitate them for the referendum and to get contributions for the campaign fund. Many other means of agitation are being made use of, but space is too limited to dwell on all of them.

Propaganda.

The decision of the last congress that every member must go thru an elementary political course is being carried out quite successfully. The four-week league course for leading comrades was a great achievement, but a mistake was made in not sufficiently utilizing in the districts and sections the comrades who were thus trained. The influence of the mass organ, Die Junge Garde (The Young Guard), and the theoretical organ, Der Junge Bolschevik (The Young Bolshevik), is growing from day to day.

Reorganization of League.

This problem (similar to the situation in other leagues) was not dealt with correctly by the German Y. C. L. in Berlin, for instance, the reorganization had so many shortcomings that it was quite difficult to correct it. The mechanical aspect consisted of setting too short a period of time for the reorganization, there was an improper distribution of comrades among the factory groups, while the residential organizations were simply liquidated. These mistakes have since been corrected and the league is now being completely reorganized on the basis of factory and street groups. This makes the league more active and influential than ever before.

Fight Rights and Ultra-Lefts.

The Y. C. L. is fully supporting the line of the comintern and the party against the right and ultra-left, as well as against the opposition in the Russian party (Trotsky, Zinoviev, Kamenev). The opposition existing in the league some time ago has been liquidated. At the last congress five-sixths of the delegates voted for the line of the central committee. Since then the leaders of the districts then in opposition (Hamburg, Erzgebirge, Vogtland) have acknowledged in resolutions that the standpoint taken by them at the congress was wrong. Comrade Grunberg, who sacked the with the ultra-left at the enlarged plenum of the E. C. C. I., was not a representative of the Hamburg League district, but merely an advisory member of the youth delegation and thus solely represented his personal viewpoint.

Thus we see that the German Young Communist International is well on the road to accomplish its task of leading the young workers towards the approaching proletarian revolution in Germany.

Why don't you write it up? It may be interesting to other workers.

A. C. W. MEMBERS, SUSPENDED, MAKE RETRIAL DEMAND

Left Leaders Brand Action Autocratic

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 4. — Demand for a rehearing and trial of their cases has been made of the general executive board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America by the two members of the union here who were arbitrarily suspended by the joint board, which also caused them to lose their jobs, because they are members of the left wing.

Charges False.

The two workers, Peter Team, shop chairman, and Sem Sugarman, in letters to Joseph Schlossberg, general secretary, charged that the cheress places against them were fabrications and slanderous and demand that the union grant them a trial in order that they can prove their innocence of attempts to "undermine the union and encourage disorder."

About Disagreements.

Both admit that they were not in accord with policies of the joint board, but declare they were within their constitutional rights in opposing those policies. "The local of which I was chairman did resent the efforts of the officers to co-operate with the employers in imposing piece work," said Team.

More Orderly.

"This disagreement was not expressed in any manner that would negate the provisions of our constitution. The local also found itself in disagreement with the officers of the joint board on the occasion of settling stoppages. In this case the local also expressed itself in an orderly manner in conformity with the constitutional provisions of our organization." He said that to deny him a fair trial would mean that the officers declare disagreement with them a crime.

Sugarman Asks For Trial.

Sugarman declared, "I frankly confess being in disaccord with many of your basic policies. I maintain that every member as well as I has the right to dissent and to criticize the present trend of our organization under its present leadership. If it be a crime to criticize those of our administration who make mistakes or advocate mistaken policies, then I am guilty of that crime. But of the charges you mention to justify my expulsion I am absolutely innocent, and can prove it. The action he said of suspension and deprivation him of his livelihood is so monstrous and autocratic that he feels even they would reconsider it and rescind their action.

Sleeping Car Porters Meet Mediation Board

NEW YORK. In the course of six-teen months the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters has virtually accomplished what might normally be considered the impossible. To the astonishment of the Pullman Company and the Mediation Board, perhaps one of the most thorough and most scientifically organized cases which the Mediation Board will have occasion to handle was presented to it on Dec. 8 by A. Philip Randolph, general organizer of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. The preliminary hearings were staged in the Congress Hotel in Chicago. The mediators who were assigned to conduct the hearings were Hon. Edwin P. Morrow and his assistant Mr. Dickers.

CLOAKMAKERS TELL HOW BOSSES ARE WORKING WITH THE SIGMAN MACHINE

NEW YORK (By Mail).—The desperate situation in which the Sigman machine in the International Ladies' Garment Workers finds itself as a result of the revolt of the rank and file causes their most strenuous efforts in the direction of breaking the union and demoralizing the workers.

Scores Join Sigman.

The following incidents related at the cloakmakers' meeting are characteristic:

Tells a worker: "When I came to my shop this morning I was greeted by the boss and told that I could start work on three conditions: piecework, $1.50 for a certain size of garment, and immediate registration with the International."

Says another: "In the shop at 149 West 19th street we had a visit from a Sigman agent, but instead of talking to workers he began fraternizing with the boss. He told him he should order the workers to registar at the international office and than get the conditions best for him."

Brother vs. Brother.

Another worker tells a story of his own brother who is the shop chairman of his shop and one of the Sigman gang. This right winger tried to intimidate his brother as well as some other workers into registering with the international and, failing to do so, he played a trick on his brother. On pay day he got $4 less than he was entitled to. On complaining to the boss he got the reply that the shop chairman said that his brother slacked at work.

Sigman Gets "Rada."

"Communism" is the slogan of Sigman. This was his reply to the challenge of Hyman to obey the results of a referendum to be taken under control of non-partisans. This was his reply to the declaration of the Committee of Fifty of the shop chairmen that an election should take place under the control of the shop chairman. Sigman knows who this committee is, how far they are from the Communists, but it suffices that they want new elections to be conducted honestly, hence his repetition of the "slogan."

Committee Statement.

"We want to make it clear that we were elected by the shop chairmen's meeting for the purpose of attaining for our members the right for stating whom they want as their representatives," said the Committee of Fifty. "Immediate dangers threaten the union in case these demands are not granted. The way to consolidate the union, in the view of the committee, is to call all the shop chairmen to a meeting where they will be able to express their opinions about the conflict. The fact that we were elected at a meeting called by the joint board does not mean that the committee is not supposed to do the work entrusted to it, whether its results will be found wanting by one or both of the sides."

Enthusiastic Meetings.

Two enthusiastic meetings of the pressers and of the finishers took place yesterday. Especially successful was the pressers' meeting in the Manhattan Lyceum. The hall was full and here, as well as at the other meeting, Hyman and other leaders were cheered for the fighting speeches they made.

Framed Workers Freed.

Yesterday 12 cloakmakers who were arrested following the instigations of the Forward wars freed. They were taken while serving on a committee to visit a scab shop and stop some of the right wingers who refused to pay the 10 per cent tax for the strikers.

In the shop they were greeted with gun shots by one of the gangsters. but on the coming of the police they were charged with shooting and were taken in custody. Tha Forward characterized them as gunmen and gangsters, which was used in the court as material against the strikers. They were put under very heavy bail.

And only when the real gunman came as a witness did the truth come out. He and the bosses cood not substantiate their accusations, but it was found out that tha record of the gunman was that of a criminal, and therefore the accused were let free.

Chicago Teachers Do Sums Out of School and Find Their Dollar Has Shrunk in Value

Chicago teachers, using a little arithmetic out of school, have discovered that the purchasing power of their dollar has shrunk so that, despite some raises in the salary scales, they can buy less now than in 1914.

E. L. Keasel, special secretary of the Chicago Principals' Club, has published the results of his investigations in the club's periodical. The elementary school teachers, he finds, are the only class who can claim a raise. Their salaries have been raised to the point where they can actually buy 101.8 with their dollar, as compared with 1914.

With the elementary principals, it is different. Their buying power is represented by the decimal 77.1, while 76.68 is accorded the high school principals.

A graph showing the fluctuations thru all the years since 1914 reveals that all of the classifications of teachers reached their poorest buying power in 1920, and that it is in all cases except that of the elementary teachers still far below pre-war times.

Co-operative Celebrates.

PATERSON, N. J.—The tenth anniversary of the formation of the Butchers' Co-operative, and the fifth of their moving into their own building, was celebrated here by a gathering of over 2,000 people. The Co-operative has attained success after a bitter fight with the private retailers and the wholesalers. A special edition of Freiheit was published in honor of the anniversary.

Paterson Does Its Bit.

PATERSON, N. J.—This city has collected in cash for the striking cloakmakers the sum of $1,400. It was obtained from individuals, organizations and at mass meetings.

KOSHER BUTCHERS GET DEMANDS IN MOST SHOPS, OTHERS SOON TO WEAKER

NEW YORK, Jan. 4. — Hebrew butchers in half the 2,500 kosher butcher shops of New York won the $3 wage increase they sought with a six-day strike. The old agreement expired at midnight Christmas Eve, but most of the butchers began the strike at sundown closing Friday. Five thousand responded to the strike call.

Joseph Belsky, secretary of the Hebrew butchers' union, says that the remaining shops will be signed at once. The new minimum scale is $43 weekly. The minimum for first-class kosher butchers is $75.

Concert and Dance at Gotham for Box Makers

NEW YORK—The thirteenth week since the beginning of the strike has come and passed. The Papar Box Union is still fighting for decent working conditions and appropriate wages. The paper box calling is the most exploited industry in the world. Wages range from $7 to $18 per week. How long the worker must suhmit to this is a question of how soon he actualizes the rights that are due him. Picket lines will continue to be formed until justice has been given him. Hired men with guns, cut-throat dogs and long prison terms cannot frighten him. He is going right on.

A concert and ball for the benefit of the strikers and their children will take place at the New Star Casino, New York, on the eve of Lincoln's birthday, Feb. 11. Workers are urged to attend this affair and help to make it a success. Every penny taken in will go for the upkeep of the kitchen at the Church of All Nations, the furnishing of food otherwise, shelter, clothing, etc.

The general relief committee asks all volunteers who took out boxes from their offices during the recent joint Christmas drive, to return what they have taken in, to Room 225, 799 Broadway.

We will send sample copies of The DAILY WORKER to your friends—

LOAN SHARKS AND BIG LANDLORDS FOOLING FARMERS

Advise Lower School Funds in S. D.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Jan. 4—Striking blindly against their hard conditions without knowledge of what really ails them, the exploited farmers of South Dakota have now undertaken to shake off land taxes, because that is the only thing they can see. An organization has been perfected to cut down educational appropriations as one of the chief tax devils, but the new organization is being fostered by the insurance companies and land mortgage concerns and is being led by one Monserd, of Sioux Falls, a busted banker.

41 Per Cent Tenants.

Forty-one per cent of the farmers in the state are now tenants, and the lands are being turned over every day by foreclosures to the insurance companies and other money-lending concerns. These concerns, assisted by the rich farmers, have naturally turned to reduction of land taxes to save themselves and to the advocacy of indirect taxation to be borne by the tenant farmers and other workers as a remedy for increasing burdens upon land.

Fiery Speech by Fakso.

At a meeting held at Plandreau, in this state this week there was a large turnout of farmers, tha gathering being conducted by Monserud and other large land owners. One of the speakers who addressed the meeting was State Senator Benson of Moody county. Benson was speaker of the house of representatives in 1919-20 when this state, following the example of the other highly "patriotic" commonwealths, passed an anti-syndicalism bill. The measure has never been used, but it is handy for any emergency that arrives. In a speech to the farmers Benson declared that he had become a "political free-thinker" and advised the farmers that "the best thing they could do would ha to get machine guns and go ont hunting the politicians."

Northwestern Shopmen Get Raise of 3 Cents

Arrival of the New Year meant 3 cents an hour more to shopmen of the Chicago and North-Western Railroad.

The wage increase was granted shortly after a similar raise had been given shop employes of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road on Dec. 16, to take effect Jan. 1. Some 30,000 employes benefit.

Packers Drag Suit in Courts for 25 Years

WASHINGTON.— The government has won another round in its quarter-century fight to divorce the big five packers from non-related industries.

The district of Columbia court of appeals granted the motion of the department of justice to dismiss tha appeal of Swift and company and Armour and company, which sought to reverse a decision of the district supreme court refusing to declara null the consent decree of 1903 by which the meat industry agreed to halt extraneous hnelnesses.

It was indicated that the packers would appeal to the supreme court in the next round.

Dies in Gang War.

It was decided that the Russian branch had special functions to perform, such as assisting the foreigners to acquire a education in their civil rights, to give them the benefit of legal advice, etc.

A mass meeting for Russian workers was planned for Jan. 30, and a committee appointed to further the project.

K. C., Kansas, Bank Closes Door After Missouri Failure

KANSAS CITY, Kans., Jan. 4.—The Intercity State Bank has closed its doors. Steady withdrawals which began several weeks ago after the closing of the Terminal Trust Company in Kansas City, Mo., are blamed for the closing.

Deposits totaled approximately $250,000, of which more than $150,000 had been withdrawn. Following examination, voluntary liquidation will begin, President Jack C. Nonese said. Nonese explained the bank had had no connection with the closed Kansas City, Mo., bank.

Hoover for Route Thru St. Lawrence

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The support of Secretary of Commerce Hoover is strongly behind the plans for a waterway from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic by way of the St. Lawrence river.

In a report to President Coolidge, Hoover opposed the proposed All-American canal thru New York state. He said it was impracticable and uneconomic and would cost about $631,000,000. The St. Lawrence route would cost $140,000,000 he said.

Bank Closes; Xmas Present for Farmers

By Young Farmer.

BELDEN, N. D. — There is more room for organizing the farmers here than ever before. On Dec. 11th, two weeks before Christmas, the First National Bank of Stanley, the county seat of Mountrail County, closed its doors. This was a nice early Christmas present for the farmers. Thru this incident the farmers are beginning to realize how the present robber system works. Young farmers are coming to entertainments of the Young Workers League.

Stage Set for Race for Office of Mayor

The old party line-ups for the mayoralty campaign are as follows:

Mayor William E. Dever, democrat, for re-election, supported by a nearly united party.

William Hale Tohmpson, republican, former mayor, backed by the Crowe-Galpin hunch.

Dr. John Dill Robertson, one of Thompson's "rats," backed by the Smith group as also supported by Thompson's former angel, Fred Lundin.

Herry is Illusiva.

WASHINGTON.—Harry F. Sinclair won a tactical victory in tha supreme court when it granted his petition for a review of the case involving his leasing of tha Teapot Doma oil reserve from ex-Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall.

Sinclair and Fall are due to go to trial next month in the District of Columbia supreme court here on charges of conspiracy in connection with the lease.

The Manager's Corner

How to Celebrate the Birthday of The DAILY WORKER.

On January 13, 1927, The DAILY WORKER will celebrate its third birthday. The manager offers for the big event a few suggestions, which may be helpful.

The Birthday Editon will be a special Sacco-Vanzetti number. What is more appropriate then that a working class daily should devote its birthday number to the cause of these two martyrs of labor? In connection with this number there will be special articles on the Sacco-Vanzetti case, as greetings to The DAILY WORKER, by some of the best radical writers in the country. Among them will be: C. E. Ruthenberg, William Z. Foster, Max Bedacht, M. J. Olgin, Scott Nearing, Ben Gitlow, James P. Cannon, Max Shachtman, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, and many others. This will be a memorable number.

Plans should be made now to secure Birthday Greetings for The DAILY WORKER both from individual sympathizers and from organizations who might be induced to take all or part of a page on this important occasion. Plans should be made also for the sale of extra copies of this unusual number. Orders should be sent in now.

For January 13, I would suggest a series of informal parties or gatherings at comrades' houses, in various parts of each city and town. To these gatherings should be invited all readers of The DAILY WORKER in that locality, and all those in sympathy with it. NO COLLECTION SHOULD BE MADE AT THESE GATHERINGS. The object of the affair should be to organize a body of loyal DAILY WORKER Builders for our big subscription campaign from January to May 1, to secure 25,000 subscribers for the paper. A strong appeal should be made for volunteers for this big campaign. With the spirit of good comradeship which such a gathering will develop, the returns should mean much for the establishment of a strong body of DAILY WORKER Builders and the future success of The DAILY WORKER.

Foreign Investments and the Struggle in the Labor Movement

American capitalists invested in other countries a grand total of $1,906,705,101 in the year 1926.

Lenin, writing in 1915 on "Imperialism," speaks of the "HANDFUL of people . . . . . who plunder the entire world by simple clipping of coupons."

He said:

According to pre-war and pre-war bourgeois statistics, the export of capital brought an annual income of eight to ten billion francs. Now, of course, this income is much larger.

Today we find that the export of capital in one year by one country alone—the United States—is equal to the total income of ALL capital invested abroad by ALL nations before the war.

The total foreign investments of the United States are estimated now, according to Moody's Investor's Service, at $13,000,000,000.

Figuring the average income at 6 per cent (and this is a very conservative figure by reason of the immensely high returns demanded by American capital because of its dominant position) we get an average annual income from foreign investments alone of $780,000,000.

In other words, the United States, based on Lenin's estimate of pre-war income from foreign investments of ALL countries, is now securing a sum equal to about half of the total pre-war income from this source.

Even if we take into consideration the lower purchasing power of the dollar the sum is staggering. It is convincing proof of the extent to which American finance capital has extended its sphere of influence to the whole world outside of the Soviet Union.

The tremendous income from foreign investments, in addition to the huge profits of domestic capitalism, furnishes the explanation for the reactionary tendency in certain sections of the labor movement. This is the basis of all the worker-employer co-operation policies, social insurance schemes installed by corporations, "welfare work," "efficiency unionism," like the B. and O. plan legalized in the Watson Parker bill, and all the other schemes designed to throttle genuine trade unionism.

Said Lenin in the same work from which we quote above:

It is easy to perceive, that from such a large additional profit (for it is received in addition to the profit which the capitalists extract from the workers of "their own" countries) labor leaders and the upper strata of the workers' aristocracy CAN BE BRIBED. So the capitalists of the "progressive" countries bribe them by a thousand different means, direct and indirect, open and secret.

The enormous salaries of the American labor officials, removing them far from the level even of fairly well-paid workers are one of the methods of the bribery to which Lenin refers.

It makes no difference at all that these salaries appear to be, and quite often are, ratified by the more privileged sections of the working class. This in itself is only a proof that imperialist corruption, "parasitism," Lenin calls it, affects other groups in addition to officialdom.

Here is the secret of the struggle now going on in the trade union movement. The drive against the left wing has for its purpose the crushing of all resistance to the imperialist program for the trade union movement.

The movement is financed by the super-profits derived from the tremendously profitable foreign investments totaling $13,000,000,000, dispensed in one form or another to the labor agents of imperialism—an investment which American imperialism is only too willing to make and on which it receives returns averaging far higher than the 6 or 7 per cent it extracts from its foreign loans.

The offensive of imperialism is today principally INSIDE the labor movement. It is only when the more exploited sections of the workers revolt, as in Passaic, that its offensive, aided by its labor agents, appears openly and directly as a means for the destruction of trade unionism.

The exposure of the methods of imperialism and its tools, and the development of effective methods of combatting them, is the most important task facing our party and the left wing.

Have We Prosperity?

Yes. • This is the scientific answer to the caption. But is this prosperity all inclusive or one-sided?

Here is the answer:

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The offices of the Motten Distributing Co., 1010 St. Clair Ave., Cleveland, were the scene of a near riot when over a thousand jobless, seeking work, stormed the building.

The men began gathering at the doors of the company at 5:30 a. m. in response to a newspaper ad for 100 men to distribute telephone directories. By 6:45 ever a thousand men formed a milling mob in the rear of the building where they had been instructed to apply for jobs. When the rear door was opened the men made a rush forword each hoping to be in time to be hired. In the rush windows were broken and as the crowd inside grew, a partition gave way and the crowd surged into the main office of the company.

The men packed in like sardines, and unable to force their way out, were forced to stand for three hours while waiting to be hired. The company officials did not even condescend to inform them why no one had as yet been hired by 9:00 a. m., or whether or not enybody would ever be hired. The men, many of whom had been out of work for months and were flat broke, were in no mood to be bullied and shoved about by the officials of the company, and soon fists began to fly. Police reserves were called out and cleared the building with their usual brutal tactics. Later some 60 man were hired and the rest dispersed, and told to "keep moving."

The New Drive on Militant Trade Unionism

ARTICLE X.
By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

THE present position of the socialist party bureaucracy is the inevitable result of their insanity and unwillingness to draw the correct conclusions relative to imperialism—the final stage of capitalism, of their denial of the role of a revolutionary party, of the necessity for the dictatorship of the working class, of their failure to understand the role of the trade unions as the rallying centers of the whole working class, of their failure to understand the methods and reasons for the struggle for immediate demands in the period of imperialism, and of their endeavor to draw a line between the masses of the Soviet Union and the proletarian state power of the Soviet Union.

THE socialist bureaucracy becomes the ally of the trade union bureaucracy and, not so openly because of their better understanding of the means of fooling the masses, but just as consciously, the ally of imperialism itself.

For the struggle between right and left in the trade unions is essentially a struggle between those elements who feel the pressure of imperialism and those who benefit from it to some extent.

THE socialist party bureaucracy has the ambition to become the intellectual expression of the trade union bureaucracy. It dreams of leading a labor party, of becoming His Majesty Morgan's loyal opposition. It will not lead workers to struggle because it thus comes into conflict with trade union officialdom and the ruling class and jeopardizes its chances of "sane and constructive leadership."

Lest some reader think the above is an exaggeration of the policy of the socialist party bureaucracy and that it still retains some integrity, I will quote from an article by David P. Berenberg published in the New Leader for Dec. 25. It is called "Until the Spree" is Over."

THE whole theory of betrayal and of profiting from betrayal is set forth in detail in this article. I will quote at length for the reason that rarely does one come across such a perfect sample of "socialist" thot.

Berenberg predicts a crisis and a crash. Does this lead him to the conclusion that a united front with the Communist Party, the left sections of the labor movement, will be needed to beat back the tide of reaction?

Does Berenberg even visualize the socialist party leading these struggles?

HE does neither. He simply lays down a program by which the masses can be betrayed wholesale—by the socialist party.

In "Point 4" Berenberg says:

When wages all along the line go down, the worker will begin to clamp out of his trance. . . He will be reduced to penury—in some cases to starvation. Then what? If this were Great Britain the worker would turn to the Labor Party. HERE, THE COMMUNISTS WILL GET HIM. . . LET US NOT FOOL OURSELVES. . . WHEN THE AMERICAN WORKER GROWS RADICAL HE WANTS TO DREAM SOMETHING. He has not been trained to constructive political thinking. . . The Communist chap is going to get him.

I am not predicting the Communist revolution, WASHINGTON AND WALL STREET WILL DE PREPARED TO MEET THE EMERGENCY. . . The jails will be filled with politicals; new "red" laws will appear. . . a feeling of futility and meanness will be left behind. (Emphasis mine.)

ONE will notice that nowhere does Berenberg speak of the role of the socialist party in the gigantic struggles he predicts—and in which prediction he is correct. The reason he does not mention the socialist party or issue a clarion call for it to prepare for this period of battle is apparent in "Point 3.":

Then WILL FOLLOW THE SOBER MOOD during which the American worker will learn to approach his problems like a mature person. . . THEN WE WILL HAVE OUR INNINGS, if we have sense to offer him. (Emphasis mine.)

IT is almost needless to say that all this is precisely the line of reasoning followed by socialist officialdom the world over. The conditions of life become unendurable (as in Germany), the workers organize to overthrow their oppressors and the oppressors' state, the socialist bureaucracy sobs tears the struggle, becomes the ally of the capitalist class and when the workers are beaten back to a lowered standard of living (as they have been in Germany) cries out to them:

"See, didn't we always tell you, you must wait for evolution and not try revolution?" Among workers there is a very obscene but completely descriptive phrase for characterizing this kind of treachery.

So far, a fascist or semi-fascist dictatorship has followed this kind of "evolutionary" policy.

BUT what of the present period when the basis must be laid for the inevitable struggle? What of the millions of workers who do not share in the prosperity and who need organization, instruction in the elementary theory and tasks of the class struggle? What of the paralysis and death that come to a labor movement which abandons all idea of struggle because of oops thrown to various sections of it by the ruling class with a deadly purpose in mind—like a thief throwa a chunk of poisoned meat in the dog who endangers the success of his looting expedition?

BERENBERG replies and in replying, he gives away the secret:

"Item 4:"

FOR THE PRESENT THERE IS NOTHING TO BE DONE. NO AMOUNT OF 'HUSTLING,' 'DRIVING,' 'URGING,' 'GETTING TOGETHER,' or whatever else it may be called, WILL BRING NEARER BY A SINGLE SECOND THE TRAIN OF CIRCUMSTANCES THAT ALONE CAN MAKE THE WORKER RECEPTIVE TO OUR PROGRAM. Social forces will bring him our way at last. (Emphasis mine).

It is any wonder that a leadership which exudes this poisonous fatalism finds itself in the camp of the sworn enemies of the working class—the agents of imperialism in the labor movement?

THIS doctrine, a product of a pseudo-intellectualism which partakes of the atmosphere of the dim recesses of Greenwich Village and the smugness of the well-paid labor leaders in class-banquet costs at a Civic Federation dinner, is a denial of Marxism which sees social forces as something the revolutionist must use and not wait for. Revolutionists, as Marx pointed out, make history just as well as history makes revolutionists.

THIS is the philosophy with which the intellectuals of the socialist party have been saturating the leadership of the trade unions, under their influence. It finds its reflection in the policy of worker-employer cooperation and "efficiency unionism" in such formerly militant organizations as the International Ladies' Garment Workers and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

This policy, hitherto pursued with some caution by the leadership of these unions, has been given a tremendous impetus by the outright pressure of the American Federation officialdom and now converges with the "Baltimore and Ohio" plans, Watson-Parker government mediation, (the governor's commission in New York in war on the sections of the membership which are not under the influence of the socialist party bureaucracy.

ONLY agreement on main lines of policy could bring such close organizational cooperation as can be seen in New York and elsewhere with Tammany Hall supporters enlisted side by side with the New Leader, the Daily Forward, the needle trade union officialdom and the socialist party bureaucracy against the majority of the membership.

The socialist party leadership is not only "making leva to reaction," as Norman Thomas so delightfully puts it, but has long age lost its virginity, become promiscuous and appears as a hardened old madam whose role is that of procuring new recruits for the house of prostitution where workers are supposed to lose all shame and which is run under the name of "American trade unionism" by the labor agents of imperialism—the Greens, Wells, Lewises and other lesser lights.

Peasant Newspapers in the Soviet Union

(Special Moscow Correspondence of WILLIAM F. KRUSE.

NOT so long ago the labor press throuout the world proudly noted on the "Krestianskaya Gazetta" peasants' Gazette), the great farm weekly of Soviet Russia, had attained the circulation of a million copies. A paper like this is a power to be reckoned with in any country and doubly so in Russia, where a single newspaper may and often does spread its light to every man woman and child in a whole village. The history, growth, achievements and functioning of this paper is therefore sure to interest all readers of the workers' press the world over.

History of Peasant Papers.

Prior to 1917 there was no special peasant paper in all Itussia, and the establishment of a publication for the peasantry was undertaken only after the November revolution. During the first period of the development of the Workers' and Peasants' Republic, newspapers functioned chiefly as a means of carrying the news of civil war and anti-intervention struggles to the masses. Papers at this time were distributed free of charge and large quantities were printed. With the advent of the new economic policy, government support to the press was curtailed, papers had to be paid for, circulation naturally dropped, and the work of making the newspapers real, self-supporting organs of mass expression was begun in earnest.

By the end of 1923 eight provincial peasant papers had been established on a self-supporting basis, including the central peasant daily, "Bidnota," which then had a circulation of 15,000. This circulation has since been built up to 200,000. This daily, which is linked up with "Pravda," is, however, rather an organ for the most advanced peasant elements. The very fact of its being a daily is a sign of this since the mass of the peasantry, tho finding a newspaper a necessity, has not yet come to the point of requiring news in daily installments. Obviously a cheap, popular, weekly, mass organ was needed and the XIII Party Congress issued instructions for the founding of the "Krestianskaya Gazetta" as a bridge between the peasants and the party organization.

Reaches Million.

Its tremendous paid circulation and army of peasant correspondents proves that it has become this in every sense of the word. Now that this circulation has passed the million mark it may well boast of being the most popular farm paper in the world, and certainly the most intimately connected with its readers. This circulation is not localized but spreads all the way from Kamchatka in Crimea, nor is an army of hawkers necessary to keep this circulation from falling.

Has Six Editions.

This paper acquaints its readers with the international situation, with domestic affairs, gives agricultural advice and serves all other usual functions of a farm paper. In order properly to serve this vast field it publishes six editions, one each for Siberia, Caucasus, Crimea, Ukrainia, Central Russia and the Red Army. The first three to five pages are the same in all editions, the remaining three to five very.

Peasant Correspondents.

The cost of a paid professional news-gathering service over this vast territory would be prohibitive—and what is more important, would defeat one of the basic functions of this paper. So its news comes from an army of voluntary correspondents from every corner of the land. "Selkors" (rural correspondents) or "Sovietskors," the rural counterpart to the "Rabkor" or worker correspondent of the factory and workshop. This is not a very old institution even in Russia but to date it has developed by leaps and bounds.

In January, 1924, there were only 80 registered Selkors on this sheet, a year later there were already 1,735. While by November, 1925, there were no less than 5,052 regular volunteer contributors to the paper. The latest available figure (January, 1926) gives 5,645. In addition, there are almost a thousand women Selkors writing for the "Krestianka," the women's paper, and a considerable number for the peasant youth paper, both of which, with several others to be listed later, are published here.

But this army of volunteer "Journalists" by no means exhausts the list of those who write to and for the Krestianskaya Gazetta. In 1923 about 1,000 letters a month were received, a year later this had increased five fold, and December, 1925, a total of 63,971 communications were received by this newspaper. The nunmber by no means shows a steady mechanical increase but varies widely from month to month, according to the time at the peasant's disposal for writing, and his interest in matters that call for communication. Thus, shortly before the collection of the taxes there was a very heavy correspondence, and again was another flood of letters asking

It must be noted that altho on the staff of twenty secretaries reads the letters and determines it according to the questions raised. Matters dealing with law and legislation are referred for reply to one of the 400 experts on soviet law attached as collaborators to the newspaper. Questions of agriculture are similarly dealt with in detail by the experts employed by the peoples' commissariat for agriculture. Similarly with other departments of the government. There is nothing cursory or superficial in the treatment given this correspondence—it is the veire of the peasant masses, and it le heeded carefully.

Recently the tax laws were ramodelled by the Narkomfin in response to peasant correspondence, and Lenin, prior to the introduction of the new economic policy, gave serious heed to similar communications. After Lenin's death the council of people's commissars provided for the preparation of a monthly summary of this peasant correspondence for the information of all members of the highest governmental units. Thus it can be seen that this is probably the most significant peasant tribune that the world has ever seen.

There are results from these complaints if they are found lo be justified. Thus during the past year there were recorded 452 cases brot to trial as a result of letters of complaint, 108 Communist Party members were expelled and 53 were disciplined, 532 officials were removed from their positions, 150 subjected to lesser penalties and 22 imprisoned.

Publish Many Journals.

This publishing house issues not only this million-copy weekly, and this 200,000 daily, but also quite a list of special organs for the country-side. These is a comic paper, Lapot (Bast shoe) 50,000; Krestyanka, women's paper, 50,000; "Sam Sebye Agronom" (I am my own agronome) 70,000, Peasant Youth 50,000, Koustarni (Home Artisan Journal) 50,000, Peasant Journal 50,000; Soviet Way (organ for members and officials in the village soviets) 15,000; Selkor, (organ of the peasant correspondents) 15,000; the Chitalnya (organ for the anti-illiteracy reading huts, 50,000.

Many Languages.

This is just one of the many establishments for the printing and spreading of peasant literature and newspapers. These are published not only in Russian, but in Jewish, Armenian, Ukrainian, Tartar, etc. All in all they weave a network of contacts between city and country, between the ever-vigilant Communist Party and the vast masses it leeds on the road of the revolution.

UPTON SINCLAIR'S NEW NOVEL

Upton Sinclair

(Copyright, 1926, by Upton Sinclair.)

"There will be, Bunny, rast assured—if I should hust, boss, in Washington, nothing would ever convince Roscoe and O'Reilly that I hadn't wormed it out of you. I'm afraid nothing would convince your father, either. But I want to be sure that your own mind is clear, you'll know I haven't been dishonorable."

Bunny gave Jim his hand on it; and next one of the tworom poker players who sat all night in the smoke-filled living room of the "ranch house" at Paradise could have settled more perfectly the part of impassivity. Bunny even made himself finish lunch, and he wrote a check to cover part of the debt of the labor college, and gave his friend a hearty farewell and best wishes for his new job. Then he drove off in his car, and was free to look as he left, which was quite unhappy.

He decided that it was his duty to tell his father about this conversation. It couldn't make any difference to Dan Irving's work, and it might yet be possible to keep Dad out of the mess. But when the elder Irving got home that evening Bunny had no time to get in a word. "Wall, son, we got those leases!"

"You don't say. Dad!"

"They've been approved, and Verne left for Washington today. They'll be signed next week, and you and me are going to take a trip and have some fun!"

Joe and Jack Marries had been out of jail for a couple of months, their comrades of the Workers' Party having raised together the bail. Now came their trial, with several other members of the party. The state was undertaking to show that this organization was nothing but the Communist Party under a camouflage, it was the "legal" part of the organization, but the real direction was in the hands of an "underground" group, which received funds and book orders from Moscow. It advocated the forcible overthrow of the "capitalist state," and the setting up of a "dictatorship of the proletariat," after the Russian pattern. On the other hand, the indicted men claimed that they had organized a legitimate working-class political party, and their attitude to violence was purely defensive. They believed the capitalists would never permit the power to be taken from them peaceably, so the way they who would overthrow the constitution, and the workers would have to defend them.

The prisoners were all tried at once, and the period lasted for three weeks and was quite an education in contemporary problems—or would have been, had the newspapers reported both sides. To get the workers' side you had to sit in the courtroom, and Bunny went whenever he could get loose from the university. He was there when the prosecution put on a "surprise" witness, and it was a surprise to Bunny also: his boyhood friend, Ben Skutt! Ben, it appeared, had grown a beard and had taken a course in the Moscow dialect, and had turned up as an old worker out of a job, and been admitted to the Workers' Party, and before long he got a job in the office. Now he had harrowing stories to tell of the criminal things he had heard said, and of efforts the party had made to induce the oil workers to rise and destroy the wells. On the other hand, as Bunny was told by Ikey Mennes, the Communists were ready to swear that Ben Skutt had himself done all the proposing of destruction at the crisis of the strike he had spent his time insisting that the only way to save the situation was to get a bunch of real fighting men and burn up half a dozen oil fields.

CONGRESSMEN OBJECT TO POISON IN BOOZE; MAKE IT UNANIMOUS!

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Many members of the present congress "drink to excess," was charged on the floor of the house by Rep. Celler (D) of New York, in the course of heated debate over the government's practice of poisoning denaturants in industrial alcohol.

Celler made his charge in commenting on a resolution just introduced by his colleague, Rep. Black (D) of New York, which would make the government liable to homicide charges in cases where drinkers died from the effects of wood alcohol or other denaturant poisoning.

In the senate, Senator Edwards of New Jersey, introduced a resolution calling on Secretary of the Treasury Mellon for "all information," on the practice of poisoning alcohol.

After denouncing the practice as unciviliged, Rep. Celler demanded congress put an end to it.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

RADICALS observe Christmas, not because they feel like worshipping the descent of the stork on a lowly Bethlehem domicile, but for the good and sufficient reason that all human beings like to surrender to christianity at least once a year. The catholic church knows thru the confessional that all people are human, and the ability of the catholic church to diagnose the cravings of human being is in no small degree responsible for that church's success.

• • •

SUCCESS: In the last analysis it means the ability to survive, and while the development of the tool of production is responsible for all change (and necessity is the mother of invention) there are so many by-products of this general principle that, as far as most people are concerned, the incidental things dominate the fundamental.

• • •

COMMUNISTS do not fall for descriptory philosophizing. The editorial staff of The DAILY WORKER does not write according to Heyle, but according to Lenin and Marx. Therefore you will not read any New Year sermons in The DAILY WORKER. Our sermons are just as fresh in June as in December. The New Republic is responsible for those observations. As you may know, The New Republic is a weekly magazine that caters to that section of the capitalist class that lives on dividends extracted from the enslaved workers by efficient slave drivers like Elbert Gary. The New Republic tribe abuse Gary for being so raw, but draw their dividends and abuse the Communists for being so raw—on the other side.

IN a decisive struggle between labor and capital The New Republic tribe will stick to the capitalist system. But in the meantime the liberals are a positive nuisance to the capitalist fundamentalists. And by capitalist fundamentalists I mean those who are convinced that any system is justified in using any means at its disposal to maintain its supremacy.

• • •

HERE is where The New Republic comes in. I am quoting from the issue of January 5, 1927. "A survey of world affairs as 1927 opens reveals a clear advance over the situation a year ago. In western Europe the tension has been greatly relaxed by the estrance of Germany into the league and the coming into effect of the Locarno treaties, and while the economic situation leaves much to be desired, it is now certain that the worst corner has been turned."

• • •

THE editorial hack who had to turn out a certain number of words for his employer turned out the kind of language that vegetarians, chiropractors, fanatics and anti-everythingites (for anti's sake) cherish. But what we are concerned with is the assumption that the league of nations wants peace, or that spiritual urges have a determining effect on the course of history. No. Those of us who write for an organization know that all things that are written do not always represent the views of the man behind the typewriter, but the collective view of the organization for which he works. The league of nations is the creature of imperialism, which only wants peace to the extent that it feels that peace may be conducive to its well-being.

• • •

WHEN a liberal paper suggests or states emphatically that the league of nations or any other creation of imperialism aims to eliminate war, the best thing we can do is to suggest that our readers indulge in a hearty guffaw. New Year's resolutions in capitalist papers have two eyes on the advertising revenue that flows from increased circulation. We tell the truth as we see it, because that is our business.

BIG NAVY MEN IN HOUSE SURE OF NEW GRAFT

To Build Three Boats at $16,000,000 Each

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Champions of a bigger American navy scented victory today as they closed in for the ailmax of their fight in the house for three new cruisers.

With the defenders of the administration program weakened by the defection of many republican stalwarts, it appeared likely the house would adopt the cruiser proposal.

Cost $16,000,000.

Rep. Tilson, of Connecticut, republican leader, who is slated to move an amendment to the naval supply bill, said that $500,000 to $600,000 would cover preliminary work on the ships. Modern cruisers, completely armed, cost $16,000,000 each.

Whether the support pledged by influential republicans would melt all opposition appeared to be a matter of doubt. The "big navy" forces listed speaker Longworth, Rep. Begs of Ohio, assistant republican floor leader; Rep. Snell (R.) of New York, chairman of the rules committee, and Rep. Garrett of Tennessee, the democratic leader, as supporters.

Bill Will Pass.

Rep. Butler (R) of Pennsylvania, chairman of the house naval affairs committee, predicted the three cruiser amendment would be adopted. If this is done he will move an amendment to his bill authorizing ten cruisers, limiting the number to seven, he said.

Passage of this bill and the British measure authorizing the elevation of big guns on American ships from 15 to 30 degrees will constitute the future "big navy" program for this session, Butler said.

Naval Chairman Exposed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5. —(FP)— Chairman Butler of the house committee on naval affairs, who has appealed to the country for $400,000,000 for new construction in the navy, has been exposed in flagrant misrepresentation of the naval strength of Great Britain, which he used as a comparison.

Butler, leader of the bigger navy activation, declared that "England has already built 40 of these cruisers," when talking of new light cruisers. He left the impression that Britain had, since the war, been engaging in a tremendous expansion of her naval strength.

Make Investigation.

The national council for prevention of war has compiled records to show that all but 8 of the 40 light cruisers possessed by Britain were completed prior to the Washington conference on naval limitation; 26 of them were finished before the end of the war. All of the cruisers owned by the American navy were completed between 1923 and 1925. The average age of the British cruisers is 8 years, and of the American only 2 years. Moreover, 34 of the 40 British light cruisers are of less than 5,000 tons—the minimum size for effective use in modern naval warfare is offensive fighting. The average is below 5,000 tons. All of the 10 American light cruisers are of 7,500 tons each.

In speed, range of guns, and capacity to carry airplanes, the American light cruiser fleet far outranks the British.

Paneme Canal Tells.

PANAMA CITY. — Tells to the amount of $154,064,037 were collected from 37,589 commercial vessels which passed thru the canal from its opening on Aug. 15, 1914, to Dec. 31, 1926, according to the report of the governor of the canal zone.

VIENNA'S SUICIDE LIST FOR 1926 TOTALS 720; YOUNGEST 3, OLDEST 80

(Special to The Daily Worker)

VIENNA.—This city's suicide record for 1926 reaches the astonishing total of 720, with the maiming of 1,100 more who attempted self-destruction but failed. The city keeps a grim book, in which is noted with scientific accuracy every detail of the suicide and of the hour, weather conditions, etc., associated with the case.

Of the 720 who killed themselves here last year the youngest was a child of 3 and the oldest was 80. In one case two girls at 16 bound themselves together and jumped into the river.

The cause of the epidemic is said to be now a spirit of hopelessness rather than the pangs of misery in the first pre-war years.

SIGMAN'S THUGS ASSAULT LOYAL N. Y. UNIONIST

Cloakmaker Is Near Death from Beating

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK. — Joseph De Mola, chairman of the Menroe Dress shop at 322 7th avenue is in Bellevue Hospital today on the brink of death, the victim of ruthless gangster violence. He was attacked by two gangsters and beaten senseless with lead pipe on the last day of the year after he had refused to ask the workers of the shop to attend a meeting arranged by the international under the leadership of President Morris Sigman to further its unionwrecking campaign in the dressmakers' union.

Supported Local.

According to workers in the shop, De Mola was approached by a business agent of the International just after the noon hour and asked to attend the meeting and invite the other workers of the shop. He refused that the workers had voted for the present administration of the joint board which the International has opposed. Later, the management came to the meeting arranged by the International for the destruction of their local.

In the late afternoon, according to the eye-witnesses, two gangsters well known to be allied with the right wing forces, rushed into the shop and attacked the helpless De Mola. They beat him into insensibility before police could be called. De Mola was taken to Bellevue with a fractured skull, and the two gangsters, Louis Blumenfeld and H. Kurss arrested on charges of assault.

Has 5 Children.

De Mola, who is a presser, had received a threatening letter the previous week, according to his wife. It was anonymous, but declared that unless he ceased his activities for the joint board he would be "fixed up." De Mola and his wife have five small children. It is unlikely that he will recover.

Even Murder.

"This ruthless policy that does not even stop at murder shows plainly how little the bureaucracy cares for the workers' rights or even for their lives," declared Louis Hyman, manager of the joint board. "This attack is typical of the methods that are being used by the international to maintain power against the wishes of the majority of the members."

LAW COMPELLING JUDGES TO GIVE FOURTH DEGREE OFFENDERS LIFE UPHELD

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—The so-called Saumas laws passed by the state legislature, which require that judges must give life sentences to fourth degree offenders, were upheld by the appellate division of the supreme court as constitutional. The laws deprive judges of discretion in such cases and fourth degree offenders must receive the maximum sentence, despite possible mitigating circumstances.

In the opinion of the court, written by Judge E. S. K. Merrell, it was declared that the Saumes laws were no more arbitrary than the law requiring the death penalty for murder.

The court daneuneed what it declared as "the tendeny of recent years toward laxity in law enforcement and leniency to criminals," and said the increase in crime justified the legislature in passing such laws. A warning was given to judges that they must not refuse to enforce the law because their discretion is removed.

WRATH AGAINST BRITISH GROWS AMONG CHINESE

Demonstrate at Hankow Against English

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, Jan. 5. — British authorities have agreed to withdraw British marines from the British concession at Hankow, realizing that the presence of the marines may provoke further trouble, it was reported here today. The guarding of the Hankow concession would be left to the Chinese.

Advises from Hankow say Centonese officials claim that more than forty major and minor casualties were suffered by Chinese as a result of Monday's and Tuesday's incidents at the border of the British concession when a demonstration before the concessions was dispersed by British sailors. The Chinese accuse the sailers of "British cruelty."

A Chinese mass meeting at Hankow has demanded that the government present a 73-hour ultimatum to the British consul, insisting upon the dismissal of volunteers and police and an apology from the British for the recent incidents, according to an evening news dispatch. If the ultimatum is rejected, a general strike will be called against the British.

• • •

Big Battle On.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 5. — The battle between the northern and the Cantonese forces in the vicinity of Hangchow has being extended in scope today, with neither side having won any decisive advantage.

General Sun Chuang Fanz, commander of the northern forces said he will leave Nanking for Hangchow to personally direct the attack against Fuyang. Messages from Chekiang province say General Chang Kai-shek generalissimo of the Cantonese forces is personally leading the southernere.

A hundred wounded reached Shanghai from the front today. Heavy artillery firing was reported along the Chientang river.

U. S. Ships at Hankow.

LONDON, Jan. 5. — United States gunboats have anchbred off Hankow, according to a central news dispatch. Reports that women and children have been ordered from Hankow are unconfirmed.

BAKERS JAILED FOR VIOLATING N. Y. INJUNCTION

10 Unionists Made Court Victims

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—Nine members of the Bakery and Confectionary Workers' Union, Local 87, have been sentenced to jail here by Judge James C. Cropsey of the supreme court charged with violating an injunction issued by the court to prevent the union picketing a number of bakeries in Brooklyn. The injunction, which resulted in the jailing of the unionists, was issued more than a year ago. All of the unionists are Jewish.

Must Pay Boss' Attorney.

Coupled with the jail sentences, the judge ordered the injunction victim to pay the fee of the attorney for the New York Jewish Bakery Owners' Association, which was $500, and assessed them a fine of $250.

9, 6, 4, Get 30 Days.

Barnett Heller and Meyer Pollack, business agent of the union, were sentenced to 20 days. Harry Green, Isaac Lefkowitz, Jacob Reivel, Wassil Bazaan, Abraham Schrage, Max Hudnick, and Eli Provda received 10-day sentences.

The case was initiated by the Probalsky Brothers' bakery at 332 Sandiker avenue, Brooklyn.

An appeal from the decision will be taken, Charles Solomon, counsel for the union, announced.

BULGARIAN OFFICIALS START YEAR BY MAKING THE USUAL ARRESTS

SOFIA, Bulgaria—Let no cynic say that the Bulgarian authorities do not possess a keen sense of humor.

In discussing the arrest of several persons alleged to be Communists, the officials report that it was not due to a new "plot" to overthrow the government, but merely "the usual arrests of Communists."

FORTRESS ONCE USED AS POLITICAL PRISON NOW PUBLIC MUSEUM

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SCHLUSSELBURG, U. S. S. R.—What for centuries was a chamber of horrors is now a public museum. The old Schlusselburg fortress will be opened to the public, that they may see the cells where political prisoners under the czars wore out their lives in solitary confinement.

Here will be seen also the stens cell in which Ivan VI was murdered on instructions from government authorities, after 20 years of imprisonment, when his very identity was unknown to his jailers.

NICARAGUA TO BE TAKEN LIKE PANAMA STEAL

Permanent Occupation Seen in Latest Move

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.— American military occupation of Nicaragua has been placed on a semi-permanent basis, which is plainly intended to become just as permanent as the American occupation of Panama.

This view was widely entertained by diplomats and other observers here today, following the White House announcement that American marines and bluejackets are necessary in Nicaragua to protect the canal and naval base rights which the United States purchased from Nicaragua in 1914 for $3,000,000.

Perpetual Occupation Seen.

The occupational forces are to be maintained, it was made clear by President Coolidge and Secretary of State Kellogg, despite the clamor in congress for their removal, and the widespread criticism of the policy which has appeared in the European and South American press.

Opponents of the administration's policy pointed out today that the Nicaraguan canal has not been started, and that the rights concerning it and the naval base are in perpetuity. From this they inferred that the right of American occupation to guard these treaty rights may similarly be construed as being in perpetuity.

A La Panama.

The American policy toward Nicaragua, it is pointed out, bears a striking resemblance to the American policy in Panama. Acquisition of canal rights was followed by occupation to guard the canal, and this has been followed more recently by the consummation of a treaty which makes Panama a virtual American dependency.

Representatives of the liberal revolutionists in Nicaragua denied today there was any necessity for American troops to protect the canal or naval base rights. These are not at issue in this present civil war raging between Dr. Juan B. Sacasa, who claims the constitutional presidency of the country, and Adolfo Diaz, who was elevated to the presidency of the republic by the state department.

Canal Not Involved.

"I do not know that the canal rights or the naval base concession are threatened by anybody," said Dr. T. S. Vaca, the Sacasa ambassador, today.

"There is no canal under construction and the marines have been landed at points on the Nicaraguan coast the farthest from the site of the projected canal.

Fight Bankers.

"The constitutional government of Dr. Sacasa has never questioned the rights granted by direct or indirect word or action. This matter has been entirely foreign to the issues at stake in the struggle to re-establish constitutional government in Nicaragua and free the country from an onerous and irresponsible bankers' rule.

"According to messages, the American marines in Puerto Cabezas end continue to hold war materiale belonging to the constitutional government, thereby obstructing military operations of its army."

Disarmed Liberals.

Puarto Cabezas is the liberals' capital. It was occupied by Admiral Julian Latimer last week, and the American commander proceeded to establish a censorship, and to disarm combatants.

Another Explosion on Boat Wipes Out Workers' Lives, Injuring Many

BALTIMORE, Jan. 5.—The French four-masted schooner Richelieu was a total loss today, three men are missing and believed dead, and 37 men are injured in Baltimore hospitals, the result of an explosion and fire aboard the vessel. All of the missing are Negro deckmen, and 31 of those injured are also Negroes.

Kellogg to Face Nicaragua Grill By Senate Body

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg is to be called before the senate's foreign relations committee to explain the administration's Nicaraguan policy, which has resulted in American military occupation of Nicaragua's principal ports and cities, it was announced today.

The decision to summon Kellogg was reached after a session of the committee this morning which lasted for an hour and a half, and at which the Wheeler resolution was discussed at some length. The resolution demands the immediate withdrawal of American marines and blue-jackets from Nicaragua on the ground that no American interests are endangered there.

To Conduct Hearings.

No action was taken on the Wheeler resolution, but a sub-committee consisting of Senators Shipstead (FL) of Minnesota, Pittman (D) of Nevada, and Willis (R) of Ohio, was appointed to conduct hearings on the Shipstead resolution, which would prohibit the state department from using troops to insure the collection of any bankers' loan to a foreign country, or from becoming a party to any agreement involving such private loans.

Today's meeting of the committee the first in weeks, was attended by fourteen members—attesting to the interest which the administration's Central American policy has aroused in senatorial minds.

Look Into Press Tales.

There was a full discussion, it was learned, of the whole aspect of the Coolidge-Kellogg policy in Central America, and among the matters dwelt upon was the legal right by Secretary Kellogg that the state department had in spite of any anti-Mexican stories in the press it was indicated that Secretary Kellog will be asked about this, and also at other times when he appears before the committee.

Kellogg will appear before the committee in executive session and be asked to divulge what evidence the department has of any conspiracy the allegedly "bolshevik" activities of Mexico in Nicaragua and Central America. The secretary declined to divulge this yesterday in response to the Lenroot-La Follette resolution, saying it was not compatible with the public interest."

We will send sample copies of The DAILY WORKER to your friends—

New Aid to Wall Street's Puppet.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The state department today lifted the embargo on arms and ammunition to the Diaz government in Nicaragua. This was regarded as definitely aligning the state department with Adolfo Diaz in his efforts to suppress the liberal revolution under Dr. Juan Sacasa.

COOLIDGE PRESS GAG FAILS

By LAURENCE TODD.
(Federated Press)

WASHINGTON— (FP)— President Coolidge has failed in two of the most striking moves of press-gagging ever attempted by a chief executive of the United States—his lecture to the press correspondents in Washington thru his spokesman, the duty of the newspaper men to support his foreign policies regardless of facts and principles that would jeopardize them.

Resentment at his cool assumption that the press of the country should give him a blank check for any deal he may wish to venture in Latin America or China or Europe has damed up in radical, liberal and conservative editorial offices alike. A crawl and some sort of apology from Coolidge is now anticipated.

On the afternoon before New Years day the press men went to the White House and were astonished to hear from the "spokesman" a long and involve discussion of their duty.

"Brass Check" Press Rebels.

Its told them it was their business to show the outside world that the Washington government has a united national sentiment behind its policies. This statement was made in face of a bitter controversy between the newspaper men and the state department over the department's denial of obvious facts as to the raid on Nicaragua, the censorship established there, and the receipt of protests against this raid. The press had not called Kellogg a liar, it had published the statements of both sides and left the public to choose between documentary evidence and Kellogg's word.

What made Coolidge the bolder in his position of a nationwide self-censorship by newspapers in order to hide his foreign aggression from the American people, was the defeat of January 1, with the going into effect of the Mexican land and oil laws, against which Kellogg had protested and threatened in vain.

The situation, forgetful how the press treated Woodrow Wilson when he sought to cover up his own autocratic acts, assumed that the big business press and its imitators would be glad to bulp bim eppress unfavorable news to the consequences of his imperialistic blunders. Instead, the New York papers came back at him with rebukes that give him a worse position than he has ever held before with the people.

Wheeler Introduces Resolution.

When congress opened on Jan. 3, after the holiday recess, Senator Wheeler of Montana offered a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the senate that the United States marines should be withdrawn from Nicaragua and our warships should be withdrawn from Nicaraguan ports."

In this resolution he recited the legal election of Solorzano and Sacasa as president and vice-president of Nicaragua in 1924, the constitutional succession of Sacasa to the presidency when Solorzano was forced by a military coup to resign, and the victim of Kellogg in recognizing as president Adolfo Diaz, who was never legally chosen.

Kellogg Gets "Busy."

He declared that there could not maintain a stable government without the aid of American warships and marines, that warships were ordered to Nicaraguan waters and Admiral Latimer under government orders landed marines and cut off the Liberals from their supply base and established a censorship against the constitutional government of Sacasa "which tended to hinder and obstruct the Liberal forces" in their fight in re-establish constitutional government. He declared further that no American lives or property have been endangered by the Liberal forces and that, under the circumstances, Latimer's actions have violated international law.

Kellogg, on the same day, cancelled his press interview for the week-end, "busy" to see the correspondents, and thereby cut off the public from any official information as to what he was doing in Nicaragua, Mexico, China or elsewhere.

MEXICAN RAID VICTIM BOUND OVER TO JURY

MELROSE PARK, Ill., Jan. 5. — Augustine Morales, arrested several weeks ago in a police raid upon the car homes of Mexican railroad workers here, the raid prompted by the death of an officer and a Mexican, was bound over to the grand jury charged with the murder of Officer Lyman Seahl.

When Morales as the sole witness, the coroner's jury charged him with the murder of the officer without a particle of evidance being presented. Regarding the death of the Mexican, Jess Sanchez, the jury found that he met his death at the hand of Officer Seahl. The verdict in this death was "justifiable homicide."

His interpreter was Mexican vice-consul Amador. The defense attorney is Mary Belle Spencer. It was shown that Morales was badly beaten up when he was arrested far from the scene of the shooting by officers.

KOLLONTAI PRESENTS CREDENTIALS TO THE MEXICAN GOVERNMENT

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY (By Mail).—Alexandria Kollontai, Soviet minister to Mexico, presented her credentials to the Mexican government on December 24. All members of the cabinet were present and the ceremony was witnessed by the largest gathering in years, even the spacious patio of the president's wing of the national palace being jammed with people unable to wedge into the reception salon. A special departure from precedent was made by the presence of a military band to greet the new representative, and President Calles sent flowers to the U. S. S. R. legation after the function, with a personal greeting to Kollontai.

In her address Kollontai pointed out the similarity of problems facing the two countries which serve to unite them with common aspirations—especially the problem of outside imperialism. She expressed the hope that Mexico and the U. S. S. R. would soon be able to establish direct commercial relations. The address of the Polpred closed with the statement that the U. S. S. R. esteemed Mexico for its courage in defending its independence.

President Calles, in replying, stated that "Mexico had long been subject to tyranny created and sustained by an arrogant and greedy capitalism," and that it thus had the sympathy and experience to understand Russia; "long and sad experience has taught us how praiseworthy and noble is the fierce of a nation that has spent of its blood and soul to make a conquest of liberty."

President Calles declared that the Mexican government is ready to give all its help and its full support to the representative of the U. S. S. R. in her task as fall of responsibility.

DEPORTATION OF VAJTAUER DUE TO LABOR ACTIVITY

Decree Calls for His Immediate Expulsion

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—The decree of the department of labor in the case of Emanuel Vajtauer, Czecho-Slovak radical, has been confirmed and he will be immediately daported from the United States.

Vajtauer was arrested for a deportation hearing in Chicago on April 4, 1924, as the result of an anonymous complaint, and was charged with "believing in or advising" the overthrow of the government of the United States.

"Evidence."

The first hearing, after a number of continuances, was had on the 14th of May, 1924, and the government introduced into evidence a pamphlet alleged to have been written by Vajtanar in his native language: "Revolution and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat," as well as a copy of the proceedings of the fourth congress of the Communist international, a volume which is to be found in a number of American libraries and on sale at various labor bookstores.

Question Entry.

The authorities introduced an act passed by congress which read that:

"Whenever any alien attempts to enter the United States the burden of proof shall be upon such alien to establish that he is not subject to exclusion under any provision of the immigration laws; and in any deportation proceeding against any alien the burden of proof shall be upon such alien to show that he entered the United States lawfully, and the time, place and manner of such entry into the United States."

Proved Legal Entry.

The attorney for the defense proved that Vajtauer had legally entered the country, and introduced the passport granted to him. But the authorities persisted in their efforts to have him deported. His work in the movement of the Czecho-Slovak workers of this country, to which he had applied himself from the moment of his arrival in the United States, was the real reason for the anxiety of the department of labor to exclude him from America.

The case was appealed, and the verdict just rendered means that Vajtaner will be immediately shipped out. This case is similar to the Surmenti case, which is now pending, and involves the right of political refugees enjoying asylum in this country, a tradition which the United States has held for scores of years. It is pointed out that the fate which awaits Surmenti is even worse than that of Vajtaner, for it is the intention of the department of labor, at the request of the Italian government, to send Surmenti back to Italy where certain imprisonment or death awaits him at the hands of the fascisti.

The Vajtauer case was defended by International Labor Defense, which is also working to prevent the deportation of Sormenti.

WILL ROGERS TRACES MOSCOW INFLUENCE IN RECENT EARTHQUAKES

Will Rogers, the cowboy humorist, says that the recent earthquake was the only thing we ever split 50-50 with Mexico, and that it is lucky for our neighboring state that she didn't cop off too much of it or she would have had a note from Kellogg. Will suggests that it is the influence of Moscow that caused the upheaval.

Insect by Traveling University of Philippine Hospitality Does Mischief

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA.—(By Mail.)— The Filipinos here are offended by the neglect of the courtesies which they had arranged for the so-called traveling university, which has just been here on the S. S. Ryndam. The faculty and students of the University of the Philippines had prepared a program including addresses, a banquet and other social festivities for the visitors. The program had received the approval of the local representative and the cabled acceptance of the party.

When the boat arrived, somewhat ahead of schedule, the party was met by a committee from the governor-general's headquarters and taken to the Malacanang Palace, where Admiral Kittell addressed them on the American occupation of the islands. Trips were arranged for the students by the Americans.

Only thirty of the visiting students attended the banquet at the University of the Philippines. The first American to speak at the table immediately offended by remarks directed ad against Philippine independence. The challenge was taken up by Filipino speakers who followed him. Altho an American had introduced the subject the Filipinos are being generally criticised for using the banquet for propaganda purposes.

The whole incident happened during the absence of Gen. Wood at Baguio. It is possible that the young students prefarred sightseeing to the banquet, but there is a feeling here that the whole thing was steered by the official group. The fact that five professors aboard the Ryndam express sympathy for the cause of Philippine independence does not counterbalance the harm done by the occurrence.

GLIMPSE INTO BOWERY OF NEW YORK REVEALS WHAT 'PROSPERITY' MEANS; THOUSANDS THERE ARE UNEMPLOYED

By FRED HARRIS, Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—Let Judge Gary of the steel trust declare a 40%, $200,000,000 dividend. Let the U. S. treasury pay a $150,000,000 refund of taxes. Let Secretary Davis of the U. S. department of labor proclaim high wages and little unemployment. Yes, let all the spokesmen of the U. S. chamber of commerce join in a unanimous chorus of prosperity. It don't mean a thing to the men on the Bowery, New York's center for the unemployed.

Where surplus labor is found, there are also employment agencies to exploit the dependency of the former. Kane's Employment Office for railroad Bowery center. Here assemble all the not eaten since yesterday." The the air. Everybody is waiting for laborers may be called a typical men who have no jobs, and who have time la 1 p. m. Prevailing anxiety is something. Finally it arrives. A big ten gallon kettle of "soup." The men file in line, pass by the kettle, get their ration and then crawl into some corner to devour their meal.

"Bean Soup."

"It ain't so bad." This from a man answering to the name of Jim. "Better than nothing. Only for this we'd be starving. Want some?"

It is referred to as "bean soup," but closar investigation proves it to be hot water with chunks of bread. Now and then a stray bean. It seems that the railroad companies furnish this free meal once a day. No doubt, to keep the slaves alive and ready to go to work whenever wanted. The discussion turns to work. A hot debate ensues about the prevailing rate of wages. Jim says it's 44½ cents an hour, his opponent, that 44 cents is top wage. Finally they agree that possibly, due to the slack season, the railroads cannot afford to pay more than 44 cents. But everybody expresses conviction that, as soon as work picks up again, that wages will be raised to its former peak, nearly 44½ cents an hour.

Kane's sell these laboring jobs for $3.00. The men are taken out to the "road," and usually work about ten hours a day.

"You see," says Jim, "more hours—more pay." Everybody agrees.

The hunkhouses? "Oh, well, we don't expect any hotels along the road, and besides, the rent is low."

Poor Food.

The food consists mostly of what is available. The charge for board is from $7 to $9 a week.

President Green of the A. F. of L. may not know that there are several million laborers who should be organized. He may never know that. The laborers are the lowest strata of capitalist society. When roused to a class consciousness they will prove the backbone of the proletarian army. There is a fertile field for organization work.

Kip Ought to Have Known What He Was Getting, Says Court

NEW YORK.—Leonard Kip Rhinelander still has a mulatto wife, under a decision of the appellate division of the supreme court, which upholds the lower court in denying him an annulment of his marriage to Alice Beatrice Jones, the daughter of a coachman.

The court holds that the wealthy young man had ample opportunity before his marriage to learn that his intended bride had colored blood.

AMERICANS AND FRENCH DECLARE WAR AGAINST BRITISH TIRE MAKERS

LONDON.—British manufacturers of automobile tires are suffering from a devastating competition with American and French companies. The common shares in the Dunlop company have shrunk in value to the extent of $25,000,000.

The British claim that the French are taking advantage of the rate of exchange to dump tires onto the British market, while they charge the Americans with an outright mave to break the monopoly which Britain practically now possesses in the supply of raw rubber.

HONOR MEMORY OF LENIN HERE ON JANUARY 23

Third Great Meeting at Ashland Auditorium

When workers of Chicago gather at Ashland Auditorium on Jan. 23 it will be the third time they have met to commemorate the memory of Nicolai Lenin, great leader and teacher of the revolutionary workers the world over. It was on Jan. 23, 1924 that Lenin passed away and deprived the workers and peasants of Russia of the guiding hand that had directed the revolution to victory and to its consolidation into the Soviet state, now in its ninth year.

Both previous memorials in Chicago have been worthy tributes to the memory of the revered leader. The Workers (Communist) Party that has sponsored the memorials is planning for quite as notable a gathering this year. Ashland Auditorium seats four thousand people. The program is large and varied.

A feature of the meeting will be a mass recitation, "Strike," written by Michael Gold, a fitting number for a memorial to human whose teachings and activities were the embodiment of working class struggle. Nationally prominent speakers will address the meetings and further additions to the program will be announced in due course.

NEW YORK LABOR TO PACK MADISON SQUARE GARDEN AT LENIN MEMORIAL

NEW YORK.—The third anniversary of the death of the greatest leader of the working class, Nicolai Lenin, will be commemorated at a memorial meeting at the Madison Square Gardan, 50th street and Eighth avenue, on Saturday evening, January 28, at 8 p. m.

The occasion will be used not only to demand the racognition of Soviet Russia but also to welcome The DAILY WORKER, the only English labor daily in the United States, to New York.

It is expected that the new Garden, seating 20,000, will be crowded to capacity. The progressive labor movement of New York is preparing to make the Lenin memorial meeting a rousing demonstration for militant working class policies, and in support of an English labor daily.

Among the speakers scheduled to address the meeting are C. E. Ruthenberg, William Z. Foster, Moissaye J. Olgin and J. Louis Engdahl.

An excellent musical program has been arranged, including such eminent artists as Mischa Mishakoff, concert master of the New York Symphony Orchestra; Ivan Volikanoff, chief tenor of the Moscow Art Theater Musical Studio, and others.

Tickets are 50 cents, 75 cents and $1. There are only 2,000 seats at $1 and 3,000 at 75 cents. Workers are urged to get their tickets in advance at the office of the Freiheit, 30 Union Square; Workers Party headquarters, 108 East 14th street; Jimgale Hizgins' Book Shop, 127 University place and all party papers.

SOVIET COURT ADOPTS UNIQUE WAY TO SETTLE INHERITANCE QUESTION

MOSCOW.—Isadora Duncan has been made the arbiter of the fortunes of the woman who supplanted her in the affections of Serge Esenin, the eccentric poet, who married the American dancer and then left her after a hectic married life.

The Soviet courts have been baffled in their efforts to settle the estate of Esenin, who was a much married poet and whose various wives have made claims for an inheritance. Now the courts have decided that when Esenin committed suicide he was either the husband of Isadora Duncan or of Sophia Tolstoy, granddaughter of the famous novelist, and thus his estate should go to one of them. There is still some doubt, however, whether Serge had actually divorced Isadora before he married Sophia.

The courts have decided to write to Isadora Duncan in Paris and ask her to state whether she was divorced from Esenin at the time of his death. If she says she was, then Esenin's estate will go to Sophia. If Isadora denies the divorce then she is the legal legatee.

"Go and Find Out," Says Jury Fixer to Federal Government

Contempt of court is the weapon which the federal government will turn against those involved in the charges of trying to fix the jury in the Ilolfman-Druggan-Lake jail case. This will cover the attempted fixing as well as any successful result which may later be uncovered. It will bring the defendants before Federal Judge Louis Fitzhenry on a contempt charge. Later, if indicted, they will have to face a jury on a charge of conspiracy.

Plunkett still refuses to reveal who was putting up the money which he is charged with having offered a deputy marshal to get on the jury. He says jauntily: "You are all ace investigators. Go out and find who was putting up the dough."

And that is now the big question the authorities are trying to answer. Who was furnishing the corruption fund?

Salvation Army Gets Its Street Collection Permit; I. L. D. Denied

SEATTLE, Jan. 5.—(FP)— Mayor Bertha Landis refused the request of the International Labor Defense to be allowed to station collectors on the downtown corners to receive donations for the special Christmas fund for a cash pressing for the Centralia prisoners at Walla Walla.

The fact that the Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America were given permission to cover all downtown corners did not open the way for the I. L. D. though his matter was called to the attention of the mayor.

Lowden, the Capitalist, Thinks Production Cost Good Enough for Farmers

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

MUCH of the war that now rages about the question of farm relief centers on the question of how much the farmer should receive for the products of the fields he tills.

The capitalists and their politicians are very anxious that dollars invested in industry should receive "an adequate return," at least six per cent guaranteed in the case of railroads, for instance.

The farmers are somewhat amazed that congress does not take a similar attitude toward them. The whole drive behind farm relief legislation is to win some such guarantee for the farmar. The Coolidge-Mellon administration, however, declares such legislation to ha "economically unsound" and it is not adopted.

Frank O. Lowden, the Illinois multi-millionaire who parades as "a friend of the farmer," states the case as follows:

"It is clear that the great agricultural plant of America has been running down at a dangerous pace. . . . If the farmar does not receive an adequate price he will finally cease to produce. No one, whether manufacturer or farmer, can go on indefinitely producing unless he receives at least the cost of production for the thing he sells. The result will be fewer farmers. This result is already in evidence. A raport recently issued by the department of agriculture states that the farm population of the United States was reduced by almost a half million during the last year."

Then Lowden becomes a little clearer as to where he stands on the question of farmers' relief by discussing the stabilization of prices as follows:

"We should find some means for stabilizing prices of farm products. This price of a commodity can be stabilized only at a point near the cost of production. For if the price continues below cost of production, a sufficient number of producers will fail, production will fall below the needed requirements, and prices will rise. And if an attempt is made to stabilize the price above the cost of production plus a reasonable profit, capital less profitably employed elsewhere will flow into the production of that particular article, the supply will exceed the needed requirements, and prices will fall.

"Therefore, it follows, that if we shall succeed in stabilizing farm prices it will have to be done at a point covering cost of production with sufficient profit to induce the farmers to go on producing."

This is the Mr. Lowden, who draws huge dividends from the Pullman company, but never fears that the profits are too high, attracting excessive capital into the production of sleeping cars and other products of the car-building industry, resulting in an overproduction. No corporation will admit that its profits are too high.

• • •

While the farm crisis was sweeping into nearly all sections of the nation last summer, the Pullman company showed a profit after all deductions, of $14,256,611 for the year ended July 31, 1926, which represents a return of 26 per cent on capital invested. This was a gain of $500,000 over the previous year's profits. Farmers should be vitally interested in the profits taken during the period since the war, the period of deflation for agriculture, by Lowden's Pullman company. Here they are:

| Year | Profit | Per cent ital invested |
|---|---|---|
| 1920 | $12,913,509.00 | 36.4% |
| 1921 | 6,120,934.00 | 12.5% |
| 1922 | 4,271,767.00 | 7.7% |
| 1923 | 13,216,336.00 | 24.0% |
| 1924 | 13,603,063.00 | 24.7% |
| 1925 | 13,771,976.00 | 25.0% |
| 1926 | 14,256,611.00 | 26.0% |

This is approximately $80,000,000 taken in profits, with no mention of the hungry "reserve funds." This is wealth taken by the "saviour" of the farmers who talks about stabilizing farm prices somewhere near the cost of production."

But the farmer must be kept in his place. He is not considered a member of the capitalist group, altho he is coddled by capitalist propaganda into harboring that belief. Capitalism, whether the farmer likes it or not, places him in the category of wage slave on the land. The figures themselves prove that. The estimated farm population on January 1, 1925, was 31,124,000. Of these approximately 10,000,000 were gainfully employed. Out of these 10,000,000 we find that 4,000,000 are merely farm workers, receiving miserable wages; 2,000,000 tenant farmers, leading a precarious existance; 2,000,000 of mortgaged farmers, on the brink of becoming tenants, with only 1,000,000 so-called "well-to-do" farmers, the American Kulak. Yet it is this American Kulak section, constituting one-tenth of the farm population, that has almost entirely dominated the thinking and the actions of the remaining ten-tenths.

But the condition is changing, the farming masses are becoming restless, and farm relief becomes one of the dominant issues before congress.

Mr. Lowden is not inconsistent in his attitude toward the wage workers at the Pullman plant in Chicago, and his remedy for the "farm problem," which acts forth his attitude toward land workers. The Pullman corporation, thru years of bitter war against labor, has kept wages down to the bitter level of merely providing the absolute necessaries to satisfy the requirements of the workers. The historic strike of 1893 was ruthlessly suppressed. The recent struggle in the Pullman plant, against a reduction in wages, was also defeated. "Company houses" and "company stores," with every other method practiced by the exploiter, has been brought into play in "Pullman," the "company town," named after the first George M. Pullman, one of Chicago's first great capitalists. The wages of the Pullman worker have truly been the minimum required to reproduce his labor power.

Lowden, the capitalist "friend" of the farmer, applies the same theory to the land workers that the Pullman corporation applies to wage labor, "to stabilize prices of farm products . . . at a point near the cost of production."

For the 4,000,000 farm workers this means just enough in wages, food and shelter to prevent too many of them going off to the city and hunting jobs in industry.

For the 2,000,000 tenant farmers it means just enough to keep these workers, with their families, continually hunting some landlord, begging the privilege to raise corn, cotton, wheat or some other product as a means of fighting off starvation.

It will be noticed that these 7,000,000 of "failing employed" on the land possess no land of their own, nor any of the means of cultivating the land. This is provided by the employer. Yet these constitute seventy-five of the farm working population.

The 2,000,000 mortgaged farmers are only a step removed from the 7,000,000 actually "landless." For them the estimated three per cent farm income does not meet the six per cent mortgage interest that dangles a hangman's noose above their heads.

It is of these 9,000,000 that George W. Norris, republican United States senator from Nebraska, declares:

"The farmer works harder, lives more economically and has fewer of the ordinary pleasures of life than any other class of our citizenship. . . . An honest civilization should demand that those who toil the most and the longest hours to supply the world with the necessities of human existence should have at least a fair return for their labors."

• • •

But capitalism is a disbonest civilisation, robbing the many in order to gorge the treasure chests of the few.

The farm relief legislation of the capitalist political parties, with its Lowden theory of meeting "the cost of production," constitutes merely a ball and chain to keep the 9,000,000 enslaved to the 1,000,000 well-to-do farmers, most of them tenants for landlords, to the bankers, the food mergers, the farm implement combines, the railroads and other monopoly interests in the means of production.

Against that condition the exploited farmers must rally with the wage workers in industry for the working class struggle against the capitalist overlords.

COST OF FOOLING POLITICAL DUBS LEAVES DEFICIT

Both Parties Are Flat in Purse

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5. — Both the republican and democratic national committees sustained huge deficits in 1926, it was disclosed in statements filed with the clerks of the house today.

Tales told early last fall by campaign fund collectors that the senatorial "slush fund" investigation had frightened many of the regular contributors and made collections meager, apparently were borne out in the reports.

The republican committee spent $671,342.66 in 1926 while it collected from contributors but $434,511.79, and a loan of $125,000, according to the statement of William V. Hodges, national treasurer. The net deficit for the year was shown to be $236,830.87.

While the democratic committee failed either to collect or spend as much as the republicans, it ended the year with $166,992.95 in unpaid bills and but $8,529.95 to meet them. James W. Gerard, national treasurer, however, reported progress in a special campaign to wipe out a long-standing committee debt.

Standard Oil Grease Wheels.

John D. Rockefeller Sr., put $10,000 into the G. O. P. fund on Nov. 4, just after the fall election, while John D. Rockefeller Jr., also was listed as a contributor of $10,000.

Other heavy backers of the republican campaign, whose names had not been reported in the pre-campaign statements, included:

Pennsylvania republican committee, $25,000.

William Nelson Cromwell, $10,000; Clarence H. Mackey, $5,000; J. J. Raskob, $5,000; Chester A. Braman, $2,500; Charles M. Schwab, $2,500; Eugene Grace, $2,500; T. C. Dupont, $2,000; Francis D. Barstow, A. M. Anderson and Stephen Baker, all of New York, $1,000 each; Edsel B. Ford, and Charles B. Warran, of Detroit, $1,000 each; E. W. Backus, T. B. Walker, E. L. Carpenter, R. M. Bennett and John Crosby and associates, all of Minnesota, $1,500 each; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Davison, Bay City, Mich., $1,000.

The democratic committee collected $95,000 to be used solely for retiring obligations, it was said by New York Trust company. Contributors to this fund include:

Ryan Backs Democrats.

Thomas F. Ryan; $25,000; Ralph Pulitzer, $10,000; John Jacob Astor, $5,000; H. H. Lehman, $3,000; Thomas L. Chadburne, $5,000; Norman W. Davis, $6,500; Percy S. Straus, $5,000, all of New York; W. L. Clayton, $15,000; Jesse H. Jones, $5,000; John Henry Kirby, $5,000; R. S. Sterling, $2,500; W. S. Farish, $2,000, all of Houston, Texas; Charles H. Greathouse, Indianapolis, $5,000; William A. Julian, Cincinnati, $1,000; Missouri state democratic committee, $2,000.

Indebtedness reported by the democratic committee included $124,200 to the New York Trust company; $5,500 to the New York Times; $21,116.60 to the Postal Telegraph company at New York and $12,967.45 to the Western Union Telegraph company at Baltimore.

CANTON GIVES SOVIET GREAT DEMONSTRATION

100,000 Attended 9th Anniversary Fete

The following account of the celebration of the Ninth Anniversary of the Russian revolution held in Canton under the auspices of the Kuomintang Party and various other groups, appeared in the "Canton Gazette," the official organ of both the Kuomintang Party and the Kuomintang government of China. The DAILY WORKER reprints it here to show the bonds of sympathy that exist between the revolutionary masses of China and the liharated workers and peasants of Russia.

* * *

CANTON, Nov. 12.—(By Mail.)—"Long live the Russian revolution."

"Long live the Chinese revolution."

"Long live the Russo-Chinese Alliance."

That was the enthusiastic cry of a hundred thousand people, who packed the drill-ground of the Chungshan University on Sunday. There were three great platforms decorated with the portraits of Lenin and of Dr. Sun, and with numberless Soviet and Kuomintang flags. Before noon, all Cantonese organizations were there. Each had its banners, hand scrolls of greetings for the "October" revolution, watchwords, and thousands and thousands of handbills.

Many Speeches.

Workers, peasants, soldiers, students, boy scouts, women organizations, sailors, police, surrounded the platforms. Men and women representatives of the Russian colony in Canton, of the Kuomintang, of the labor unions, of the International Association of the Oppressed Peoples, of merchant organizations, of women leagues, etc., delivered speeches, repeatedly interrupted by cheers.

Lenin and Sun Yat Sen.

The general theme was: After the death of Lenin, leader of the Russian revolution, international reactionaries thought that the revolution died with him. After the death of Dr. Sun, leader of the Chinese National Revolution, imperialists and counter-revolutionists were overjoyed, thinking that the National Emancipation movement was down and out.

Stand Firm.

Fortunately, they were deceived in both cases. Lenin died, but the Russian masses stood firm with the unflinching determination to carry on the task left behind by the great leader. Dr. Sun is gone, but the Chinese revolutionists united their efforts to accomplish the work commenced by him. Tremendous efforts have been made in Russia and in China; in the former, to consolidate a revolution; in the latter, to continue one. In both countries, revolution goes ahead, to the dismay of the imperialists!

Evening Banquet.

A great banquet offered by the "Committee of Various Classes of Canton People ffr the Celebration of the 'October' revolution," was attended Sunday evening by members of the Russian colony in Canton, and several hundred representatives of Cantonese organisations at the Central Hall of the Kuomintang headquarters, which was brightly illuminated and decked with flags and flowers.

Toasts were exchanged and in spite of the great number of the guests, the atmosphere had nothing "ceremonial" affected, and official about it. Tongues: concluded his speech by suggesting that next year, this celebration should be held in Peking. His suggestion was greated with cheers.

Lecture at School.

A soiree, with a lecture about the "October" revolution, a moving picture, Russian and Chinese ballet, was held at the Chungshan University after the banquet. The hall was crowded and a great number could enter. The afternoon meeting approved the wording of a wire of greeting to be sent to Russia.

SHANGHAI WORKERS SWEAR BY UNIONS

By ANNA ROCHESTER.

Organize Under Difficulties

SHANGHAI, China.—(FP)— About 70% of the workers in Shanghai are now enrolled in labor unions. Union headquarters are all closed under police seal and leaders are closely watched. Li Hwa, a labor leader, was executed a few weeks ago without trial. In spite of the friction between the foreign and the reactionary Chinese authorities in Shanghai, the police and secret service of the International Settlement and of the Chinese city apparently work in effective harmony against labor.

On the other hand, the labor unions are all alive to the Chinese nationalist issues. Every labor man with whom we talked emphasized the fact that the Chinese workers are united in wanting the unequal treaties revised.

The general strike which followed immediately on the shooting of students and others May 30 1925, was primarily anti-foreign, but during the last 16 months the straight industrial issues have come more to the front. Since the general strike, about 150 strikes have occurred in Shanghai alone, involving almost 200,000 workers. Conditions of work are not worse in foreign-owned mills than in Chinese mills. It does happen, however, that the only silk filature near Shanghai, in which the cocoons are taken from the boiling water not by the hands of girls and children but by machinery, and the only factory in Shanghai which has come to anything like recognition of the union, are both under Chinese auspices.

In spite of police interference, labor organization work continues underground. With the present steady increase in the price of rice the demand for higher wages will be more insistent.

Welfare Work Can't Stop Them

SHANGHAI, China. —(FP)— Company welfare work does not prevent the Chinese workers from organizing their own labor union. The Commercial Press of Shanghai, the largest printing and publishing house in China, with branches in all the principal cities, spent at its central plant in Shanghai nearly three years ago about $75,000 American money for a spacious club building with tennis courts and playgrounds for employes and their families. Certain privileges were open to all employes without payment, and three classes of membership with graded additional privileges were set up for fees of 50c to $2.50 per year.

The Commercial Press is a Chinese-owned and Chinese-managed concern, but in the general disturbances after May 30 1925 the workers—including printers, office workers and laborers—organised a union and presented demands for higher wages and shorter hours. After a strike which tied up the plant, the company yielded in part to the demands of the union and the workers returned to the plant.

But 200 men who had been active in organizing and striking were dismissed. The entire body walked out again Dec. 25, demanding reinstatement of their leaders. Gen. Sun Chuan Fang supplied troops to guard the plant (which is situated in the Chinese city) but when a clash occurred in which 40 strikers were injured and 70 were arrested, the management decided this was going too far and agreed to deal with the union.

The plant is now working an 8½ hour day, with one and a half for overtime and a maximum day of 11 hours. The printers' wages average even in this plant only $10 American money per month. Women workers are on an equality with men workers within the union. The union—as distinct from the welfare clubs—publishes a small monthly paper. It also with some financial assistance from the company, conducts evening classes.

The Commercial Press workers form the largest single unit in the Printers union of Shanghai, which claims 13,-850 members. No other printing plant has yet been brought by the union to this standard of wages and hours.

Zinc Workers on Strike.

LANGELOTH, Pa.—The workers of the American Zinc & Chemical Co. of this place are on strike, after the company had refused to meet the men to adjust grievances.

COMPROMISE ON RADIO CONTROL APPEARS LIKELY

Hoover to Be Stripped of Power

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—A compromise radio bill, creating a federal commission with supervisory powers over the air and stripping Secretary of Commerce Hoover of most of his present authority, loomed today as the probable outcome of the negotiations between house and senate conferees on radio legislation.

As both the White bill, passed by the house, and the Dill bill, enacted by the senate, contained provisions creating a commission, it was said this phase of the legislation was certain to be retained. The house provision, however, would make the commission an appeal board while the senate proviso would give the commission all authority over radio. The compromise probably will make the commission a regulatory body while giving the secretary of commerce power to carry out its decisions.

Demand Hands Off China

By W. FRANCIS AHERN.

SYDNEY—(FP)—The Labor Council of New South Wales has issued another manifesto demanding Hands Off China. The manifesto reviews the exploitation of the Chinese workers, particularly women and young children, by British, American, Japanese and French factory capitalists and shows how the oppressed Chinese, through their unions, are opposing the terrible destruction of their child life and the ruthless oppression by the capitalist nations. The manifesto concludes:

"We call upon all workers to object to the shedding of working-class blood to gat cheap labor in China, and we call upon them not only to refuse to go to China but to as far as possible prevent, by all lawful means, anyone else going. We earnestly request them to join with us in saying Hands Off China. Not a man or a gun to assist the foreign capitalists to get cheap labor in China."

AMERICAN FINANCIERS ON BOARD OF JAPANESE ELECTRIC BOND COMPANY

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK—Americans are participating in the formation of the Japanese Electric Bond & Share Co., with a capitalization of $5,000,000, it is announced here. The company will control electric utilities throughout the empire.

While American names appear on the board of directors, including S. Z. Mitchell, president of the Electric Bond & Share Co., it is claimed that their investment is nominal and that they are wanted by the Japanese largely to act in an advisory capacity.

The Japanese, with some show of astuteness, evidently believe that American financiers can tell them how to grab and keep the control of electrical energy.

Default in Payment of Bonds Complicates City Traction Snarl

Another knot was tied in the traction tangle when it was discovered that the Chicago City & Connecting Railway Co. had defaulted in paying the principal of its bonds, which had fallen due. This came just as the traction committee of the city council was threatening a "showdown" in its dealing with the surface lines.

President Leonard A. Busby of the Surface Lines says no importance is to be attached to the default in principal, as the road will continue to keep up the interest payments. He adds that 70 per cent of the bonds are in the hands of a protective committee. A wag around the city hall remarks that it is about time the transportation committee of the council put its affairs in the hands of a similar committee.

PAINT '26 WITH GLOOM; BRITAIN GLAD IT'S GONE

Locarno, U. S. Hatred and China 'Outstanding'

LONDON, Jan. 5.—British government officials and the capitalist press in reviews of 1926 were strikingly unanimous in expressing gladness that the year has gone. Practically every public statement made on New Year's Day was filled with expressions bemoaning the fate of the British empire in 1926; saw had any hope for a better year in 1927.

Baldwin Gloomy.

"We have left behind us a year of unhappy discord and industrial depression," said Premier Baldwin. "Let us resolve for 1927 to repair the damage and to restore our national prosperity in a spirit of comradeship and good will," he said.

Ramsay MacDonald joined the chorus. He called 1926 a "terrible year," and said that "most people will be glad to get rid of it. We all hope there will be more sanity and a little more businesslike genius in the conduct of the nation's affairs in 1927."

The financial outlook for England in 1927 is not any brighter than it was in 1926, the government announced. It is said there is a deficit of 32,-552,000 pounds more than the previous year. The coal strike was blame for most of the deficit.

"Outstanding" Events.

Political observers here declare there are three outstanding situations and events that stand out on the 1926 horizon. One is the Locarno pact, which resulted in the bringing of Germany back into the "fold," increased hatred of the United States, being expressed in practically every European nation, and the nervousness in official circles because of the successes of the revolutionists in China. Locarno is pointed to with much pride by the European statesmen. The other two "outstanding" developments are not sources of jubilation.

Hatred of America is increasing because of the United States' stand on war debts and because it has held aloof from international situations politically.

Obregon Will Talk to American People

MEXICO CITY.—The American people will have an opportunity of hearing the Mexican side of present issues when former President Obregon goes on his tour of the United States. He will stress the opinion held in Latin-American countries that they have the right to solve their own problems without dictation from the outside.

Obregon's itinerary will include Chicago, New York, and Washington.

Free Dental Clinic to Commemorate Lenin

MOSCOW.—As a memorial to Lenin, the dentists in the Soviet have opened a clinic in the town of Gorki, in the Moscow province, where Lenin died. Here treatment at cost or without charge will be given.

This results from a decision taken at the dentists' convention last year, when they voted down a suggestion to place a wreath each year on the great leader's tomb, deciding instead to honor his memory in a more practical way.

Brazilian Rebels Disarmed.

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay. — About 400 Brazilian rebels who crossed into Uruguay have been disarmed by the Uruguay authorities. The Brazilian government claims that in fighting along the Carrera river they have completely routed the rebels, while revolutionary leaders claim not to have participated at all in the fighting there.

Dispatches of a few days ago, reported a revolutionary movement in the Brazilian state of Rio Grande do Sul, which is directly north of Uruguay.

"Americanization" in Great Britain and in Germany

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

A "CIVIC FEDERATION" patterned on the American model seems to be planned for Great Britain as part of the general process of "Americanization" of industry which the ruling class is initiating now that the coal miners have been temporarily defeated. As a matter of fact, the war on the miners is part of the "Americanization" process.

A London dispatch dated Jan. 2, sent out by the Associated Press, tells of a "get-together" dinner in the best style of American boostordom, held in the home of Lord Winborne, former lord lieutenant of Ireland. This dinner was attended by Philip Snowden, right wing labor party leader, several officials of the Trade Union Congress, Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer in the present tory government, and Lord D'Abernon, former ambassador to Germany.

THE dispatch says:

"The primary object of the dinner, concerning which much reserve is observed, was to listen to a lecture on Germany's industrial relations and schemes for industrial cooperation, but is reported that the FEELING OF GOOD-FELLOWSHIP AMONG THE DINERS DEVELOPED 50 SATISFACTORILY . . . that there is the possibility of the ESTABLISHMENT IN THE NEAR FUTURE OF AN ORGANIZATION COMPRISING REPRESENTATIVES OF LABOR AND EMPLOYERS.

Its object will be to discuss labor and wage conditions, PREVENT DISPUTES, AND THUS SECURE GREATER STABILITY FOR BRITISH INDUSTRIES. (Emphasis mine.)

IT is well known that German capitalists have been experimenting with "Americanization" schemes for their industry and a number of "labor" missions, studying efficiency methods here, have toured the country and have been officially welcomed by A. F. of L. leaders. German industry, tied to the chariot of American finance-capital, is "rationalizing" its methods, which, in plain English, means placing all the burden of rebuilding industry and making it profitable upon the working masses, the lower sections of the middle class and the poor farmers.

THE effects of this policy in Germany are seen in two ways in a report of the National Congress of Working People, attended by 2,000 delegates, in session from Dec. 3 to 5. Writing of this congress, as event of tremendous significance for the labor and revolutionary movement of Europe, Fritz Ruck says in Number 37 of the International Press Correspondence:

It damonstrated the existence of a broad mass movement in Germany fed from the most various sources, which, however, have a common origin: intensified exploitation and oppression of the masses by large capital, growing pauperization of ever widening circles, who are beginning to combine for organized resistance.

THE paper read by Fritz Heckert, the main line of which was accepted by the congress with but three dissenting votes, depicted the present situation of the workers, the small peasants and the working middle class and brought evidence to the effect that the permanent deterioration of the standard of living of the working classes was a necessary condition for the rationalization of large capital, that the latter would involve a new danger of imperialist wars and that fresh strengthening of German imperialism would mean nothing more than the advance of reaction in all fields.

WE see then that "to secure greater stability" for industry, as the united front of tory capitalists and imperialist labor agents is trying to do, involves an attack on the living standards of the masses all along the line and brings into being a mass movement in opposition to it of a far broader character than any yet seen except in actual periods of revolutionary struggles.

The officialdom of the British labor party and Trades Union Congress, together with their capitalist pals, are greatly interested in the "Americanization" process in Germany. Having delivered a blow to the labor movement by the betrayal of the general strike and the defeat of the miners, it seems to them that nothing stands in the way of "stability"—the capitalist word for a condition in which the ruling class is strong and the working class organizations weak—except a consolidation of the forces which made the previous betrayals possible.

WHILE the capitalists and labor officialdom are organizing to "Americanize" Great Britain, with the recent improvements made by German capitalism, the Communist Party and the national minority movement, are telling the British masses of the danger and organizing them for struggle.

We shall see soon in Great Britain, in answer to the new phase of the drive against the working class, of which the Wimborne "get-together" dinner was the beginning, a great mass movement of protest with but a single purpose—that of protecting the workers by abolishing capitalism.

THE concluding paragraph of the report of the National Congress of Working People in Berlin can serve alike as a challenge to British capitalism and an inspiration for the British working class:

The congress was a flaring beacon acting as a signal to the German working class that it should, in alliance with the small peasants and the working middle classes, take up and carry thru with renewed energy the fight against the danger of war, capitalist rationalization and pauperization. Even the representatives of the middle class and the small peasants acknowledged without reservations that THE LEADERSHIP IN THIS FIGHT IS IN THE HANDS OF THE INDUSTRIAL PROLETARIAT. The congress created the preliminary conditions for a mighty FIGHTING BLOC OF ALL THE WORKERS IN GERMANY. It was a tremendous advance along the path of gathering together the masses in order to defeat capitalism and establish socialism. (Emphasis in original.)

THE absence of any considerable peasantry in Great Britain and the more favorable position of the labor union movement, together with the complete ruin of hundreds of thousands of the middle class, should make easier the task of rallying all sections exploited by capitalism.

The answer to the united front of the capitalists and labor officialdom in a British united federation will be a united front of the trade unions, the exploited farmers and the ruined sections of the middle class.

"Americanization" does not work in countries which have lost or are losing their imperialist character. Even in America it is working with much creaking and groaning and it works less smoothly as larger and larger masses of workers discover that the promissory notes issued by imperialism are paid only to a minority of the working class.

Workers (Communist) Party

Do We Believe in Parliamentary Action?

By ANTHONY BIMBA.

MANY comrades will say: "It's a foolish question. Of course we do. Doesn't the Communist International state definitely that Communists must participate in the parliamentary action? Do we not clearly state in the program of the Workers (Communist) Party that we must participate in the parliamentary action? More than that: Didn't we participate in the presidential elections of 1924 or in the congressional elections of 1926?"
